8. In addition to the four advertisements detailed in finding 7, supra, (the advertisements apparently relied on by counsel supporting the complaint in drafting the specifications of the complaint), the record contains 45 other advertisements. Commission Exhibit 1 through CX 40 were published in the Washington Post during the period Nov. 15, 1970, through Nov. 15, 1971, the latter date being the day on which respondent Charles Snyder made return on a subpoena at the investigational hearing in this matter. Dates of publication are noted on CX 1 through CX 28. CX 29 through 40 appear to be substantially similar in content, but because the date of publication is not known, these advertisements are of little relative additional value.[3] CX 41 through 48 are Hollywood advertisements published from Feb. 2, 1972, through Dec. 2, 1972, and RX 41 was disseminated on Dec. 15, 1973 (Tr. 369). A review of CXs 1-28 and CXs 41-48 demonstrates that from about May 1971 until March 1972, respondents have often represented that they are conducting a "WAREHOUSE SALE," and that in many instances the sale is being conducted at their stores as well as at the warehouse (see CXs 1-6, 10-12, 24, 27, 42). Indeed until August 1971, respondents listed their stores as well as the Beltsville facility under the general heading "WAREHOUSE LOCATIONS" (see CXs 1-8, 12-14). Also respondents used such other sale descriptions as "LABOR DAY WAREHOUSE SALE" (CX 21), "ANNIVERSARY SPECIALS" (CX 22), and "WAREHOUSE AND STORE-WIDE END-OF-THE-MONTH SALE" (CX 27).

Most of Hollywood's advertising was placed in the classified section of the Washington Post. Several display advertisements that would appear in other sections of the paper, are CXs 28 and 43. (see Tr. 28-31)

In a few instances respondents used comparative pricing representations relating to remnants (see CXs 15, 16, 18, 19), and on at least two occasions used comparative pricing for carpet products other than remnants (see CXs 18, 19).

On several occasions respondents represented savings as percentages (50 to 70 percent - CX 34; 40 percent to 70 percent - CX 35; 20 percent - CXs 41, 48). However, usually respondents merely stated a price for a particular rug or groups of rugs, remnant or group of remnants (e.g. from $11 each up - see CXs 5, 9, 11) or for carpeting, quoted per square yard.

Also a review of the dated exhibits demonstrates that in 14 instances the term "acrylic" was used (CXs 7, 12, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 27, 28, 42, 43, 44, 46, 47) whereas in only 5 instances was the term "acrilan" used (CXs 1, 6, 21, 23, 24). In some instances respondents noted that certain carpeting had "foam backing" (CX 29) or "double jute back" (see CX 25).

9. There are three general price levels at which respondents (and for that matter any retailer) purchase carpeting from a manufacturer: the price for a full roll of carpeting, the price for a particular size of carpeting, and the price for remnants (Tr. 112). The principal price is called the "roll price," that is the base price at which carpeting may be bought in a complete roll (Tr. 294). This price is quoted in terms of yards, meaning square yards. A roll usually consists of carpeting in a standard width of 12 or 15 feet (4 or 5 yards) and in lengths varying from 50 feet to 400 feet (Tr. 59). The differences in length are controlled by the variances in the manufacturing process usually relating to the amount of material available from the same dye lot or lots (Tr. 42, 61, 88). Manufacturers afforded quantity discounts on large purchases of rolls (Tr. 96, 280, 293-294).

When respondents purchased a roll of carpeting they either sold to the customer from a display sample located in the retail stores or from the customer's observation of the roll itself which was stored at the Beltsville facility (Tr. 104-105).[4] The retail price for such carpeting is usually based on a 40 to 42 percent markup above respondents' cost for said carpeting (Tr. 53, 55, 118; but see Tr. 313-316).

10. In those circumstances where respondents do not have a roll of the particular color or style of carpeting desired by the consumer they may, selling from samples, order a designated quantity (less than a roll) from the manufacturer (Tr. 41-42). This order is called a "cut order" (Tr. 42, 294). Usually the manufacturer's "cut order" price to respondent (or any other retailer) is 18 to 20 percent higher than the roll price for the same carpeting (Tr. 57, 91A, 256, 305). Manufacturers generally state their "cut order" and roll price in their published price lists (see RXs 18-22; Tr. 95). Respondents' retail price for carpeting ordered on a cut order basis is usually based on the 40 to 42 percent markup above its cost ("cut order" price) for said carpeting (Tr. 21, 53, 55, 118; but see Tr. 313).

11. When a manufacturer uses a roll for "cut orders" or when a retailer uses a roll to fill customers' orders, the end of the roll which is too small for general use in filling wall-to-wall carpet orders becomes a "remnant" (Tr. 41-42, 56, 294). This so-called remnant, which is unbound, and which may vary in length from a few feet to 30 feet (usually under 20 feet)[5] is sold at a substantially lower price than the same carpeting sold at a roll price or the higher cut order price (see Tr. 483). The manufacturer usually sells remnants at from 40 to 50 percent lower than the roll price (Tr. 42, 254-255, 295, 306). Retailers usually purchase remnants in groups or packages consisting of a large number of assorted styles, patterns and colors (Tr. 118-119, 294). When respondents purchase remnants from manufacturers they add the usual 40 to 42 percent markup to their cost to arrive at their retail price (see Tr. 18, 53, 55, 118; but see Tr. 313-316). When respondents create a remnant in the course of their business they reduce the price from their usual roll price (Tr. 57-61).

12. Remnants are usually purchased for use as area rugs (Tr. 117). To create an area rug in the size desired by the customer the carpeting (whether a remnant or a cut from a roll) is cut to size and bound, the binding being done at respondents' Beltsville facility for a charge (Tr. 56). In addition, area rugs of certain standard sizes may be created by the manufacturer or by respondents before being ordered by a particular customer and are offered for sale as "rugs" (Tr. 18, 19-20).

[4] When the prospective purchaser went to the Beltsville facility she would buy looking at the roll itself not a sample (see Tr. 88).

[5] Remnants are light enough to be moved without the aid of machinery and are usually displayed by standing the roll along a wall (Tr. 483, 502-503).

Moreover, remnants may also be created by cutting rolls into sizes of 20 feet or under (Tr. 514).

13. Remnants are of the same quality as carpeting of the same style and patterns that are obtainable in rolls or by cut order. Hollywood purchases carpeting as remnants in many cases substantially similar or identical in quality and pattern to carpeting it already carried in inventory as rolls (Tr. 58, 454). If the style, patterns and grade of carpeting desired by a customer are not available in a remnant, that customer would have to pay a roll price (if a retailer carried a roll of that carpeting) or the "cut order" price if no roll was stocked. Respondents do not handle "seconds" (Tr. 62, 295, 325, 356, 506).

14. During the period from November 1970 through November 1971 and at other times when respondents operated more than one retail location, their regular "roll price" at the stores were higher than the "roll price" for the same product at the Beltsville location, the difference being reflected in the cost to them of "free" delivery from the Beltsville location, i.e., 11 cents per square yard. No deliveries were made at that time on products purchased at the Beltsville location (Tr. 105, 212, 219, 226, 233, 242, 448-449).

15. Generally, when respondents advertised a "SALE" the items specifically referred to therein were priced lower than the prices at which those items had been offered for sale by respondents in the past or the "cut order" list price therefor (Tr. 106, 122). With respect to remnants, respondents' lower price was usually compared to the price at which the same or substantially comparable carpeting could be purchased from respondents or a competing retailer at a "cut order" price (Tr. 72, 107, 123, 304). When remnants were purchased from a manufacturer they were added to the remnant lines of respondents and included in the remnant sale (Tr. 50, 118, 122). If a special purchase is made from the manufacturer "* * * you go in and buy it naturally you are going to have a sale * * * based on [those] reduced prices * * * and you can reduce some of your own inventory and put it all together and have a sale and profitably do so" (Tr. 52). Hollywood had sales "Whenever it seemed necessary." "There are certain times bills must be paid and we have to reduce items, or when we buy something that is not moving we have to sell it out. Or if we buy special purchase of remnants on things like we used to stock. These sort of things" (Tr. 131-132).

16. When respondents specifically advertised remnants at "50 - 70 percent off" the higher price reference is to the regular cut order list price for the same carpeting (Tr. 56, 63, 122). The higher discount was for smaller pieces that sell for halls or runners (Tr. 63-64). "This is the value of the remnant. This is the end of the roll. This is the end of the roll that we sold for $10 a yard and there are four yards left on the end of it. We sell it for 50 percent of our prices which is $5 a yard. That is a 50 percent sale. That is how we determine that comparison, the percentage" (Tr. 57).

17. Respondents admitted in their answer that by and through the use of the word "SALE" and through other words of similar import and meaning, they have represented that the carpeting and floor covering which they offer for sale may be purchased at special or reduced prices, and purchasers are thereby afforded savings from respondents' regular selling prices (see CXs 1-48; Ans. Par. Five (1)).

18. Respondents' representation is true (see findings 14, 15, supra).

19. Respondents admitted in their answer that they have represented in their advertising that purchasers of respondents' carpet remnants are afforded savings of 50 to 75 percent off the prices at which such carpet remnants are usually and customarily sold at retail (see CXs 1-48; Ans. Par. Five (2)).

20. In truth and fact the higher price on which respondents base their comparisons is the price at which the same grade and quality of carpeting as the advertised remnant usually and customarily sold at retail (see findings 13, 15, 16, supra).

21. Respondents also admitted in their answer that by and through the use of the words "Compare $238 to $264 Value" they have represented that said comparative value is the price at which the said carpet remnants are being offered for sale by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area (Ans. Par. Five (3)).

22. In fact, respondents represented by use of the words "Compare $238 to $264 Value" that said comparative value is the price at which carpeting of the same grade and quality as the advertised remnant is being offered for sale by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area (see findings 9, 10, 11, 12, supra; see CXs 15, 16, 18, 19).

23. Respondents representation as to the comparative value of advertised remnants (see finding 22, supra) was in fact true (see findings 9, 10, 11, 12; see also conclusion, infra pp. 23-25) [pp. 808-810 herein].

24. Respondents' Beltsville facility which was opened in late 1969 (Tr. 17), is "located in a district that is adjacent to commercial warehouses" (Tr. 406). It is a portion of a larger building with three roll-type-overhead-door entrances at the front, which could be described generally as a loading bay (see Tr. 90, 178; RX 1 - frames 34A-36). A walk-in door entrance is located to the left of the overhead door entrances (see RX 1-frames 34A-36, RX 5).

This walk-in door leads into a small enclosed area described as "a sample show room perhaps 12 by 36 feet" (Tr. 75, 420; see RXs 2, 4, 5). In this area respondents display samples used in its "cut order" business, i.e., the ordering directly from the manufacturer of specific quantities of carpeting (Tr. 88). The remaining portion of this facility, consisting of a floor area of approximately 11,000 square feet, contains the rolls of carpeting and remnants and other merchandise which Hollywood maintains as stock (see RXs 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9). The remnants (rolled up) are usually stacked standing up along the right and left walls of this large room (Tr. 84), whereas the rolls of carpeting are placed horizontally in pyramid fashion on the floor in piles with walk space between the remnant display and roll display (Tr. 84; RXs 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13). The middle of the floor area in the large room is used as a cutting area (Tr. 86; see RX 6). A three ton fork-lift truck ("hyster" Tr. 84-85) is used to move the rolls from the various piles to the cutting area (see RX 1, frame 33A-34). Certain office space is located over the sample room with access by stairs from the large storage-work area (see RXs 2, 8; Tr. 82).

Until late in 1972, Hollywood stored most of its rolls of carpeting in this facility, customers being able to either order this merchandise from its other store locations from samples taken from the rolls on stock at Beltsville or by ordering directly by observation of the actual roll at Beltsville (Tr. 75-76). The facility at Beltsville is open to the public (except the office area) and Hollywood has a "retail license and occupancy permit for retail sales" at this location (Tr. 77). Before opening its Beltsville facility Hollywood stored its on-hand merchandise (rolls and remnants) in the back room of its Bailey Crossroads store or the basement of its Bladensburg store (Tr. 217-218, 223).

25. During the times relevant to this proceeding Hollywood referred to its Beltsville facility as its "WAREHOUSE" or "WAREHOUSE LOCATION" (Tr. 111-116; see CXs 1-48). "We don't call it a store, we call it a warehouse. That is what it is" (Tr. 111).

26. By and through the use of the words "WAREHOUSE SALE" separately and in conjunction with the word "LOW PRICES" and other words of similar import or meaning, the respondents have represented that said facility was used primarily for the storage of merchandise sold by respondents at retail and that the merchandise offered for sale or sold was available for sale or sold out of such facility at substantial savings to consumers from the prices charged for the same or similar merchandise by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area (Tr. 44-70, 301-302, 306, 340, 350; see CX 1-40; RPF 13).

27. The Beltsville facility is in fact a WAREHOUSE and respondents' representation that said facility was used primarily for the storage of merchandise used by respondents' retail business was true (see findings 14, 25, supra). The additional fact that this facility was also a retail store or a "showroom and warehouse combined" and that the public had everyday access thereto does not, on this record, alter the fact that the facility was a "WAREHOUSE" (ibid.).

28. A "WAREHOUSE SALE" implies that a retailer, who has a warehouse used primarily for storage, is having a rare sale, one usually held to move merchandise quickly and in a short period of time said merchandise being that which it was not able to sell at retail during the regular course of its business. Such a sale implies substantial savings because it has been priced for quick sale and/or the goods have been stored at the facility without incurring the overhead costs of the traditional retail store (see Tr. 140, 163, 178, 182, 195-196).

Mrs. Verna Dickerson, a consumer witness and customer of Hollywood, testified that when she saw the term "WAREHOUSE SALE" she thought she would be getting a "saving at a warehouse price" (Tr. 140, see also Tr. 153). Mr. Howard Beard, also a consumer witness and customer of Hollywood, testified that when he saw a Hollywood "WAREHOUSE SALE" advertisement, he thought the sale would be "out of the ordinary" (Tr. 178). Significantly, neither Mrs. Dickerson nor Mr. Beard purchased carpeting at any particular price stated in the advertisements (see Tr. 153, 188-189). These witnesses were attracted to respondents' premises by the representation of the "WAREHOUSE SALE" (Tr. 161-162, 177, 193).

29. Actually, respondents conducted their retail business at the Beltsville warehouse and the "sales" they advertised as "Warehouse Sales" were not out of the ordinary, but were conducted almost on a weekly basis during the period November 1970 through December 1972. In addition, respondents' products were not priced to afford substantial savings over and above usual price reductions for its retail "sales." Respondents' use of the term "WAREHOUSE SALE" had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief all to the prejudice and injury of the purchasing public and respondents' competitors.

30. The information to be contained in advertisements appearing in the classified section is usually supplied by telephone (Tr. 372, 373-375, 390). No practical opportunity exists for the advertiser (e.g. respondents) to actually proofread the copy before it is published and disseminated (see Tr. 396-398). The importance of the distinction between the words "acrilan" and "acrylic" is generally misunderstood (Tr. 370, 375, 385, 387, 397-398). It is possible that the receiver of the information at the Washington Post mistakenly wrote the word "Acrilan" whereas respondents had specified "Acrylic" (see Tr. 371-375, 384-385, 389; see RX 43).

31. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale and distribution of rugs, carpeting, floor coverings, and services of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of respondents Hollywood, Charles Snyder, Florence Snyder and Dale Snyder.

Said respondents have at all times relevant hereto engaged in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 4 and 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Washington Post newspaper, in which most of their advertisements were placed, has interstate circulation. In addition, Hollywood has purchased carpeting from suppliers located outside the State of Maryland and has delivered carpeting to customers located in Virginia and/or the District of Columbia. The acts and practices which are challenged in this proceeding relate to respondents' interstate advertising and are "in commerce" within the coverage of the Federal Trade Commission Act. See Guziak v. Federal Trade Commission, 361 F.2d 700 (8th Cir. 1966); Ford Motor Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 120 F.2d 175 (6th Cir. 1941); United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n., 322 U.S. 533 (1944); Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U.S. 231 (1951).

Respondents contend that the activities complained about were so small compared to its overall business and, at the time of the complaint and adjudicative hearing the investigation was so old, that the public interest would hardly be served by sustaining the complaint. I do not agree.

In its complaint the Commission made the determination that this proceeding is in the public interest. There is nothing in this record which demonstrates that that determination was in error. This proceeding is in the public interest insofar as that determination is essential to the Commission's assertion of jurisdiction. See Koch v. Federal Trade Commission, 206 F.2d 311, 319 (6th Cir. 1953);

American Airlines, Inc. v. North American Airlines, Inc. 351 U.S. 79, 83 (1956).

So-called "laches," viz., the failure to act expeditiously to enforce a claim or right, does not apply to proceedings brought in the public interest pursuant to Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, where deception of public is asserted. Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 80 (1934). Moreover, the record shows that respondents' advertising contained the type of representations which were the subject of this proceeding at least until late in 1973 (see RX 41). This is not a situation for application of the de minimis rule.

2. Respondent Charles Snyder was president of Hollywood until 1971 and since then has been engaged as an advisor and consultant of Hollywood. He is the majority stockholder in the corporation. Florence Snyder has been president of Hollywood since 1971, and at all times during the corporation's existence has been actively engaged in its affairs. Dale Snyder is presently an officer and the operating manager of Hollywood. All of these individual respondents have cooperated and acted together in formulating, directing and controlling the acts and practices of the corporation, including the placing of the challenged advertising, and they are individually responsible for the content of said advertisement and the acts and practices of Hollywood. See Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 302 U.S. 112, 120 (1937); Sunshine Art Studios, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 481 F.2d 1171 (1st Cir. 1973).

3A. It was alleged in the complaint and respondents admitted in their answer that they represented in their advertisements by and through the use of the word "SALE" that carpeting and floor coverings may be purchased at special or reduced prices, and that purchasers are thereby afforded savings from respondents' regular prices.

It is the contention of complaint counsel that such a representation is not true, and accordingly false and misleading, because the advertised prices were not special or reduced prices from respondents' regular prices or, if certain items were reduced in price, such reductions were not significant reductions from respondents' regular prices. In support of their contention that respondents' use of the word "SALE" constitutes an unfair trade practice violative of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, complaint counsel cite only the Commission's "Guides Against Deceptive Pricing," quoting a portion of Guide I(e) thereof. That section reads as follows:

> If the former price is set forth in the advertisement, whether accompanied or not by descriptive terminology such as "Regularly," "Usually," "Formerly," etc., the advertiser should make certain that the former price is not a fictitious one. If the former price, or the amount or percentage of reduction, is not stated in the advertisement, as when the ad merely states, "SALE," the advertiser must take care that the amount of reduction is not > so insignificant as to be meaningless. It should be sufficiently large that the consumer, if he knew what it was, would believe that a genuine bargain or saving was being offered. An advertiser who claims that an item has been "Reduced to $9.99," when the former price was $10, is misleading the consumer, who will understand the claim to mean that a much greater, and not merely nominal, reduction was being offered. [16 C.F.R. §233.1(e) (1974).]

Almost all of respondents' advertisements of record in this proceeding use the word "SALE" and contain price quotations without reference to a former price or the amount or percentage of reduction involved (see CXs 1-15, 17, 19, 21-28, 42-44, 46, 47).[6]

The record shows that although respondents did reduce certain items for its various "SALES", in most instances they were relying generally on the fact that carpeting that was sold off rolls that they had in stock were offered at a significantly lower price than the same grade and quality carpeting that they offered for sale in the regular course of business at the "cut order" price, i.e., the price at which a purchaser would pay if said carpeting was purchased directly from the manufacturer.

For example, respondents' regular price in its retail stores (other than the Warehouse location) for Philadelphia Carpets' Casa Real was $4.99 per square yard (Tr. 429-430; RXs 53-55). It was usually sold at the warehouse location for $4.88 per square yard (this 11 reduction reflecting a saving to respondents in delivery charges). The same carpeting if ordered on a "cut order" basis would retail at $5.99 per square yard (Tr. 429-442). This carpeting was advertised as a "SALE" item at $4.88 a square yard in CXs 1, 5, 7, 9, 13, 15, 21, 25, 27, 28 and 35, and probably was the carpeting referred to in CXs 10, 11, 12 and 14 (Tr. 212-214). During the relevant period Casa Real was advertised at prices other than $4.88 in only four advertisements: CX 14 and CX 23 - $4.99; CX 22 and CX 32 - $4.44.

The question presented is whether the $4.99 or $4.88 price is in fact a "SALE" price, i.e., does it represent a significant reduction from respondents' regular price. The only authoritative help that I can find appears also in the Commission's "Guides Against Deceptive Pricing" where at Guide I(b), it states:

> A former price is not necessarily fictitious merely because no sales at the advertised price were made. The advertiser should be especially careful, however, in such a case, that the price is one at which the product was openly and actively offered for sale, for a reasonably substantial period of time, in the recent, regular course of his business, honestly and in good faith — and, of course, not for the purpose of establishing a fictitious higher price on which a deceptive comparison might be based. * * * [16 C.F.R. 233.1(b)(1974); Emphasis added.]

Although this section is speaking to the situation where the higher price is stated in the advertisements, but no sales were actually made at the higher price, it would appear only reasonable that the same principles would apply in establishing the regular price where it is not set forth in the advertisement of the "SALE" but where actual sales are made at the higher price, i.e., the higher price "is one at which the product was openly and actively offered for sale." Because of the methods in which carpeting is retailed (purchases on "cut order," rolls and remnants), it is my opinion that the $5.99 "cut order" price is a legitimate regular price and that offering it for "SALE" at $4.99, $4.88 or $4.44 accords with the permissible guidelines promulgated by the Commission.

The same rationale that was applied to the "SALE" of Casa Real applies to all other advertised prices relating to carpeting sold per square yard. Although the specific details as to the particular regular prices have not been developed on this record as to other carpeting the general approach taken by respondents appears to have been applied to all such representations.

The present guides, promulgated in 1964, superseded the 1958 guides which had clearly and specifically spelled out conduct which was deemed to be violative of the Federal Trade Commission Act. In comparison the 1964 guides appear to be general statements of policy and a foundation for developing on a case-by-case basis the do's and don't's of pricing (see Kintner: A Primer on the Law of Deceptive Practices, pp. 155-57 (Macmillan 1971)): Accordingly, the result reached here is based on the record in this case (1970-1972 advertising), and might not necessarily control a similar issue directed to the advertising by any other retailer or even to Hollywood today. Significantly during the 1970-1972 period Hollywood had retail stores as well as the warehouse location and had not an insubstantial amount of "cut order" business. There was testimony to the effect that the carpet retailing business was fast changing over to the "warehouse" type of operation with retailers concentrating on sales of carpeting cut from "rolls" in stock and in remnants. Dale Snyder testified that Hollywood's records showed the following change in its "cut order" business from 1968 to 1974 (RX 73(b)).

1972	128
1974	78	(through Nov. 22, 1974)

The ultimate question, however, is whether the consumer would in fact realize a saving as represented in the advertisement as to the products mentioned in the "SALE." I find that the purchaser would in fact realize a saving by purchasing the "SALE" items and that the representation attributed to respondents' use of the word "SALE" as set forth in the complaint was not false or misleading.

B. It was alleged in the complaint and respondents admitted in their answer that they represented in their advertisements that purchasers of their carpet remnants are afforded savings of 50 to 75 percent off the prices at which such carpet remnants are usually and customarily sold at retail.

This meaning is found in several of respondents' advertisements as contained in the record. CX 6 states in part: "More than 800 Nylon, Wool, Acrilan, all brand name beautiful quality remnants. From hall sizes to big room wall-to-wall sizes. And if we don't have your size, we'll cut it. YOU SAVE 50 to 70%."

CX 34 states in pertinent part: "Save 50 to 75% * * * 1000 Broadloom Remnants $9.99 to 99.99, each Room Sizes Included."

CX 33 states in pertinent part: "Greatest name brand carpeting. First Quality Remnants * * * Save 40 to 70% * * *."

The record shows that respondents' basis for their representations on "percent-off" relating to remnants was the price at which that particular carpeting would retail for at the "roll" or "cut order" price. It is not disputed that remnants purchased as such from manufacturers cost respondents 50 to 70 percent less than the same carpeting would cost on a "cut order." Respondents, operating on a constant markup, would pass the same difference on to the purchaser at retail. The record is clear that respondents did not actually reduce their retail price of any particular remnant by 50 to 70 percent, although the retail price of remnants created by their own sales from "rolls" would generally be 50 percent less than the so-called roll price.

There is no doubt on this record that if a purchaser can find a remnant that suits her carpet needs including adequate size, color and quality that she would probably save 50 percent or more off the retail price for the same grade and quality of carpeting that she would pay if she had to order from a "roll" in stock or on a "cut order" basis.

However, it appears that the unsophisticated prospective purchasers of carpet do not know the manner in which carpeting is retailed and that the bare "50-70% off" representation might have the tendency and capacity to mislead the consuming public as to the nature of the savings represented. Accordingly, respondents should have specified exactly what higher price base they are using, e.g. 50-70 percent off "roll" or "cut order" price.

It is concluded that failure to state the higher price base, was a failure to state a material fact constituting a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. See J.B. Williams Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967); Haskelite Mfg. Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 127 F.2d 765 (7th Cir. 1942).

C. It was also alleged in the complaint and respondents admitted that by and through the use of such words as "Compare $238 to $264 Value" they represented that said comparative value was the price at which the same carpet remnants are being offered for sale by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

As with respect to the "percentage off" representations, respondents' basis for the higher price on the advertised remnants, and accordingly the savings to be afforded the purchaser thereof, was the "cut order" price for the identical carpeting. Such comparison representations relating to remnants were contained in only a few of the respondents' advertisements contained in the record of this proceeding (CXs 15, 16, 18, 19, 20).

The only evidence concerning the actual prices relating to these comparison representations were for the six items listed on CX 15. Charles Snyder testified and it was stipulated that the carpeting referred to in the last five items was Westernaire by Mohawk or Barwick Mills and that he had derived the higher price from Diener's price for the same carpeting (Tr. 68-74). Harold Resnick, executive vice president and general manager of Dieners' testified that Diener's "regular price" for carpeting in the Westernaire line was $5.95 per square yard (Tr. 164-165). Respondents' point out, and correctly so, that Mr. Resnick did not specify whether the $5.95 price was Diener's roll price or the "cut order" price, and that Mr. Snyder used the "cut order" price for his comparison. Using the sizes and prices given and considering that the "cut order" price would be 20 percent higher than the $5.95 price the following mathematical comparisons are possible:

Item[7]	Size	Sq. Yards	Diener's Reg. Price	Plus 20 %	Hollywood's Compare..Value
2.	12X18'	24	$142.80	$171.36	$184 to $235
3.	12X15'	20	119.00	142.80	138 to 192
4.	12X12'	16	95.20	114.24	104 to 156
5.	9X15'	15	89.25	107.10	97 to 138
6.	9X12'	12	71.40	71.40	69 to 124

On the basis of the record and the resulting computations it appears that respondents' comparisons are in the ball park, and that respondents' advertised higher prices were not fictitious or misleading.

It is not disputed however, that the same grade and quality of carpeting if sold by Diener's as remnants would be 40 to 50 percent lower than their regular price for the same carpeting. Respondents have admitted that their remnant advertising represented a comparison with their competitor's remnant price. In view of the testimony, respondents' admission as to the meaning attributable to their advertising must be disregarded, in that such meaning is too limiting and it would be a gross miscarriage of justice to lock respondents to this admission. It is concluded that respondents' representation as to the comparative values related to the "cut order" price and that such representations were not false or misleading.

[7] Charles Snyder testified that the first item on CX 15 was a Philadelphia Carpet wool carpet that retailed for $10.95 per square yard on a "cut order" (Tr. 72). The computed price for 15 square yards would be $273.75. Hollywood's representation was "Compare $238 to $264." (CX 15)

D. It was alleged in the complaint that by and through the use of the words "WAREHOUSE SALE" as set forth in their advertisements, respondents represented (1) that the facility at which their merchandise is being offered for sale is used primarily for the storage of merchandise used by their retail business, and (2) that respondents' merchandise is being offered for sale or sold out of such facility at prices substantially below those charged for the same or similar merchandise by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area. Although respondents denied in their answer that they have "advertised WAREHOUSE SALE in the manner complained of at any time material here," or that the meaning of said advertisements was as alleged (see Ans. Par. 4, 5(4)), they made the following counter-proposed finding of fact:

13. By and through the use of the words "WAREHOUSE SALE" separately and in conjunction with the words "Low Prices" and other words of similar import or meaning, the respondents did in fact convey that the merchandise offered for sale or sold was available for sale or sold out of such facility at a substantial savings to consumers from the prices charged for the same or similar merchandise by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area. (Tr. 44-70, 301-302, 306, 340, 350) [RPF #13.]

It is concluded that respondents did make the representations charged in the complaint. Although respondents' Beltsville facility has been found to be a "WAREHOUSE" in the general meaning of that term, and that respondents did in fact afford certain savings from the "cut order" price or "roll" price generally prevailing in the trade area to justify its using the term "SALE," it is the further conclusion of the administrative law judge that on the basis of the testimony and the exhibits of record that in most instances respondents did not afford substantial savings to consumers from the prices charged for the same or similar merchandise by its competitors.

The term "WAREHOUSE SALE" has a distinct meaning. It relates to a special or unusual event at which time the advertiser has generally reduced all or most of its merchandise in its storage facility for fast sale. In fact most of the time pertinent to these proceedings respondents were not conducting such a "warehouse sale" and the representations that they were had the tendency and capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public.

It is well established that it is an unfair trade practice to make statements in advertising which have the tendency and capacity to deceive the prospective customer. Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 323 F.2d 523 (5th Cir. 1963). Where the advertisements themselves sufficiently demonstrate their capacity to deceive, the Commission can find the requisite deception or capacity to deceive on a visual examination of the exhibits without evidence the public was actually deceived. Double Eagle Lubricants, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F.2d 268, 270 (10th Cir. 1965). Moreover, the initial contact, if deceptive, may be prohibited under the Federal Trade Commission Act. Exposition Press, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 295 F.2d 869, 873 (2d Cir. 1961) cert. denied, 370 U.S. 917 (1962); Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 186 F.2d 821, 824 (7th Cir. 1951).

In determining the impression created by an advertisement, the Commission need not look to the technical interpretation of each phrase but must look to the overall impression likely to be made on the consuming public. Murray Space Shoe Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 304 F.2d 270 (2d Cir. 1962); National Bakers Services, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 329 F.2d 365 (7th Cir. 1964).

4. The Commission's charge that respondents have violated the Textile Fiber Product Identification Act is based in part on the fact that the trade name "Acrilan" appeared in certain of respondents' advertisements. The proper generic name for this man made fiber is "Acrylic" and it is required that this name be used in such advertising.

Respondents contend that the use of the term "Acrilan" was due to a misunderstanding or miscommunication in setting up the advertisements with the classified advertising section of the Washington Post. The record shows that this type of classified advertising is usually telephoned to the newspaper early in the week and that no opportunity exists for a review of the advertisement before publication. Respondents testified that they have complained from time to time about such errors and the record shows that in 1973 the Washington Post admitted that the use of the term "Acrilan" was probably the paper's mistake.

It is significant that in a large number of respondents' advertisements spanning the time period relevant here the proper term "Acrylic" was used. It appears that the use of "Acrilan" was completely inadvertent and not intentional. Under the circumstances responsibility for the violations of the requirements of the Act may not have been respondents.

Finally, the Commission has also alleged that respondents have not made proper disclosures relating to the exempted backings, filling or paddings as required by rule 11 of the rules and regulations (16 C.F.R. §303.11). Commission counsel have merely referred to certain exhibits of record as supporting their claim without further discussion or explanation. No further evidence or testimony of record relates to this alleged violation. Upon reading rule 11 and the cited advertisements I can not determine what information required by rule 11 was not included. In this respect I can discern no difference between the advertisements cited and those which were not cited. Compare CX 7 with CX 8.

Accordingly, not being able to describe the violation alleged I can make no finding that it in fact occurred (see Tr. 272).

THE REMEDY

The two violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act found in this proceeding were respondents' use in their advertising of the term "WAREHOUSE SALE"[8] and their failure to state the nature of the higher price on which their "percentage-off" claims were based. Significantly, the initial contact a prospective purchaser might have with respondents is at the point of reading such advertising. Although the true nature of respondents' promotion, including the fact that respondents might offer the best bargains in town, would appear obvious to any customer upon inspection of respondents' retail premises, the initial contact, if possessing the requisite tendency and capacity to deceive, may be prohibited outright.

Accordingly, in my opinion, requiring respondents to cease and desist from using the words "Warehouse Sale" or any combination of those words or other words that state or imply that respondents are conducting business anywhere else than at their retail establishment is appropriate under the circumstances and is reasonably related to the violation of law found.

Such a prohibition is clearly within the Commission's power, for it is vested with broad discretion in determining the type of order necessary to ensure discontinuance of the unlawful practices found. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 392 (1965). The Commission's discretion is limited only by the requirement that the remedy be reasonably related to the unlawful practices found. Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608, 613

[8] It should be noted that the record shows that respondents did use a large sign mounted on top of a station wagon or truck that read "WAREHOUSE SALE TODAY." This sign was displayed at the side of the road in front of respondents' Beltsville facility. Although this would constitute an unfair trade practice, that act and practice is not "in commerce" and is not within the coverage of the Federal Trade Commission Act (see RX 1, frames 34A-36; Tr. 140).

(1946); Niresk Industries, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 278 F.2d 337, 343 (7th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 883. The Commission is not limited to prohibiting the illegal practices in the exact form in which they were found to have been employed in the past. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 473 (1952).

Respondents should be required, when they use "percentage off" claims, to state the nature of the higher price upon which the claim is based. The Commission's power to require affirmative disclosure is well established. See Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., supra.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Hollywood Carpets, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Charles Snyder, Florence H. Snyder and Dale E. Snyder, individually, and as officers of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporate subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of carpeting and floor coverings, or any other article of merchandise, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the words "WAREHOUSE SALE" or any combination of those words or other words of similar import and meaning that represent that respondents are conducting any business other than their regular retail business.
2. Representing that a sale price is a "percentage off" without disclosing in a clear and conspicuous manner the nature of the higher price upon which the claim is made.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall maintain for at least a one (1) year period, following the effective date of this order, copies of all advertisements, including newspaper, radio and television advertisements, direct mail and in-store solicitation literature, and any other such promotional material utilized for the purpose of obtaining leads for the sale of carpeting or floor coverings, or utilized in the advertising, promotion or sale of carpeting or floor coverings and other merchandise.

It is further ordered, That respondents, for a period of one (1) year from the effective date of this order, shall provide each advertising agency utilized by respondents and each newspaper publishing company, television or radio station or other advertising media which is utilized by the respondents to obtain leads for the sale of carpeting or floor coverings and other merchandise, with a copy of the Commission's news release setting forth the terms of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondents deliver a copy of this order to all present and future personnel of respondents engaged in the sale, or the offering for sale, of any product, or in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising, and secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person.

It is further ordered, That each of the individual respondents named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his or her present business or employment and of his or her affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondents' current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he or she is engaged as well as a description of his or her duties and responsibilities.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

BY DIXON, Commissioner:

The complaint in this matter was issued on July 8, 1974, charging respondents with a variety of unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45) as well as with violation of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act (15 U.S.C. 70) and rules and regulations thereof, all in connection with the retail sale of carpeting. Hearings were held before Administrative Law Judge Miles J. Brown, who rendered his initial decision on Mar. 18, 1975. The administrative law judge found that respondents, a carpet retailer and its controlling officers, had made misleading use of the term "Warehouse Sale," and had falsely advertised large percentage reductions on their merchandise (I.D. pp. 23, 26 [pp. 808, 810-811 herein]).[1] In all other respects the judge rejected the allegations of the complaint, and provisions of the notice order. Complaint counsel have appealed from the initial decision, urging that the provisions of the notice order be adopted in their entirety.

In reviewing the record of this case, the administrative law judge was no doubt impressed, as are we, that the named parties here are not among the more heinous male-factors to be haled before this tribunal. In a Rogues' Gallery of Commission Respondents they would find their place beneath the cobwebs of a back room. Nonetheless, proof of evil intent is not necessary in a Section 5 case, and good character does not excuse false advertising, nor lessen its capacity to harm consumers. For whatever reason, we believe that the administrative law judge dealt too gently with the practices set before him, finding truth where deception lay. Our job being not to punish, but only to prevent the recurrence of past violations, we believe that modification of the law judge's conclusions, and expansion of his order is necessary in several respects, all as set forth below:

I. FICTITIOUS "SALE" ADVERTISEMENTS

The initial controversy involves respondents' use of the word "sale" to characterize their offering of the same carpeting over a one-year period, November 1970 to November 1971. The administrative law judge found that there are three basic prices at which carpets and floor coverings are sold: (1) The retailer may purchase a full roll of carpeting from the manufacturer and sell various lengths from the roll. The price charged under this method is the "full roll" price (I.D. 9). (2) If the retailer cannot satisfy demand from stock he or she may place a special order with the manufacturer, which cuts off the required amount from its roll and ships it. As might be expected, a higher price is charged in such circumstances, referred to as the "cut order" price (I.D. 10). (3) A "remnant" is the portion at the end of a roll which is too small for general use in filling wall-to-wall orders. Remnants are sold by the manufacturer at 40-50 percent or more below roll price to the retailer and generally resold by retailers at similarly hefty discounts from full roll and cut order prices (I.D. 11).

The record indicates that during a year-long period under investigation respondents advertised as being on "sale" a brand of carpeting called "Casa Real" by Philadelphia Carpets at a price of $4.99 (or $4.88)[2] per square yard. Under questioning, respondent Dale Snyder conceded that $4.99 (or $4.88) was the "regular store price" established for Casa Real (Tr. 429-30). The administrative law judge concluded that respondents had not misused the term "sale" because during the period in question respondents did make some sales of Casa Real at $5.99, the cut order price. These, however, were instances in which respondents did not have in stock the particular color or pattern of Casa Real desired by the consumer (Tr. 430). The record indicates, moreover, that cut order sales of Casa Real at a price higher than $4.99 constituted only a tiny and declining fraction of all sales of the product (RX 73b; Tr. 496).

[2] The lower price was apparently charged at respondents' large Beltsville facility, the higher price at its smaller retail showrooms, the difference in price reflecting the cost of shipping from Beltsville.

Under these circumstances we believe that the continuous representation by respondents that $4.99 (or $4.88) was a "sale price" for Casa Real was deceptive. Conceivably respondents intended by their advertising to reflect the fact that at the time the "sale" began they had begun to stock Casa Real in large quantities, thereby enabling them to provide roll prices for most colors and patterns, as opposed to the higher cut prices previously in force. If so, it was incumbent upon them to make this clear, as, for example, by announcing that they had changed their regular method of operation and could now offer lower prices on a wider range of merchandise. Unqualified, the term "sale," combined with citation of particular prices, clearly implies that a merchant has departed in significant measure from pricing patterns previously observed (and likely to be observed in the future) in the regular course of the merchant's business. It suggests to the consumer the advisability of taking immediate advantage of the unusual prices being offered, and, to the extent that the claim is believed, it may significantly influence buying behavior.[3] It is clearly an abuse of "sale" to apply it over a prolonged period of time to characterize what have become the everyday prices at which a merchant sells.

We will enter order language prohibiting deceptive use of the term "sale" (order Par. I(1)), and prohibiting representations of savings based on use of a fictitious regular price (Par. I(2)).

II. MISLEADING COMPARISON PRICES

The second assignment of error relates to the law judge's finding that respondents had not advertised falsely by using the cut order price of carpeting as a comparison price in the advertising of remnants, to wit:

15x15', SALE $98
Compare $238 to $264 Value
Compare $184 to $235 Value (CX 15)

The carpets described were remnants, and the prices at which they were offered were respondents' regular per-unit prices for remnants. The comparison prices were those at which the same size carpeting might be sold had it been cut ordered from the manufacturer. Respondents themselves conceded in their answer that advertising such as the above would be construed as a comparison of their remnant prices with their competitors' remnant prices.[4] Despite respondents' admission, the administrative law judge concluded that it would be "a gross miscarriage of justice to lock respondents to this admission." (I.D., p. 25 [p. 809, herein]). To the contrary, we believe the admission mirrored the truth. A consumer not familiar with the carpeting industry might well assume that the comparison prices did indeed represent those at which others would sell identical merchandise, i.e., remnants. In fact, it appears that the prices respondents advertised were not only those at which they regularly sold remnants, but in the same general range as prices at which competitors sold remnants. The use of comparison prices 100-150 percent higher with no indication that such comparison prices were based on the prices of cut order merchandise could only deceive and mislead.

[3] If consumers possessed perfect knowledge of all competitive alternatives no harm might flow from misrepresentations of the sort involved here. A consumer could readily determine how the advertised price compared to market alternatives (taking into account quality and service as well) and would simply ignore the merchant's own characterization of his price. Lacking such perfect knowledge, however, a consumer is likely to infer that if a merchant has succeeded in selling a substantial quantity of product at some "regular" price, that price must be a competitively viable charge. When the vendor offers a "sale," therefore, the consumer will infer that the new price is, in fact, cheap relative to competitive alternatives, which will, of course, be false if the "sale" includes only regular-priced items.

The administrative law judge himself recognized that respondents were remiss in failing to qualify representations that remnants were being sold at savings of "50-70%." He concluded that absent qualification consumers would be likely to assume that they would realize savings of 50-70 percent from what they would pay for comparable remnants elsewhere (I.D. p. 23 [p. 808, herein]). The same reasoning is equally applicable to respondents' use of unqualified comparison prices. The potential injury resulting from such misrepresentations is obvious. Respondents' unqualified comparison clearly suggests that the advertiser is providing a product at only a fraction of what the same product would cost elsewhere. The consumer who relies on the representation may, therefore, be induced to purchase the advertised product, assuming the quoted per-unit price cannot be matched, when in fact a more desirable remnant might be obtainable from a competitor at a comparable per-unit price.

There is, of course, nothing wrong (and much right) in pointing out to consumers that by purchasing remnants they can realize huge savings over costs incurred by buying the identical product cut from a roll. The additional order provision we shall enter respecting this violation will require simply that the nature of comparison prices be made clear in respondents' advertising (Par. I(3)).

[4] Use of the word "Sale" might also tend to suggest that the advertised prices were below per-unit remnant prices charged by respondents themselves, and, therefore, that the "compare" prices were respondents' own former prices.

III. BAN ON UNQUALIFIED REPRESENTATION OF DOLLAR AMOUNT SAVINGS

Complaint counsel contend thirdly that the administrative law judge erred in modifying section I, paragraph 4 of the notice order to forbid only unqualified representations of percentage savings and not unqualified representations of dollar amount savings. While the complaint alleged, and the administrative law judge found that respondents had made only deceptively unqualified representations of percentage savings, we believe that the order in this matter should forbid unqualified representations of dollar amount savings in order to prevent respondents from repeating in a different guise the same violations which gave rise to the order. It would be absurd, if, being estopped from claiming without qualification "Save 50-75%," respondents were able to say, no less deceptively, "Save $70-$100." It is well established that the Commission in fashioning an order need not limit it to the most narrow formulation of the violation found. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 473 (1952). The prohibition on unqualified dollar savings claims is clearly related reasonably to the unlawful practices found, which were in essence misrepresentations of available savings.

IV. USE OF "WAREHOUSE"

Complaint counsel further contest the administrative law judge's limitation of the language of Section I, paragraph 6 of the Notice Order to forbid only use of the words "Warehouse Sale" or any combination of other words of similar meaning. Complaint counsel urge a prohibition on any use of the word "warehouse."

The administrative law judge found that respondents' Beltsville facility could indeed be termed a "warehouse." As he concluded (citations omitted):

> It is a portion of a larger building with three roll-type-overhead-door entrances at the front, which could be described generally as a loading bay * * *. A walk-in door entrance is located to the left of the overhead door entrances * * *.
> This walk-in door leads into a small enclosed area described as a "sample show room perhaps 12 by 36 feet" * * *. In this area respondents display samples used in its "cut order" business * * *. The remaining portion of this facility, consisting of a floor area of approximately 11,000 square feet, contains the rolls of carpeting and remnants and other merchandise which Hollywood maintains as stock * * *. The remnants (rolled up) are usually stacked standing up along the right and left walls of this large room * * *, whereas the rolls of carpeting are placed horizontally in pyramid fashion on the floor in piles with walk space between the remnant display and roll display * * *. The middle of the floor area in the large room is used as a cutting area * * *. A three ton fork-lift truck * * * is used to move the rolls from the various piles to the cutting area * * *. Certain office space is located over the sample room with access by stairs from the large storage-work area * * *. (I.D. 24.)

The administrative law judge, finding that a warehouse sale "relates to a special or unusual event at which time the advertiser has generally reduced all or most of its merchandise in its storage facility for fast sale" concluded that respondents had used the term deceptively (I.D. p. 26 [p. 810, herein].) We have no quarrel with this finding (nor do respondents, who did not appeal) since it appears that respondents employed the term on a regular basis to characterize their normal course of business. Indeed, given that respondents now operate from only one location, it is doubtful that they could under any circumstances conduct what consumers would generally construe to be a "warehouse sale." Therefore, a prohibition on any use of that term (and functional equivalents) seems clearly warranted.

Complaint counsel raise the further question of whether the order should forbid any use of the term "warehouse," as for example, "visit our warehouse location," another common advertising theme of respondents. The underlying question we believe is whether use of the term "warehouse" in an advertisement is likely to convey a misleading impression to consumers regarding the available range of products and prices they will encounter if they patronize the facility. While the physical attributes of a building might satisfy Noah Webster that it is a warehouse, the issue for Section 5 purposes is whether the building functions in the commercial setting in the way consumers will be led to expect by virtue of reference to it in an advertisement designed to sell carpeting. This is no more than a restatement of the well established proposition that the literal truth employed in a particular context may be used to deceive Bockenstette v. F.T.C., 134 F. 2d 369 (10th Cir. 1943). On that point the evidence in the record is inconclusive. While it does not appear that respondents ever provided the significant savings generally associated with a legitimate warehouse sale, it does appear that by virtue of doing business from a large storage facility they were able to stock a wide range of carpeting at prices that at least sometimes compared favorably with those of competitors. Thus we conclude that complaint counsel have not sustained the burden of proof necessary to warrant an absolute prohibition on respondents' use of the term "warehouse" to characterize a part of their sales facility.

By the same token, respondents must not be allowed to misrepresent the situation. A statement such as "Visit our Warehouse Location" is likely to convey a misleading impression when in fact respondents have only one location consisting of a warehouse attached to a showroom. We think that on balance respondents should be permitted to employ the term "warehouse" provided that they make clear that it refers to a location at which they conduct their retail business in its regular course. We have fashioned an appropriate order. Paragraph I(6) is the administrative law judge's prohibition on use of "Warehouse Sale." Paragraph I(7) forbids the use of warehouse unless it is disclosed that the term refers to a facility at which retail selling is regularly conducted, e.g., "Visit our warehouse-showroom." Paragraph I(8) prohibits other misrepresentations of the nature of respondents' physical facilities, a provision contained in Paragraph I(6) of the notice order and warranted as a reasonably related generic description of the violation occurring here.

V. TEXTILE FIBER PRODUCTS IDENTIFICATION ACT VIOLATIONS

Exhibits introduced by complaint counsel indicated that advertisements for respondents' products run in the Washington Post employed the term "Acrilan" when in fact the proper generic term for the fiber in question is "acrylic" and use of that term is required by the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, 15 U.S.C. §§70, 70b. The exhibits upon which complaint counsel rely consist of advertising from 1971 (CX 1, 6, 21, 23, 33). Respondents introduced evidence to suggest that a single false advertisement which occurred in 1973, after the Commission's investigation, may have been the fault of an employee of the Washington Post who accepted instructions for the advertisement over the telephone (RX 41, 42, 45). No similar testimony was adduced for the 1971 advertisements, but the administrative law judge apparently reasoned, though he did not explicitly so find, that inasmuch as some advertisements during the 1971 period did employ the term "acrylic," the uses of "acrilan" may similarly have been due to repeated errors in transcription by Post employees. The administrative law judge thus omitted an order, finding that responsibility for the improper advertisements "may not have been respondents." (I.D. p. 27 [p. 811 herein].)

We would certainly agree that where, through no fault of an advertiser, a newspaper makes an error which results in deception, the advertiser is not liable, provided he or she takes prompt action to rectify the mistake which has occurred, and does not acquiesce in it or permit it to continue. In the instant case it appears that during the initial 1971 period respondents took no action to remedy repeated misuses of the term "acrilan." Thus, assuming, arguendo, that the improper advertisements were in fact due to errors in transcription by the Washington Post[5], it was nevertheless incumbent upon respondents, after the initial mistake had occurred, to take action to prevent its recurrence, which they did not do. The Commission is obliged to prevent negligent violations of the law as well as those that flow from more blameworthy motives, for in either case the result is the same. We, therefore, conclude that the administrative law judge erred in omitting an order provision with respect to the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act.[6]

[5] The presumption, of course, should be to the contrary. Whether it was adequately rebutted here is a matter we need not consider.

Similarly, we believe complaint counsel are correct in pointing out that respondents ran afoul of the Act by characterizing carpets for sale as being composed of various fibers (wool, nylon, polyester) without disclosing that the fiber descriptions referred only to the face or pile of the carpet and not to other portions, as required by rule 11, 16 C.F.R. §303.11, promulgated by the Commission pursuant to the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act. (CX 1, 6, 7, 24, 30, 42, 46, 47) For the foregoing reasons we shall enter the notice order language requiring compliance with the provisions violated.

An appropriate order is appended.

FINAL ORDER

This matter having been considered by the Commission upon the appeal of complaint counsel from the initial decision, and the Commission for the reasons stated in the accompanying opinion, having granted the appeal in part:

It is ordered, That the following portions of the initial decision of the administrative law judge be, and they hereby are, adopted as the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Commission: Pages 1-13 [pp. 790-800, herein] (except for finding 15, sentence 1, page 13 [p. 800, herein]); page 14 [p. 800-801 herein] (except for findings 18 and 20); page 15 [p. 801-802, herein] (except for findings 22-23); pages 16-18 [p. 802-804, herein] (except for finding 27, page 16 [p. 802, herein]); pages 19-20 [p. 805-806, herein]; page 21 [p. 806, herein], first sentence; [beginning with "The question presented * * *"]; page 22 [p. 807, herein], Sec. (b) Failing to set forth in advertising the fiber content of floor covering containing exempted backings, fillings or paddings, that such disclosure relates only to the face, pile or outer surface of such textile fiber products and not to the exempted backings, fillings or paddings.

(c) Using a fiber trademark in advertising textile fiber products without a full disclosure of the required fiber content information in at least one instance in said advertisement.

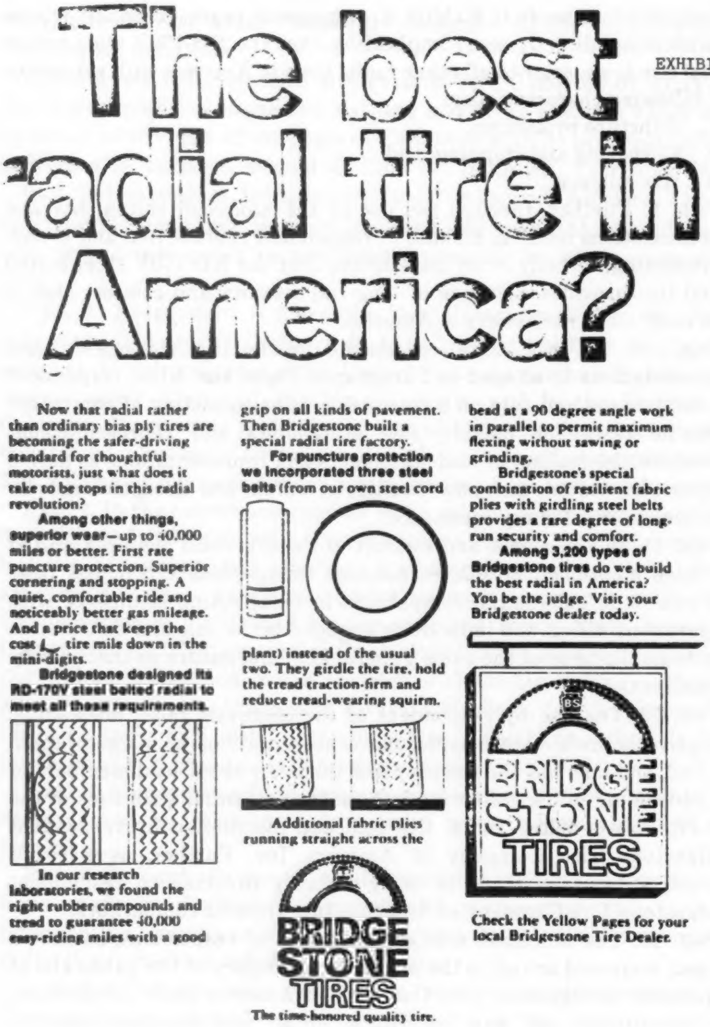
EXHIBIT A



The best radial tire in America?

Now that radial rather than ordinary bias ply tires are becoming the safer-driving standard for thoughtful motorists, just what does it take to be tops in this radial revolution?

Among other things, superior wear—up to 40,000 miles or better. First rate puncture protection. Superior cornering and stopping. A quiet, comfortable ride and noticeably better gas mileage. And a price that keeps the cost [illegible] tire mile down in the mini-digits.

Bridgestone designed its RD-170V steel belted radial to meet all these requirements.

In our research laboratories, we found the right rubber compounds and tread to guarantee 40,000 easy-riding miles with a good grip on all kinds of pavement. Then Bridgestone built a special radial tire factory.

For puncture protection we incorporated three steel belts (from our own steel cord plant) instead of the usual two. They girdle the tire, hold the tread traction-firm and reduce tread-wearing squirm.

Additional fabric plies running straight across the bead at a 90 degree angle work in parallel to permit maximum flexing without sawing or grinding.

Bridgestone's special combination of resilient fabric plies with girdling steel belts provides a rare degree of long-run security and comfort.

PAR. 7. The aforesaid advertisements have the tendency or capacity to influence children to eat plants or parts thereof which they find growing or in natural surroundings. Some plants or parts thereof are harmful if eaten. A substantial number of children do not have sufficient knowledge or experience to distinguish between those plants or parts thereof which are and those which are not harmful if eaten. Therefore the aforesaid advertisements have the tendency or capacity to influence children to engage in behavior which is harmful or involves the risk of harm, and were and are unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

PAR. 8. It is a commonly recognized safety principle that children should not eat any plants or parts thereof which they find growing or in natural surroundings except under adult supervision. The aforesaid advertisements have the tendency or capacity to influence children, when not under adult supervision, to eat plants or parts thereof which they find growing or in natural surroundings, which behavior is inconsistent with said safety principle. Therefore, the aforesaid advertisements were and are unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid advertisements have the tendency or capacity to represent, directly or by implication, to children that they can eat plants or parts thereof which they find growing or in natural surroundings without harm or the risk of harm. In truth and in fact, children cannot eat plants or parts thereof which they find growing or in natural surroundings without harm or the risk of harm. Therefore, the aforesaid advertisements were and are unfair and deceptive acts or practices and false advertisements.

PAR. 10. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent General Foods Corporation has been, and is now, in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, with other corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of food products.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid unfair or deceptive acts or practices of respondent, as herein alleged, including the dissemination of false advertisements, as aforesaid, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constituted and now constitute unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, in violation of Sections 12 and 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Bureau of Consumer Protection proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, and having duly considered the comments filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34(b) of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent General Foods Corporation is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 250 North St., White Plains, N.Y.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondent, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

For the purposes of this order, the following definitions apply:

1. The term "commerce" means commerce as defined by the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

2. The term "plant" means any whole plant or any constituent part thereof.

I

It is ordered, That respondent General Foods Corporation, a corporation, (hereinafter referred to as respondent), its successors and assigns, and its officers, agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution in or affecting commerce of any product, forthwith cease and desist from, directly or indirectly:

A. Representing, through depictions, descriptions, or otherwise, that a plant is suitable for human consumption in its raw state in an advertisement containing a visual depiction of (1) the plant in its growing state or natural surroundings which depiction is not a clear portrayal of conditions of domestic cultivation for human consumption or (2) the consumption of a raw plant described in the advertisement as wild.

B. Representing through depictions, descriptions, or otherwise, that a plant is suitable for human consumption in its raw state in an advertisement containing a visual depiction of the plant in its growing state or natural surroundings where said plant is not the advertised product or an ingredient, or a characterizing flavor, or source thereof, in the advertised product.

C. Representing, through depictions, descriptions, or otherwise, that any given thing or things, other than things that are commonly recognized as foods or lawful food additives, are suitable for human consumption as a food where it is reasonably foreseeable, through reasonable inquiry, that such representation has the tendency or capacity to influence members of the audience in reasonably good health to engage in behavior which creates an imminent risk of physical harm to those persons or to others.

II

It is further ordered, That respondent shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Order Modifying Order to Cease and Desist

Respondents having filed in the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on Oct. 11, 1974, a petition to review and set aside an order to cease and desist issued herein on July 23, 1974 [84 F.T.C. 95], and the court having rendered its decision and its judgment on June 16, 1975, affirming the order to cease and desist, except for numbered Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the order which it directed be set aside;

Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, That the aforesaid order to cease and desist be, and it hereby is, modified in accordance with the decision and judgment of the Court to read as follows:

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc., a corporation doing business as Symbra'ette, whose corporate name is now Symbra'ette, Inc., and officers thereof, and respondent Carl G. Simonsen, individually and as an officer of said corporation, or corporations, and respondents' agents, representatives, employees, successors, and assigns, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of brassieres, girdles, lingerie, wigs, or of any other products, or of distributorships or franchises, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Operating any marketing or sales plan or program unless respondents agree to and notify participants that they will promptly

2. Representing, directly or by implication, or by use of hypothetical examples or representations of past earnings of participants, that participants in any marketing or sales program will earn or receive, or have the reasonable expectancy of earning or receiving, any stated gross or net amounts, unless in fact, a majority of participants in the community or geographic area in which such representations are made, have achieved the stated gross or net amounts represented, and the representations accurately reflect the amount of time required by such participants to achieve such gross or net amounts.

3. Misrepresenting in any manner, directly or by implication, or placing in the hands of others the means or instrumentalities for misrepresenting, the financial gains reasonably achievable by participants in any marketing or sales plan or program, or the commercial feasibility thereof.

4. Failing to maintain adequate records (a) which disclose the facts upon which any claims of the type discussed in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this order are based; and (b) from which the validity of any claim of the type discussed in Paragraphs 2 and 3 of this order can be determined.

5. Requiring that an individual pay a valuable consideration in return for the right to participate in any marketing or sales program, without first disclosing to such prospective participant in writing the number of other participants in the marketing area in which such prospect plans to operate.

6. Representing that the supply of available participants in respondents' marketing program is inexhaustible or virtually inexhaustible.

7. 8. Publishing or distributing, directly or indirectly, any resale price

Provided, That in those States having Fair Trade laws products may be marketed pursuant to the provisions of such laws.

9. Entering into, maintaining, or enforcing any contract, agreement, combination, understanding, or course of conduct which has as its purpose or effect to require any individual to refrain from reselling products which he or she has purchased, to any specified person, class of persons, business, or class of businesses.

It is further ordered, That respondents deliver a copy of this order to all present and future dealers, distributors, or participants in any marketing or sales plan or program they operate, or who are engaged in the sale of respondents' products or services, and secure from each a signed statement acknowledging receipt of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment, incorporation, or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor firm, partnership, or corporation, or any other change which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

Simonsen, the individual respondent named herein, promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That each of the respondents herein and their successors and assigns shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with all of the provisions of this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

UNITED BUILDERS, INC., ET AL.

Docket 9043. Order, Oct. 3, 1975

Order directing the chief administrative law judge to reassign the matter on temporary or permanent basis to another administrative law judge.

Appearances

For the Commission: Allan M. Huss, Aaron H. Bulloff and Sharon J. Devine.

For the respondents: John Carrico and Stanley Preiser, Charleston, W. Va.

ORDER

The complaint in this matter alleges, in part, that customers of respondents have been denied proper notice of certain rescission rights created by the Truth in Lending Act. It is possible that, under the terms of that Act, those alleged rights may expire three years after the dates of the transactions from which they arose. If so, this three-year limitation period could frustrate, in part or in whole, the operation of a final order which might be entered in this matter, or the operation of an order or judgment of a court which might be entered in part as a consequence of the Commission disposition of this matter. Because of this, delay in the hearing of this matter is exceptionally serious.

Judge Hinkes' order postponing prehearing conference entered in the present matter on Sept. 16, 1975, read together with his motion to modify Commission order of Sept. 16, 1975 entered in the matter of Kellogg Company, et al., Docket No. 8883, on Sept. 19, 1975, indicates to the Commission that further proceedings in this case before Judge Hinkes will not take place as expeditiously as the aforementioned circumstances require. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the chief administrative law judge, reassign this matter on a temporary or permanent basis to another administrative law judge.

IN THE MATTER OF

JAMES NEECE T/A CARPET SHOWCASE, ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, TRUTH IN LENDING AND TEXTILE FIBER PRODUCTS IDENTIFICATION ACTS

Docket C-2735. Complaint, Oct. 3, 1975-Decision, Oct. 3, 1975

Consent order requiring a Beaumont, Tex., distributor and installer of carpeting and floor coverings, among other things to cease using false and deceptive advertisements and sales techniques; failing to disclose the quantity or cost per unit of carpeting or floor coverings; intimidating customers into accepting defective merchandise; in connection with the extension of consumer credit, violating the Truth in Lending Act by failing to disclose to consumers such information as required by Regulation Z of said Act; misbranding textile fiber products and failing to maintain proper records of the fiber content of such products. Further, the order requires respondent to provide a 3-day cooling off period to every customer; to notify each advertising medium used by respondent that the Federal Trade Commission has found that he engages in unfair and deceptive acts; and to refund money to any customer where investigation reveals the transaction involved violations of the order.

Appearances

For the respondent: Harry S. Long and Michael D. Matheny, Beaumont, Tex.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Truth in Lending Act and the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that James Neece, an individual, trading and doing business as Carpet Showcase, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Acts, and the implementing regulations promulgated thereunder and the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent James Neece is an individual trading and doing business as Carpet Showcase, a proprietorship existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, with his principal office and place of business located at 3705 Highland Ave., Beaumont, Tex.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale, distribution and installation of carpeting and floor coverings to the public.

COUNT I

Alleging violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count I as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, respondent now causes, and for some time last past has caused, his said merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from his place of business located in the State of Texas to purchasers thereof located in the State of Texas and various other States and maintains and at all times mentioned herein has maintained a course of trade in commerce or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of his aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of his carpeting and floor coverings, the respondent has made, and is now making, numerous statements and representations by repeated advertisements dissiminated in various media of general circulation including advertisements transmitted over television stations having the capacity to broadcast into States other than the State of Texas and by oral and written statements and representations of his salesmen to prospective purchasers with respect to his products and services.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all-inclusive thereof, are the following:

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, separately and in connection with the advertising and oral statements and written statements and representations of respondent's salesmen to customers and prospective customers, respondent has represented, and is now representing, directly or indirectly, or by implication that:

1. Respondent is making a bona fide offer to sell the carpeting and floor coverings on the terms and conditions stated.

2. By and through the use of the terms "15% OFF," "SPECIAL" and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, that said carpeting and floor coverings may be purchased at special or reduced prices, and purchasers are thereby afforded savings from respondent's regular selling prices.

3. By and through the use of the words "FREE INSTALLATION" and "FREE PADDING" and other words of similar import and meaning, not set out specifically herein, that installation and padding of respondent's carpets and floor coverings is provided without cost or obligation to respondent's customer.

4. By and through the use of the words "WE FINANCE NO MONEY DOWN" and "USE OUR REVOLVING CHARGE ACCOUNT * * * EASY BUDGET PLAN," and other words of similar import and meaning not set forth specifically herein, purchasers of respondent's products are granted easy credit terms, without regard to their financial status or ability to pay and that respondent is in the business of extending credit rather than arranging credit for his customers through financial institutions such as finance companies and banks.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondent is not making a bona fide offer to sell carpeting and floor coverings on the terms and conditions stated. To the contrary, said offers are made for the purpose of obtaining leads to persons interested in the purchase of carpeting and floor coverings. Members of the purchasing public responding to such offers often visit respondent's place of business to select carpeting and floor coverings from sample merchandise exhibited by respondent or his salesmen. Such persons are later called upon in their homes by respondent or his salesmen and negotiate a contract for the sale, delivery and installation of said merchandise without regard for the terms and conditions stated in respondent's offers aforementioned. In addition, unknown to prospective purchasers, respondent installs or causes to be installed carpeting or floor coverings of a grade and quality different than that contracted for by said prospective purchasers.

2. Respondent's products are not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices. To the contrary, the prices at which respondent's products are sold pursuant to such offers are identical to the prices charged by respondent in the regular course of business and therefore do not represent a genuine bargain or saving.

3. The cost of installation and padding is not "free" but is added to the cost of respondent's carpeting and floor coverings and is thereby included in the price paid by purchasers for respondent's products. In some instances, carpeting installed by or on behalf of respondent has rubberized backing which is bonded to the carpeting.

4. Purchasers of respondent's products are not granted easy credit terms without regard to their financial status or ability to pay. Respondent does not extend credit to his customers but arranges for the extension of credit using the services of financial institutions including finance companies and banks.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five, hereof, were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, and in furtherance of a sales program for the purpose of inducing the purchase of his carpet and floor coverings, respondent, his salesmen or representatives have engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices:

In a substantial number of instances, through the use of the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices set forth in Paragraphs Four through Five, above, respondent or his representatives have been able to induce customers into signing a contract upon initial contact without giving the customer sufficient time to carefully consider the purchase and the consequences thereof.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of his aforesaid business, respondent now induces and has induced purchasers to pay substantial sums of money to respondent without disclosing to such purchasers the price per square yard, the number of square yards of carpeting or floor coverings contracted for or the cost of installation and padding. These facts, if known to certain prospective purchasers, would likely affect their decision as to whether to buy or use the products and services of respondent. Therefore, respondent's failure to make such disclosures is an unfair or deceptive act or practice.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of his aforesaid business, respondent is using a contract providing, among other things, that a purchaser repudiating his purported obligations under such contract is liable for the amount due under the contract as well as a penalty of thirty percent of the monetary obligation evidenced thereby in addition to attorney's fees necessary to enforce collection.

The contract is oftentimes used by respondent to intimidate purchasers who have executed said contracts into accepting carpeting and floor coverings which are of a grade and quality different than that contracted for, which are defective in some respect or which are improperly installed.

The utilization of the said contract, and the intimidations by respondent have misled purchasers into the mistaken and erroneous belief that they must accept respondent's products without recourse or legal redress and have, or may, unlawfully restrict, restrain and hinder competition in the selling of carpet and floor coverings. Therefore, the acts and practices alleged herein are false, misleading and unfair and a continuing violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 10. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been and now is, in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale, distribution and installation of carpeting and floor coverings and service of the same general kind and nature as that offered by respondent.

PAR. 11. The use by respondent of the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and his failure to disclose material facts and his use of contracts as aforesaid, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said state- purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's products and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken beliefs.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, have caused and are now causing substantial pecuniary losses to persons utilizing respondent's products and services and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and to respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violation of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 13. In the ordinary course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, respondent regularly arranges for the extension of, or offers to arrange for the extension of, consumer credit, as "consumer credit" and "arrange for the extension of credit" are defined in Sections 226.2 (k) and 226.2 (f) of Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 14. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondent, in the ordinary course of business as aforesaid, and in connection with his credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Regulation Z, has caused and is causing customers to execute binding retail charge agreements.

PAR. 15. In order to promote the sale of carpet and floor coverings, respondent disseminates advertisements, as "advertisement" is defined in Section 226.2 (b) of Regulation Z, in various media. These advertisements aid, promote or assist directly or indirectly the extension of consumer credit. Certain of said advertisements which were published, broadcast or delivered subsequent to July 1, 1969, stated that:

A. No downpayment was required without also stating the following items and terminology described under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10 (d) (2) thereof:

1. The cash price or amount of the loan, as applicable;
2. The number and amount of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended;
3. The amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate; and
4. The deferred payment price.

B. No downpayment would be required in connection with any extension of credit when the creditor usually and customarily required a downpayment, in violation of Section 226.10(a)(2) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 16. In the further course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, and in connection with credit sales, the respondent has failed to preserve evidence of compliance with the requirements of Regulation Z for two years after the date of each disclosure as required by Section 226.6(i) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 17. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondent's aforesaid failures to comply with provisions of Regulation Z, constitute violations of that Act, and pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondent thereby is violating the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT III

Alleging violations of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count III as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 18. PAR. 19. Respondent is misbranding textile fiber products by failing to affix a stamp, tag, label or other means of identification to each such textile fiber product showing in a clear, legible and conspicuous manner each element of information required to be disclosed by Section 4(b) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act; or as an alternative to the foregoing, where properly labeled samples, swatches, or specimens are used to effect the sale of articles of carpeting or floor covering or other household textile articles which are manufactured specifically for a particular customer after the sale is consummated, and such articles of carpeting or floor covering or other household textile articles are of the same fiber content as the samples, swatches or specimens from which the sale was effected, failing to provide an invoice or other paper to accompany them showing the information otherwise required to appear on the label, as allowed by Rule 21(b) of the rules and regulations promulgated under the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, effective Mar. 30, 1960, as amended.

PAR. 20. Respondent has failed to maintain and preserve proper records showing the fiber content of his textile fiber products, in that said respondent substituted stamps, tags, labels or other identification pursuant to Section 5 (b) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification

Act and failed to maintain and preserve such records as would show the information set forth on the stamps, tags, labels or other identification removed by him, together with the name or names of the person or persons from whom such textile fiber products were received, in violation of Section 6(b) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and Rule 39 of the rules and regulations promulgated under the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, effective Mar. 30, 1960, as amended.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of Complaint which the Dallas Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and Counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that the complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings and enters the following order:

4. Using the words "15% OFF," "SPECIAL" or any other word or words of similar import or meaning not set forth specifically herein unless the price of such merchandise being offered for sale constitutes a reduction, in an amount not so insignificant as to be meaningless, from the actual bona fide price at which such merchandise was sold or offered for sale to the public on a regular basis by respondent for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent regular course of his business.

5. Representing by any means that any merchandise or service is furnished "free" or at no cost to the purchaser.

B. The price per square yard of each style of carpeting or floor coverings to be purchased by the customer; excluding the cost of padding and the cost of installation.

10. Representing by any means that persons executing contracts or other binding instruments with respondent may be or are liable to pay a penalty of thirty percent of the amount of the contract or any other liquidated sum upon cancellation of said contracts or other binding instruments; Provided, That respondent may make such representations concerning a customer's liabilities as may be allowed by State law.

11. Utilizing any instrument including a completion certificate, or using coercion, threats, intimidations or any means which may lead a customer to accept merchandise which is of a price, grade or quality different than that contracted for, which is defective in some respect or which is improperly installed.

2. Failing to maintain and preserve, as required by Section 6(b) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and by Rule 39 of the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, such records of the fiber content of textile fiber products as will show the information set forth on the stamps, tags, labels or other identification removed by respondent, together with the name or names of the person or persons from whom such textile fiber products were received, when substituting stamps, tags, labels or other identification pursuant to Section 5(b) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act.

It is further ordered, That respondent make no representations or engage in any course of conduct which is inconsistent with or detracts from the effectiveness of this order.

2. That respondent provide each person so described in subparagraph 1 above with a form returnable to respondent, fully stating an intention to be bound by and conform their sales practices to the requirements of this order and retain such form for a period of three (3) years after it is executed by said persons;

6. That respondent discontinue dealing with any person described in subparagraph 1 of this order who engages in acts or practices prohibited by this order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future parties employed or utilized by respondent engaged in the arranging or consummation of any extension of consumer credit or in any aspect of the preparation, creation or placing of advertising and that respondent secure a signed statement from each such party that he has read and understands such order. COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Lear Siegler, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Lear Siegler, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 3171 S. Bundy Dr., in the city of Santa Monica, State of California. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the formulating, development, offering for sale, sale and distribution of courses of instruction intended to prepare graduates thereof for entry-level employment in positions involving the commercial application of data processing, including computer programming and computer operations, and courses of instruction in other fields. Respondent's volume of business in said courses of instruction has been, and is, substantial.

PAR. 2. Respondent conducts its business of offering for sale, sale and distribution of courses of instruction through resident training facilities organized as branches of its unincorporated education division. Through said branch facilities, as aforesaid, respondent places into operation and implements a sales program whereby members of the general public by means of advertisements placed in broadcast and printed media of general circulation, and by means of brochures, pamphlets and other promotional literature disseminated through the United States mails or by other means, and through the use of salesmen and sales personnel, and by means of statements, representations, acts and practices as hereinafter set forth, are induced to sign contracts or enrollment agreements for a course of resident training of a stated length of time and for a stated tuition cost.

Respondent arranges or assists in the arrangement of credit and deferred payment terms for the financing of said executed contracts and accepts the revenues flowing therefrom or accepts the proceeds thereof.

In the manner aforesaid, respondent dominates, directs and controls, and accepts the pecuniary and other benefits flowing from the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent now causes, and for some time last past has caused, said aforementioned courses of instruction to be disseminated to said aforementioned branch facilities located in various States of the United States other than the State of origination of said course. Respondent transmits and receives, and causes to be transmitted and received, in the course of the sale of, distribution of and financing of its courses of instruction among and between the several States of the United States, retail installment contracts, credit applications, checks, monies or other commercial paper. Respondent maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in said courses of instruction in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, and to induce the purchase of its courses of instruction by members of the general public, respondent and its branch facilities and the salespersons at the branch facilities have disseminated, or caused the dissemination of, via the United States mails or other means, radio, television, newspaper, print media or other forms of advertising. In conjunction therewith, respondent and its branch facilities and the salespersons at the branch facilities have made certain statements and representations respecting the job placement percentage for graduates of respondent's courses, the assurance that respondent's graduates attain employment in positions for which they are trained, the types of positions and salaries for which graduates of respondent's courses will be qualified, the holding out or offering of employment and statistical data or numerical estimates dealing with the number of positions or job openings available or projected to be available in the field of electronic data processing.

Typical of the statements and representations in said advertisements, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

A. Radio and Television:

> The Apollo moonwalk project has created a job for you. All you have to have is the initiative to take your place in expanding aeronautical space field. The key is to train now as a computer programmer. * * * Incidently the job placement rate at Lear-Siegler Institute is now 98.4% upon graduation.

Free Nationwide Placement Assistance

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning, but not expressly set out herein, respondent and its branch facilities and the salespersons of the branch facilities have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. There is an urgent need or demand for all or most of respondent's graduates in positions for which respondent trains such persons.

2. Respondent had a reasonable basis from which to conclude that:
(a) there was at the time such representations were made, or
(b) would be at the time that persons then enrolling graduated from respondent's courses, an urgent need or demand for all or most of respondent's graduates in positions for which respondent trains such persons.

3. All that is necessary for the placement of respondent's graduates as programmers in scientific applications is the completion of respondent's course in computer programming.

4. The position of systems analyst is an entry-level employment objective of respondent's courses of instruction.

5. All or substantially all of respondent's graduates are able, on graduation, to secure the positions for which respondent has trained them.

6. Inquiries are being solicited for the ultimate purpose of offering employment to qualified applicants who will be trained in the skills required.

7. Respondent's graduates who seek employment in the field of electronic data processing do not find it necessary, in many instances, to seek said employment through sources other than respondent's placement office.

8. Respondent's graduates will qualify as experienced job applicants because of the computer training they receive while enrolled in respondent's courses.

9. The placement assistance furnished by respondent is free.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. At the time it was so represented there was not an urgent need or demand for all or most of respondent's graduates, in positions for which respondent trains such persons.

2. Respondent had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that:

(a) There was at the time such representations were made, or

(b) would be at the time that persons then enrolling graduated from respondent's courses,

an urgent need or demand for all or most of respondent's graduates in positions for which respondent trains such persons.

3. In many instances a college degree in a science or mathematical discipline is necessary for the placement of respondent's graduates as a programmer in scientific applications.

4. The position of systems analyst is not an entry-level employment objective of respondent's course of instruction.

5. All or substantially all of respondent's graduates are not able, on graduation, to secure the positions for which respondent has trained them.

6. Inquiries are not solicited for the ultimate purpose of offering employment to qualified applicants, but are solicited for the sole purpose of obtaining leads to prospective purchasers of respondent's courses of instruction.

7. Respondent's graduates who seek employment in the field of electronic data processing do find it necessary, in many instances, to seek said employment through sources other than respondent's placement office.

8. Respondent's graduates do not qualify as experienced job applicants because of the computer training they receive while enrolled in respondent's courses. Most employers interviewing respondent's graduates who are looking for experienced applicants are not willing to suspend the requirement of experience because an applicant has completed respondent's course of computer training.

9. The placement assistance furnished by respondent is not free, but rather included in the tuition cost of respondent's courses.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were, and are, false, misleading or deceptive acts or practices.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business, and in furtherance of their purpose of inducing the purchase of their courses by the general public, respondent and its branch facilities, directly or indirectly, have held out commissioned salespersons to be qualified or trained vocational counselors. Respondent thereby has falsely and deceptively represented that such persons were in a position to give disinterested advise to prospective students as to the best career choice for them, when in fact such persons had a direct or indirect economic interest in whether the applicants enrolled at respondent's branch facilities. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 8. Through the use of the aforesaid advertisements and otherwise, respondent has represented, directly and by implication, that persons completing respondent's course in computer operations or computer programming will thereby have attained the prerequisites necessary to qualify them for employment as operators or programmers at salaries within a specified range. Respondent failed to disclose in such advertising or through its sales representatives: (1) most of respondent's graduates from said courses who attained entry-level employment as computer operators or computer programmers earn salaries below or only slightly above the minimum salary figure used in the aforementioned specified salary ranges and (2) few, if any, of the graduates from said courses who attained entry-level employment as computer operators or computer programmers earn salaries at or near the maximum salary figure used in the aforementioned specified salary ranges. Knowledge of such facts would indicate the salary a graduate could expect to earn for the next several years. Thus, respondent has failed to disclose material facts, which if known to a consumer would be likely to affect his or her consideration of whether or not to purchase such courses of instruction. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 9. Through the use of the aforesaid advertisements and otherwise, respondent has represented, directly or by implication, that there was at the time of the representation or would be at the time of graduation from respondent's courses an urgent need or demand for respondent's graduates in positions for which respondent trains such persons. At the time of the said representations respondent had no reasonable basis adequate to support such representations. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 10. Respondent offered for sale courses of instruction intended to prepare graduates thereof for entry-level employment in positions involving the commercial application of data processing, including computer programming and computer operations, without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives: (1) the percentage of recent graduates of each school for each course offered, that were able to obtain employment in the positions for which they were trained; (2) the employers that hired any such recent graduates for each course offered; (3) the initial salary any recent graduates received for each course offered; and (4) the percentage of recent enrollees of each school for each course offered that have failed to complete their course of instruction. Knowledge of such facts would be an indication of the probability of graduating from respondent's courses and would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon graduation and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondent has failed to disclose material facts, which if known to a consumer, would be likely to affect his or her consideration of whether or not to purchase such courses of instruction. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

(a) Respondent as aforesaid, has been, and is now failing to disclose material facts while using other false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices, to induce persons to pay over to respondent substantial sums of money to purchase courses of instruction whose value to the said person for future employment in the jobs for which training was offered was virtually worthless. Respondent has received the said sums and has failed to offer to refund and has refused to refund such money to such purchasers of its courses.

The use by respondent of the aforesaid practices and its continued retention of said sums, as aforesaid, is an unfair act or practice.

(b) In the alternative and separate from subparagraph (a) above, respondent, who is in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of courses of vocational instruction, has been and is now, as aforesaid, failing to disclose material facts while using false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices, to induce persons to pay over to respondent substantial sums of money to purchase courses of instruction.

The effect of using these aforesaid acts and practices to secure substantial sums of money is or may be to substantially hinder, lessen, restrain or prevent competition between the respondent and the aforesaid competitors.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of its business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been, and now is in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of courses of instruction covering the same or similar subjects.

PAR. 13. The use by respondent of the aforesaid false, misleading, unfair or deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true, and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase respondent's courses by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having issued its complaint charging the respondent named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondent having been served with a copy of the complaint the Commission issued, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint issued, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, and having duly considered the comments filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34(b) of its rules now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Lear Siegler, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 3171 S. Bundy Dr., Santa Monica, Calif.

1. Representing, orally, in writing, or in any other manner, directly or by implication, that:

(a) The training offered to students enrolled in any computer programming course or any similar course of instruction offered by respondent is, by itself, sufficient to qualify a graduate thereof for the scientific application of computer programming; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the significance or importance of any course of instruction in qualifying any person for employment in a particular field of endeavor.

(b) The position of systems analyst is an entry level employment objective of any course of instruction offered by respondent; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the nature or type of position for which a graduate of any course of instruction will be qualified or in which such a graduate will achieve employment.

(c) Any school, location or facility at which respondent conducts business or offers any course of instruction has a stated placement rate, ratio or percentage, unless any such placement rate, ratio, or percentage is, in fact, the current and actual placement rate, ratio, or percentage at such school, location or facility, computed in the manner set forth in Paragraph 6(b) of Part I of this order.

(d) Persons completing respondent's courses in computer operations and computer programming will thereby have received the training and experience required to qualify them for employment at salaries earned by experienced operators and programmers; or representing, orally or in writing, that any amount of salary or other remuneration will or may be earned by any person completing any course offered by respondent, unless respondent in each and every instance has in good faith conducted a statistically valid survey which establishes the validity of any such claim at all times and in all locations where the representation is made.

(e) All or substantially all graduates of any course of instruction offered by respondent will upon graduation, obtain jobs in the positions for which they have been trained; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the ease with which graduates of any course will attain employment, or the effectiveness of any course of training or instruction in preparing or qualifying any graduate for employment.

(f) Inquiries are solicited for the purpose of offering employment to qualified applicants; or misrepresenting, orally or in writing, that employment is being held out or made available in any respect.

(g) (1) There is a substantial demand, or a demand of any size or proportion, for persons completing any of the courses offered by respondent in the areas of computer programming, computer operations or computer technology, or any other course in any field,

(2) or otherwise representing that opportunities for employment, or opportunities of any type or number are available to such persons, except as hereinafter provided in Paragraph 6(b) of this order. Provided, however, That respondent shall cease and desist making such representations unless the respondent in each and every instance:

(a) Until the passage of a base period to be determined pursuant to Paragraph 6(b) of Part I of this order, after the establishment of a new school location by respondent in any metropolitan area or county, whichever is larger, where it did not previously operate a school, and after the introduction by respondent of any new course of instruction at any school or location, shall:

(i) Have in good faith conducted a statistically valid survey which establishes the validity of any such representation at all times when the representation is made, and

(ii) have disclosed in immediate and conspicuous conjunction with any such representation, that:

> All representations of potential employment demand or opportunities for graduates of this school (course) are merely estimates. This school (course) has not been in operation long enough to indicate what, if any, actual employment may result upon graduation.

(b) After the passage of a base period to be determined pursuant to Paragraph 6(b) of Part I of this order, and until two years after the establishment of a new school location by respondent in any metropolitan area or county, whichever is larger, where it did not previously operate a school, and after the introduction by respondent of any new course of instruction at any school or location, shall:

(i) Make any such representations in the form and manner provided in Paragraph 6(b) of Part I of this order, and

(ii) disclose in immediate and conspicuous conjunction with any such representation, that:

> This school (course) has not been in operation long enough to indicate what, if any, actual employment may result upon graduation.

2. Using, orally, in writing or in any other manner, at any time statistical data or numerical estimates, derived from any source whatsoever, respecting present or future occupational demand or the growth of employment or the salaries earned in the field of electronic data processing, or in any other field or misrepresenting in any manner the meaning, application, relevancy or import of any statistical data or statistical projections of any type from any source.

3. Representing, orally, in writing or in any other manner, directly or by implication, that:

(b) Graduates of any course of instruction offered by respondent are not required to actively seek employment opportunities through sources other than respondent's placement office; or misrepresenting in any manner the requirements, duties, obligations or responsibilities imposed upon any person who seeks placement assistance; or misrepresenting in any manner the capabilities or functions of any placement office, referral service or any other type of assistance in obtaining employment for persons completing any said course.

(c) The placement assistance furnished by respondent is free or without cost; or misrepresenting in any manner the cost of any placement assistance or service.

(d) Graduates of any course of instruction offered by respondent in the field of electronic data processing will be regarded as equivalent to experienced job applicants as a result of the computer training received during the course of their enrollment; or misrepresenting in any manner the value, benefit, advantages or seniority which accrues to any graduate of any course of instruction offered by respondent.

4. Failing to keep adequate records which may be inspected by the Commission staff members upon reasonable notice:

(a) Which disclose the facts upon which any placement percentages or claims, or other representations of the type described in Paragraphs 1 and 6 of this order are based; and

(b) From which the validity of any placement percentages or claims, or other representations of the type described in Paragraphs 1 and 6 of this order can be determined.

5. Representing, orally, in writing or in any other manner, directly or by implication that any person engaged in connection with the promotion, offering for sale, sale, distribution or other solicitation of any course of instruction offered by respondent is a trained vocational counselor; or misrepresenting in any manner the training, experience, title, qualifications or status of any person engaged in connection with the promotion, offering for sale, sale, distribution or other solicitation of any course of instruction, or the import or meaning of any advice given by or any other statement made by any such person; or misrepresenting the nature of any encounter between respondent's employees and prospective students for respondent's courses of instruction.

6. Failing to send by certified mail, return receipt requested, to each person who shall contract with respondent for the purchase of any vocational school course of instruction, a written notice printed in at least ten (10) point type which shall disclose in substantially the same form as provided in Appendix A the following information and none other:

(a) The title "IMPORTANT INFORMATION" printed in boldface type across the top of the form;

(b) paragraphs reciting the following information to be computed in the manner and form set forth below for the applicable base period as hereinafter defined in subparagraph (6):

(1) For each different course of instruction offered by respondent for each school, location or facility at which respondent offers said courses of instruction;

the dates of the "base period" as computed in (b)(6);

the total number of students who graduated during such base period;

the numbers and percentages of total graduates who attained employment in the fields for which such graduates were trained. Such information must include an accurate description of each position in which such graduates attained employment.

(2) As to the same graduates used to compute the placement and employment statistics in (b)(1) above, a list of all employers which hired any such graduates during the base period, the number of such graduates hired by each firm or employer and the positions in which said graduates were hired.

(3) As to the same graduates used to compute the statistics in (b)(1) and (b)(2) above, the annual salary or income of said graduates. Such salary or income shall be classified by number of graduates attaining employment in each position described in (b)(1) at starting salaries expressed in consecutive categories of one thousand dollar amounts, in the form described in Appendix A.

(4) In compiling the foregoing information respondent shall not include any such graduates who respondent knows have not retained such positions for more than one month from the initial date of employment. Respondent may use information supplied to it by graduates, employers, or other sources and shall not be required to obtain such information independently.

(5) For each course of instruction for which respondent is required to disclose information pursuant to subparagraphs (b)(1) through (b)(4), the total number of students who enrolled in said course and were scheduled to graduate during the base period and the number and percentage of the enrollees in said course who failed to complete the course of instruction. The term, "failure to complete," shall encompass those enrollees who:

(A) Withdrew;

(B) failed the course (i.e., were academically terminated);

(C) did not complete the course within the base period in which they were scheduled to graduate and must take (a) make-up exam(s) in order to graduate;

(D) completed the course but did not receive a graduation certificate due to their failure to pay the balance of the tuition; or

(E) for any other reason, did not successfully complete the course within the base period in which they were scheduled to graduate.

(6) "Base Period" shall mean a six (6) month period beginning eight (8) months before and ending two (2) months before the date on which respondent must begin to disseminate the necessary statistics with respect to the base period.

There shall be a one month period immediately following the close of a base period during which respondent shall gather the necessary statistics with respect to said base period. These statistics will relate to those graduates who successfully completed the particular course of instruction during the base period and who obtained employment during the base period or the one month period thereafter. Respondent may not include in the computation of the statistics for the base period any persons who graduate during the month after the base period and who find jobs during said one month period. Such persons will be included in statistics for the base period during which they graduate.

At the end of the first month period immediately following the close of a base period, respondent shall be allowed a second one-month period to calculate and prepare for distribution the necessary statistics with respect to said base period.

On the first of each month, respondent shall begin to distribute statistics relating to the base period for the period beginning eight (8) months before and ending two (2) months before the first day of each month. Respondent shall continue to distribute said statistics until the first day of the next month and not thereafter.

For any six (6) month period during which respondent has no graduates for a particular course of instruction, respondent may continue to distribute the statistics with respect to the prior base period for said course of instruction until such time as respondent has graduates of said course of instruction and has had one month in which to gather statistics with respect to those graduates and a second month during which to calculate and prepare for distribution the necessary statistics.

Appendix B contains a sample base period calculation.

Provided, however, That subparagraph (b)(1) through (b)(6) above shall be inapplicable to any newly established school that respondent may establish in any metropolitan area or county, whichever is larger, where it did not previously operate a school, or to any course newly introduced by respondent, until such time as the new school or course has been in operation for the base period defined in subparagraph (b)(6) above. The following statement shall be included in such notice during such period:

> All representations of potential employment or salaries are merely estimates. This school (course) has not been in operation (offered) long enough to indicate what, if any, actual employment or salary may result upon graduation from this school (course).

After such time as the new school or course has been in operation for the base period (subparagraph (b)(6) above), and until two years after the establishment of a new school location in any metropolitan area or county, whichever is larger, where they did not previously operate a school, or after the introduction of any new course by respondent, the following statement shall be included in such notice:

> This school (course) has not been in operation (offered) long enough to indicate what, if any, actual employment or salary you may expect to achieve upon graduation from this school (course).

7. Contracting for any sale of any course of instruction in the form of a sales contract or other agreement which shall become binding prior to the purchaser affirming the enrollment contract by signing and returning to respondent the affirmation form specified in Paragraph 8, within ten (10) days of his receipt of that form. If the purchaser fails to affirm the enrollment contract within the ten (10) day period, respondent shall consider the contract null and void and within ten (10) business days of the expiration of the affirmation period shall refund all monies paid by the purchaser and cancel and return to the purchaser any evidence of indebtedness.

8. Failing to send by certified mail, return receipt requested, to each person who shall contract with respondent for the purchase of any course of instruction, a one page form, in duplicate that contains the following unsigned affirmation statement printed in bold face type of at least ten (10) points:

YOU ARE FREE TO CANCEL YOUR ENROLLMENT AND RECEIVE A FULL REFUND OF ANY MONIES YOU HAVE PAID TO THE SCHOOL BY NOT SIGNING OR MAILING THIS STATEMENT WITHIN TEN (10) DAYS. AT THE EXPIRATION OF THIS TEN (10) DAY PERIOD THE SCHOOL HAS TEN (10) BUSINESS DAYS TO SEND YOU YOUR REFUND (IF ANY) AND TO CANCEL AND RETURN TO YOU ANY EVIDENCE OF INDEBTEDNESS THAT YOU SIGNED. HOWEVER, IF YOU DO WANT TO ENROLL IN THE ABOVE-NAMED SCHOOL, YOU SHOULD SIGN YOUR NAME BELOW AND MAIL THIS STATEMENT TO THE SCHOOL WITHIN TEN (10) DAYS. KEEP THE DUPLICATE COPY FOR YOUR OWN RECORDS.

The affirmation form shall not contain any information or representation other than the information specified in this paragraph, and the form shall be mailed in the same envelope that is used to mail placement information as required by Paragraph 6. The affirmation form and said placement information shall be sent by respondent no later than the next day after the person shall have contracted for the purchase of any course of instruction. During such period provided for in this paragraph, respondent shall not initiate contact with such person other than that required by this paragraph.

9. Making any representations of any kind whatsoever in connection with the creating, advertising, promoting, offering for sale, sale or distribution of courses of study, training or instruction in the field of electronic data processing or any other course offered to the public in any field in commerce, for which respondent has no reasonable basis prior to the making or dissemination thereof.

10. Using course names and descriptions which either directly or by implication indicate that respondent's courses are designed to prepare students for certain entry-level positions when in fact a substantial number of graduates of such courses do not achieve such entry-level positions.

It is further ordered, That:

1. Respondent shall submit to the Commission, within five (5) days after the date this order is served on respondent (hereinafter "date of service"), a notarized affidavit, executed by respondent's corporate manager of regulatory agency relations, to the effect that respondent has made or has caused to be made a good faith search of documents that pertain to purchasers of respondent's computer courses of instruction, and that respondent, to the best of his knowledge, has previously or simultaneously with said affidavit submitted to the Commission the names of all computer course purchasers covered by this agreement.

2. Respondent or its designee shall make an inquiry in writing on the one hundred and twentieth (120th) day after the date of service, in the language, manner and form shown in Appendices C and D, via certified mail with return receipt requested and with a self-addressed, postage prepaid envelope, to the home address of each former purchaser of one of respondent's computer courses who appears on a list of such purchasers to be supplied to respondent by the Commission within sixty (60) days after the date of service.

4. On the two hundred and seventieth (270th) day after the date of service, respondent shall pay a refund, by check or otherwise, in an amount derived in accordance with Part III of this order, to each "eligible class member" determined in accordance with Part III of this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Tara Industries, Inc., a corporation, and James Mac Dermott, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Tara Industries, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business located at 554 New Brunswick Ave., Fords, N.J.

Respondent James Mac Dermott is an individual and an officer of Tara Industries, Inc. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of swimming pools and swimming pool accessories.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, the aforementioned swimming pools and swimming pool accessories, when sold, to be shipped from the places of business of their supplier in the United States to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State from which such shipments originate.

There is now, and has been, at all times mentioned herein, a substantial and continuous course of trade in said swimming pools and swimming pool accessories in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, respondents have made statements and representations with respect thereto in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation and by oral statements and representations made by respondents, their representatives, agents or employees with respect to the nature and limitations of their offers, their prices, their purchasers' savings and the quality of their products.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

* * * Unconditionally guaranteed for 10 years.

* * * Swimming pools are maintenance free.

* * * Usual selling price $6000.

* * * Reduced Prices * * * use of Pools as models or demonstrators.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the aforesaid statements and representations and others of similar import and meaning, but not specifically set out herein, respondents have represented and are now representing, directly or by implication that:

1. The offers set out in their advertisements are bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described and on the terms and conditions stated.

2. Their advertised offers of a swimming pool for $689 or $889 is a special or sale price and respondents' purchasers or potential purchasers are being offered a price for said pool which would effect a savings amounting to the difference between the special or sale price and some higher price at which such pool is usually and customarily sold.

3. Swimming pools sold by respondents are maintenance free.

4. Some swimming pools sold by respondents are unconditionally guaranteed for a period of ten years.

5. Certain swimming pools sold by respondents are usually sold at prices higher than those offered to potential purchasers and therefore respondents' purchasers are being offered a special or bargain price for said pools which would effect a savings amounting to the difference between the usual and customary price and the price at which the pools are being sold.

6. After the installation of their pool is completed, some purchasers who permit their pools to be used for demonstration and advertising purposes by respondents in selling pools to other persons would receive an allowance or reduction in price.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The offers set out in respondents' advertisements are not bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described at the prices or on the terms and conditions stated but are made for the purpose of obtaining leads to persons interested in purchasing said pools. After obtaining such leads, respondent Mac Dermott, respondents' salesmen or representatives call upon such persons and disparage respondents' advertised swimming pools and otherwise discourage the purchase thereof and attempt to sell and frequently do sell different and more expensive swimming pools.

2. The advertised swimming pools are not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices and savings are not thereby afforded to purchasers from respondents' usual and customary selling price.

3. The swimming pools sold by respondents are not maintenance free.

4. The swimming pools sold by respondents are not warranted in every respect without conditions or limitations for a period of ten years or any other period of time. Such warranty or guarantee as may be provided is subject to numerous terms, conditions and limitations with respect to the duration of the warranty or guarantee. The purchaser is not informed of the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder until after the installation of the swimming pool.

5. Certain swimming pools sold by respondents have not usually been sold at prices higher than those offered to potential purchasers. Respondents use the stated higher price to mislead potential purchasers into the belief that they are receiving a special or discount price. Respondents do not have a usual and customary selling price for these pools and the prices at which these pools are sold is often substantially below the stated price and varies from purchaser to purchaser depending upon the resistance of the particular purchaser.

6. After the installation of the swimming pool sold by respondents is completed, the purchaser's pool will not, in most instances, be used for demonstration or advertising purposes by respondents. As a result of allowing, or agreeing to allow their pools to be used as demonstrators or models, purchasers are not granted reduced prices or allowances.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Four hereof, were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business, and in furtherance of a sales program to induce the purchase of their swimming pools and swimming pool accessories, respondents and their salesmen or representatives have engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices:

In a substantial number of instances, through the use of the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices set forth in Paragraphs Four through Six above, respondents or their salesmen or representatives have induced purchasers to sign contracts upon initial contact by not giving the purchaser sufficient time to carefully consider the purchase and consequences thereof.

PAR. 8. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' swimming pools and swimming pool accessories by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, and as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of swimming pools and other products of the same general kind and nature as sold by respondents.

PAR. 10. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Tara Industries, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business located at 554 New Brunswick Ave., Fords, N.J.

Respondent James Mac Dermott is an individual and is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of said corporation and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents, Tara Industries, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and James Mac Dermott, individually and as an officer of the aforesaid corporation and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, distribution or installation of swimming pools or any other product, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Advertising or offering for sale any products for the purpose of obtaining leads or prospects for the sale of different products unless the advertised products are capable of adequately performing the function for which they are offered, and respondents maintain an adequate and readily available stock of said products

2. Using any advertising, sales plan or procedure involving the use of false, deceptive or misleading statements or representations designed to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of other merchandise.

3. Representing directly or indirectly that any products or services are offered for sale when such is not a bona fide offer to sell said products or services.

4. Disparaging any product, installation or service which is advertised or offered for sale by respondents.

5. Representing, directly or by implication, that any price for a swimming pool or other product or service sold by respondents is a special, preseason or sale price, when such price does not constitute a significant reduction from an established selling price at which such swimming pool, product or service has been sold in substantial quantities by respondents in the recent, regular course of business.

6. Representing, in any manner, that the swimming pools or any other products sold by respondents are maintenance free or require no periodic servicing or inspection.

7. Representing directly or indirectly that any of respondents' products, installations or services are warranted or guaranteed, unless the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder are clearly and conspicuously disclosed in immediate conjunction therewith; and unless respondents promptly and fully perform all of their obligations and requirements, directly or impliedly represented, under the terms of each such warranty or guarantee.

8. Representing that by purchasing any merchandise, purchasers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and respondents' former price unless such merchandise has been sold or offered for sale at retail in good faith for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent, regular course of business.

9. Misrepresenting, in any manner, the amount of savings available to purchasers or prospective purchasers of any merchandise sold or offered for sale by respondents.

10. Representing, directly or indirectly, that any price is reduced from respondents' former price if records customarily maintained by respondents fail to establish that such price constitutes a significant reduction from the price at which such merchandise has been sold in substantial quantities or offered for sale in good faith for a reasonably substantial period of time, by respondents in the recent, regular course of their business.

11. Misrepresenting, directly or indirectly, that the pool of any of respondents' purchasers or prospective purchasers will be used for any type of advertising, demonstration or model or that as a result of such use, respondents' purchasers or prospective purchasers will be granted reduced prices or will receive a discount.

12. Failing to furnish the buyer with a fully completed receipt or copy of any contract pertaining to such sales at the time of its execution, which is in the same language, e.g., Spanish, as that principally used in the oral sales presentation and which shows the date of the transaction and contains the name and address of the seller, and in immediate proximity to the space reserved in the contract for the signature of the buyer or on the front page of the receipt if a contract is not used and in boldface type of a minimum size of 10 points, a statement in substantially the following form:

When such obligations are inconsistent, respondents can apply to the Commission for relief from this provision with respect to contracts executed in the State in which such different obligations are required. The Commission, upon showing, shall make such modifications as may be warranted in the premises.

It is further ordered, That respondents maintain records, to be furnished upon request of the Federal Trade Commission or its staff, which disclose the factual basis for any representations or statements made with respect to any prohibition or affirmative disclosure requirement of this order, including, but not limited to, a copy of each advertisement in which a swimming pool is offered for sale at a specified price, the volume of sales of such advertised pool at the advertised price and the name and address of each purchaser of such advertised pool.

It is further ordered, That in any advertisement for swimming pools, respondents shall disclose the material composition of the major structural components of said swimming pool including pool walls, deck, supporting members, rails and liner. IN THE MATTER OF

SIMEON MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, ET AL.

Docket 8996. Order, Oct. 7, 1975

Denial of request by individual respondent Darrel P. Simpson that initial decision be set aside as to him, but without prejudice to his filing a motion with supporting affidavit no later than Nov. 24, 1975.

Appearances

Cooper, Cooper and Scarpulla*, San Francisco, Calif. for C.M. Norcal, Inc., HCG Weight Clinics Foundation, Peter J. Marengo, III and Joseph Costa.

ORDER DENYING WITHOUT PREJUDICE REQUEST TO SET ASIDE INITIAL DECISION AS TO ONE RESPONDENT

On Jan. 7, 1975, the administrative law judge filed an initial decision as to three respondents, J. William Byrd, Medical Weight Loss, Inc., and Darrel P. Simpson. The decision was predicated on their failure to answer the complaint. On Mar. 7, 1975, the Commission stayed the effective date of the initial decision as to the three respondents until further order of the Commission.[1]

By letters to Charles A. Tobin dated Feb. 25, 1975, and Mar. 13, 1975, counsel for respondent Simpson asserted that Mr. Simpson had not been served with the complaint and that, at the time he was served with the first initial decision, he was totally unaware of the contents of the complaint.

[1] The law judge filed an initial decision as to the remaining respondents on June 18, 1975. Respondents and complaint counsel have filed cross-appeals from the second initial decision and oral argument has been scheduled for Oct. 9, 1975.

Unsworn, second-hand allegations, however, do not warrant the setting aside of an initial decision. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That respondent Simpson's request that the initial decision, filed on Jan. 7, 1975, be set aside as to him, be, and it hereby is, denied without prejudice to the filing of a motion, accompanied by an affidavit by Mr. Simpson, in support of the motion, no later than Nov. 24, 1975.

IN THE MATTER OF

PORTER & DIETSCH, INC., ET AL.

Docket 9047. Order, Oct. 7, 1975

Granting of respondents' motion for issuance of corrective news release disclosing complaint was issued subject to caveat.

Appearances

For the respondents: Albert A. Corretta, Browne, Beveridge, DeGrandi and Kline, Wash., D.C. for Porter & Dietsch, Inc. and pro se for Pay N' Save Corporation.

ORDER GRANTING RESPONDENTS' MOTION FOR ISSUANCE OF CORRECTIVE NEWS RELEASE

The administrative law judge has certified an unopposed motion filed by respondents Porter & Dietsch, Inc.; William H. Fraser; Kelly Ketting Furth, Inc.; and Joseph Furth for the issuance of a corrective news release.

The news release published shortly after the complaint was issued failed to include the usual caveat that the Commission issues a complaint when it "has reason to believe" that the law has been violated and a proceeding is in the public interest, and that the issuance of a complaint simply marks the beginning of a formal proceeding in which the allegations will be ruled upon after a public hearing.

Respondents move that a corrective news release disclosing that the complaint was issued subject to the above-indicated caveat be promptly published. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid motion be, and it hereby is, granted, and that the Office of Public Information be directed to issue promptly a press release disclosing that the earlier release erroneously failed to include the following caveat:

> The FTC issues a complaint when it has "reason to believe" that the law has been violated and that a proceeding is in the public interest. Such action simply marks the beginning of a formal proceeding in which the allegations will be ruled upon after a public hearing.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that FMC Corporation, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. For the purposes of this complaint and the order attached hereto, the following definitions of terms shall apply:

(1) "Pesticide" refers to (a) any substance or mixture of substances, including insecticides, intended for preventing, destroying, repelling or mitigating any pest, and (b) any substance or mixture of substances intended for use as a plant regulator, defoliant or desiccant.

(2) "Insecticide" refers to any substance or mixture of substances intended for preventing, destroying repelling or mitigating any insects which may be present in any environment whatsoever.

(3) "Phosphate insecticides" refers to those insecticides belonging to the organic phosphorous chemical class.

(4) "Labeling" refers to all labels and other written, printed, or graphic matter (a) accompanying the pesticide at any time, or (b) to which reference is made on the label or in literature accompanying the pesticide where warnings, cautions, directions or limitations for the pesticide's use appear.

PAR. 2. FMC Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 1105 Coleman Ave., in the city of San Jose, State of California.

PAR. 3. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, through its Agricultural Chemicals Division (formerly Niagara Chemical Division), engaged in the production, formulation, advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of pesticides designated as "Furadan," "Thiodan," "Ethion," "Sinox," "Polyram" and other pesticide products to formulators, distributors, retailers, for resale to the public, and to the public.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent now causes, and for some time last past has caused the said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in one State of the United States to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in said products in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its said business, and for the purposes of inducing the purchase of Furadan, Thiodan, Ethion, Sinox, Polyram, and other pesticide products, respondent has made, and is now making, alone or in cooperation with others, orally or in writing, numerous statements and representations concerning the safety and efficacy of said products, which are disseminated in advertisements in print and broadcast media, in promotional materials and by other means. Such statements and representations include, but are not limited to, the following:

Furadan:

(1) Safe to use.

(2) Furadan granules are safe to handle.

(3) Furadan * * * is safe to handle in comparison to other products.

(4) Furadan is easy to use * * * Safer for the operator, too.

(5) Furadan * * * is less hazardous than most other rootworm insecticides.

(6) Furadan presents less hazards to the user than many pesticides commonly used today.

(7) Fear no weevil * * * Use Furadan * * * And fear no more.

(8) Furadan Toxicity. Furadan 10 Granules have been found less hazardous than many other accepted pesticides in common use. Furadan is not readily absorbed through the skin, as shown by the dermal LD50 (10, 500mg/kg) rating. Care should be taken, however, to avoid rough handling which can powder material off the granules and create a slight hazard. Even so, a wide margin exists between the dose that will cause mild symptoms and that which will cause serious illness. The effects, also, are spontaneously reversible in a few hours and there is no cumulative toxicity.

Thiodan:

(1) Thiodan-safe to use.

(2) Thiodan * * * has a remarkable record of safety.

(3) Thiodan controls them all — safely.

(4) Thiodan is preferred because of its moderate toxicity - not like hazardous phosphate compounds * * *

(5) * * * low toxicity to bees and other insect predators.

(6) Growers can expect to use Thiodan without severe damage to bees * * *

(7) Easy to use * * * easy to handle.

(8) Thiodan is itself classed as "moderately toxic." When used in combination with Parathion sprays, normal safe handling precautions should be followed.

Ethion:

(1) Ethion when used in accordance with directions, is safe to the applicator.

(2) Ethion formulations are safer to use than many other pesticides.

Sinox:

(1) SINOX PE is a pre-emergence spray material which is both safe and highly effective * * *

Polyram:

(1) Polyram * * * A safe, sure fungicide for dependable, consistent control of * * * blight.

(2) Polyram * * * It's non-hazardous and requires no special clothing or safety equipment.

(3) Polyram is safe to use * * *.

PAR. 6. Through the use of statements and representations as alleged in Paragraph Five hereof, respondent has represented and is now representing, directly or by implication, that:

(1) Furadan, Thiodan, Ethion, Sinox, Polyram and other pesticide products are safe, non-toxic, hazard-free products.

(2) Thiodan is relatively more safe in all respects than all phosphate insecticide products on the market.

(3) Furadan and Ethion are relatively more safe in all respects than many or most other insecticide products on the market.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

(1) Furadan, Thiodan, Ethion, Sinox, Polyram and other pesticide products are not safe, non-toxic, hazard-free products as represented by respondent.

(2) Thiodan is not relatively more safe in all respects than all phosphate insecticide products on the market.

(3) Furadan and Ethion are not relatively more safe in all respects than many or most other insecticide products on the market.

Therefore, the statements and representations as alleged in Paragraph Five hereof were, and are, deceptive.

PAR. 8. By making statements and representations, alone or in cooperation with others, orally or in writing, which appear in advertisements in print or broadcast media, in promotional material and by other means, about Furadan, Thiodan, Ethion, Sinox, Polyram and other pesticide products in a manner which is inconsistent with or disregards warnings, cautions, limitations and instructions for use found in labeling, respondent negates the import and purposes of and detracts from the effectiveness of such warnings, cautions, limitations or instructions.

Therefore, the advertisements, other promotional materials, acts and practices which contain the statements and representations referred to in Paragraph Eight above are unfair or deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the further course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has made statements and representations, alone or in cooperation with others, orally or in writing, which appear in advertisements in print and broadcast media, in promotional material or by other means, about Furadan, Thiodan, Ethion, Sinox, Polyram and other pesticide products without disclosing that such products are hazardous. Knowledge of the hazards associated with the use of such products would enable and encourage consumers to exercise the proper degree of care in using them.

Thus, respondent has failed to disclose material facts which, if known to consumers, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase, and how to properly use, such products. Therefore, advertisements, promotional materials, acts or practices, which fail to disclose the aforesaid material facts, are unfair or deceptive.

PAR. 10. Respondent has made statements and representations, alone or in cooperation with others, orally or in writing, which appear in advertisements in print or broadcast media, in promotional material, or by other means, which do not delineate the circumstances and conditions under which they are not universally accurate and do not define the objects of comparison when they are phrased in comparative terms. Such statements and representations have the capacity and tendency to mislead consumers regarding the safety or efficacy of the products.

Therefore, the advertisements, promotional material, acts or practices which contain such statements or representations are deceptive or unfair.

PAR. 11. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid and at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of insecticide products of the same general kind and nature.

PAR. 12. The use by respondent of the said deceptive or unfair advertisements, acts or practices has had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the said statements and representations were and are true and induce them into the purchase of substantial quantities of Furadan, Thiodan, Ethion, Sinox, Polyram, and other pesticide products by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 13. The aforesaid acts or practices of respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constituted and now constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices and unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent FMC Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 200 E. Randolph Dr., Chicago, Ill.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That respondent, FMC Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, department or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of any pesticide product with precautionary labeling which contains any active pesticidal ingredient(s) presently marketed by respondent or currently being field tested by respondent and which is intended for use by custom applicators and commercial growers to protect animals or food, forage, field or fiber crops by virtue of the capacity of its active ingredient(s) to kill pests (sometimes referred to hereinafter as "such products"), in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing, directly or by implication, by print or broadcast advertising, by other promotional material, or by sales representatives' oral statements, that such products are absolutely or unqualifiedly safe, non-toxic or free of hazard for any use registered under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, as amended (hereinafter FIFRA) or any other approved use based upon evidence filed in connection with registration under FIFRA.

Provided, however, That for purposes of enforcing Paragraph I A of this order any advertisement, statement, claim or representation that such products may be employed for a crop or plant use registered under FIFRA, or any other approved use based upon evidence filed in connection with registration under FIFRA shall not be deemed a violation of this order; Provided, further, That this exception shall be effective only until such time as a trade regulation rule covering the advertising and promotion of such products subject to this order and containing terms at least as onerous as Paragraph I A of this order becomes final and effective.

II

With respect to representations not covered by the provisions of Section I of this order, It is ordered, That FMC Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, department or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of such products, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing, directly or by implication, by print or broadcast advertising, by other promotional material, or by sales representatives' oral statements, that such products are absolutely safe, non-toxic or free of hazard to human beings, warm-blooded animals, birds, fish, beneficial insects, or the environment.

III

It is further ordered, That respondent, FMC Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, department or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of such products, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from disseminating or causing the dissemination of:

A. Any print advertising or print promotional material which contains any use or efficacy claim or any environmental or safety claim for any such products unless it clearly and conspicuously includes in such print advertising or print promotional material the following statement:

STOP! ALL PESTICIDES CAN BE HARMFUL TO HEALTH AND THE ENVIRONMENT IF MISUSED. READ THE LABEL CAREFULLY AND USE ONLY AS DIRECTED.

B. Any broadcast advertisement more than 30 seconds in length which contains any use or efficacy claim or any environmental or safety claim for any such products unless it clearly and conspicuously includes the following statement:

ALL PESTICIDES CAN BE HARMFUL TO HEALTH AND THE ENVIRONMENT IF MISUSED. READ THE LABEL CAREFULLY AND USE ONLY AS DIRECTED.

C. Any broadcast advertisement of 30 seconds or less in length which contains any use or efficacy claim or any environmental or safety claim for any such products unless it clearly and conspicuously includes the following statement:

ALL PESTICIDES CAN BE HARMFUL. READ THE LABEL USE AS DIRECTED.

Provided, That in television advertisements of 10 seconds or less in length for any such products which contain no direct representations concerning product safety, the requirements of the term "clearly and conspicuously" shall in all cases be met by including the above statement in the video portion of the advertisement.

Provided, however, That for purposes of enforcing Paragraph III of this order any advertisement, statement, claim or representation that such products may be employed for a crop or plant use registered under FIFRA, or any other approved use based upon evidence filed in connection with registration under FIFRA shall not be deemed sufficient to require the disclosure of any statement otherwise required under the provisions of Paragraph III; Provided, further, That this exception shall be limited to advertisements which promote the respondent's corporate image, which only incidentally promote the sale or distribution of such products and which are published or disseminated for publication by respondent's corporate headquarters' offices in conjunction with respondent's other nonpesticide products.

IV

Nothing in this order shall be construed to apply to scientific articles published in recognized scientific or agricultural journals or government publications, or reprints thereof, or representations (other than print advertising or other promotional material) before public or governmental forums such as public hearings, scientific meetings, or to governmental agencies, agents, or employees responsible for the regulation, testing, or dissemination of information concerning pesticide products covered by this order.

V

It is further ordered, That nothing in this order shall prohibit the dissemination of product labels (as defined by Section 2(p)(1) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, as amended), or reproductions thereof.

VI

It is further ordered, That should the Federal Trade Commission promulgate a trade regulation rule or industry guide governing the advertising or promotion of products subject to this order, then any pertinent less comprehensive or less restrictive provisions of such rule or guide shall automatically replace any comparable provisions set forth herein which are effective on the date that such rule or guide becomes final and effective.

VII

It is further ordered, That the respondent forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of the operating departments of respondent's agricultural chemical division and any other operating division engaged in the manufacture, sale, advertising, promotion or distribution of products subject to this order, and to all present and future employees of such operating divisions responsible for the advertising, promotion, distribution or sale of such products.

VIII

It is further ordered, That the respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale, resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other changes in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

IX

It is further ordered, That respondent corporation shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the provisions of this order.

X

It is further ordered, That this order shall become effective upon service.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Wilsons House of Suede, a corporation, and Jerrold A. Wilson, Brian Wilson, and Jeffery Wilson, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Wilsons House of Suede is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California with its principal office and place of business located at 9844 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, Calif.

Respondents Jerrold A. Wilson, Brian Wilson, and Jeffery Wilson are individuals and officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in manufacturing, advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of used and leather wearing apparel.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have caused, and now cause, their said suede and leather wearing apparel when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of California to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States, and maintain and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their suede and leather wearing apparel, respondents have made numerous statements and representations in advertisements in newspapers of interstate circulation and on interstate television respecting the price of their merchandise and the savings afforded purchasers thereof.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

> UP TO 50% OFF The largest selection in the world is at Wilson's! A fine collection of coats have been marked down at up to 50% off. RIGHT NOW!* * * Now is the time to SALE IS NOW ON! "Last Year's Prices on This Year's Coats!" * * * This is a "special purchase," made last year by Wilson's, of the finest suedes and leathers * * * and is now available for creating the latest styles in coats and jackets.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning, but not expressly set out herein, respondents have represented, directly or by implication:

1. Through the use of the word "SALE," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, that suede and leather wearing apparel could be purchased at special or reduced prices, and purchasers were thereby afforded savings from respondents' regular selling prices.

2. That purchasers of the merchandise referred to would realize a savings of the stated amount from the actual, bona fide price at which respondents offered or sold said merchandise to the public in the recent, regular course of business on a regular basis for a reasonably substantial period of time in the trade area where the representation was made.

3. That the represented reduced prices were available only during the limited period of the sale and would be returned to respondent's presale bona fide offering price or changed to some price substantially higher than the allegedly reduced price, immediately after the completion of the sale.

4. That all styles of wearing apparel pictured in an advertisement were offered at the savings indicated in that particular advertisement or at a "Sale" price.

5. That a substantial supply of suede and leather wearing apparel was available in respondent's stores throughout a stated range of savings, such as "up to 50% off" or "marked 20% to 40% down."

6. That the facility or facilities at which respondents' merchandise was being offered for sale or sold were primarily "warehouses" or "factory showrooms."

7. That all merchandise in respondents' "warehouse" was being offered at reduced prices.

8. That purchasers of suede and leather wearing apparel would realize a savings because respondents manufactured all such apparel in their own factory, or had made a special purchase of materials.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' merchandise was not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices. To the contrary, the price respondents regularly advertised and their so-called advertised "sale" price were substantially identical and were used to mislead prospective customers into believing there was a saving from a bona fide regular selling or offering price.

2. The purchasers of the merchandise referred to did not realize a savings of the stated amount from the actual, bona fide price at which respondents offered or sold said merchandise to the public in the recent regular course of business on a regular basis for a reasonably substantial period of time in the trade area where the representation was made.

3. Many of the represented reduced prices were not returned to respondents' presale bona fide offering prices, nor changed to some prices substantially near said "regular prices." Thus, the period during which the "reduced" prices were available on many items was not limited to the period of the sale.

4. All styles of wearing apparel pictured in various advertisements were not subject to the savings indicated in the particular advertisement, nor to a "sale" price.

5. A substantial supply of suede and leather wearing apparel was not available in respondents' stores throughout the stated range of savings.

6. The facility or facilities at which said merchandise was being offered for sale or sold were not used primarily for the storage or warehousing of merchandise used by respondents' retail business. Nor did said facilities constitute primarily a "factory showroom" or adjunct to respondents' factory for the purpose of display to retail and wholesale purchasers. Instead, respondents sold or offered their merchandise for sale in facilities regularly used for the display and sale of said merchandise at retail.

7. All merchandise in respondents' "warehouse" was not being offered at reduced prices. Instead, only a minimal number of styles was being so offered.

8. Respondents did not manufacture all suede and leather wearing apparel in their own factory, nor had they made a special purchase of materials which resulted in a lower offering price. Thus, these factors could not enable purchasers to realize a savings.

Therefore, the statements as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and are now, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms, and individuals, in the sale of products of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 8. The use by respondents of aforesaid false, misleading, and deceptive statements, representations, and practices, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and the respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Wilsons House of Suede is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with its office and principal place of business located at 9844 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, Calif.

Respondents Jerrold A. Wilson, Brian Wilson and Jeffery Wilson are officers of said corporation. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and their principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That respondents Wilsons House of Suede, a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Jerrold A. Wilson, Brian Wilson, and Jeffery Wilson, individually and as officers of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the manufacturing, advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of suede and leather wearing apparel, or any other product or service in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Misrepresenting in any manner, the amount of savings available to purchasers of respondents' merchandise, or the amount by which the price of merchandise has been reduced, either from the price at which it has been usually and customarily sold by respondents in the recent regular course of business, or from the price from which it has been usually and customarily sold at retail in the trade area where the representation is made, or from the price at which such merchandise has been offered for sale in good faith for a reasonably substantial period of time, by respondents in the recent, regular course of their business.

2. Misrepresenting, directly or by implication, that the sale of suede and leather wearing apparel or other merchandise at certain prices, terms or conditions is limited to specific days or periods of time.

3. Using the word "sale" or any other words of similar import and meaning in advertising or other promotional materials containing nonsale items without clearly and conspicuously revealing in immediate conjunction with said representations that nonsale items are contained therein and distinctively identifying said nonsale items.

4. Using the words "Up to 50% Off" or "Half-off Sale" or "marked down 20% to 40%" or any other words representing a range of price reductions, unless a reasonably substantial number of items of sale merchandise are available throughout said range.

5. Using the words "warehouse," "factory showroom," or any other words of similar import and meaning; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the nature or status of respondents' business, or the size, description or classification of any of respondents' physical facilities.

6. Using the words "Total Warehouse Sale" or "Warehouse Sale," or any other words of similar import and meaning; or misrepresenting, directly or by implication, that all or a substantial amount of respondents' warehouse stock is offered for sale.

7. Representing that purchasers of respondents' merchandise will realize a savings because respondents manufacture such merchandise in their own factory, or have made a special purchase of materials, or because of any other claimed unique or special method of doing business, event, or situation; unless respondents' business records and/or other information available to respondents establish and show the basis of such representations.

8. Representing, directly or by implication, through the use of terms such as "Sale," "Savings" or in any other manner, that any price is reduced from respondents' former price unless respondents' business records establish and show that such price is not an inconsequential reduction from the price at which such merchandise has been sold or offered for sale in good faith for a reasonably substantial period of time, by respondents in the recent, regular course of their business.

9. Failing to maintain adequate records for at least two years from the date of the publication of the advertisement (a) which disclose the facts upon which any savings claims, including former pricing claims, and similar representations of the type described in Paragraphs 1, 4, 7, and 8 of this order are based, and (b) from which the validity of any savings claims, including former pricing claims and similar representations of the type described in Paragraphs 1, 4, 7 and 8 of this order can be determined.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondents named herein promptly notify the Commission in the event of both (1) the discontinuance of their present business or employment and (2) of their affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondents' current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which they are engaged as well as a description of their duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That respondent corporation, its successors and assigns, deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future employees of respondents engaged in the preparation, creation or placing of advertising for the offering for sale, sale or distribution of suede and leather wearing apparel and other merchandise, and that respondents secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale, resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other substantive change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the parties named in the caption hereof and more particularly described below and sometimes referred to hereinafter as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts, and the implementing regulation promulgated under the Truth in Lending Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

1. IN THE MATTER OF

TYSONS CORNER REGIONAL SHOPPING CENTER, ET AL.

MODIFYING ORDER IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket 8886. Decision, June 10, 1975-Modifying Order, Oct. 21, 1975

Order modifying an earlier order dated June 10, 1975, 85 F.T.C. 987, 40 F.R. 36560, issued against a New York City department store chain by expanding the order with the addition of Paragraph III(C) to permit respondent to negotiate to include agreements in its shopping center leases which would provide that a W&J Sloane furniture specialty store shall be the only tenant in the center primarily engaged in the sale of furniture, home furnishings, and related accessories; and by modifying Paragraph IV(B) to allow respondent to limit distribution of copies of the order to those developers of shopping centers in which respondent is a tenant operating a store containing 50,000 square feet or more.

ORDER REOPENING PROCEEDING AND MODIFYING ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

By petition dated Oct. 2, 1975, City Stores Company has requested the Commission to modify its order of June 10, 1975, in two respects, described below. The Bureau of Competition has filed an answer objecting to the requested modification.

Respondent requests initially that a new subparagraph III(C) be added which would permit it to negotiate to include agreements in its shopping center leases which would provide that a W&J Sloane furniture specialty store shall be the only tenant in the center primarily engaged in the sale of furniture, home furnishings, and related accessories. (Such clauses would not prevent the competitive sale of these items by tenants such as department stores for whom such sale was not their principal activity.)

We agree with respondent's contention that the agreements it contemplates were not at issue in the litigated case, and under the circumstances the requested narrow modification is appropriate. It should be noted that this change is not intended to signify the Commission's approval of such agreements, but merely to exempt them from coverage by the order in this matter; in view of the limited scope of the adjudicative proceedings. Given appropriate evidence of anticompetitive consequences the Commission will not hesitate to challenge shopping center lease agreements which provide for exclusive rights of occupancy, (e.g., People's Drug Stores, Inc., File No. 721 0090, agreement containing order to cease and desist; placed on public record for comment, Oct. 5, 1975).

City Stores also requests that the order be modified to require that copies of the order be provided only to developers of shopping centers in which City Stores operates stores larger than 50,000 square feet. Respondent points out that it operates more than 100 stores of size below 50,000 square feet. We agree it is doubtful that the practices condemned by the order are likely to exist as to these stores, and notification of the centers in which they exist would, therefore, seem of slight possible value and might indeed produce confusion as well as modest but unnecessary expense. For the foregoing reasons we will make the second requested modification. This change will not, of course, obviate respondent's obligation to ensure that practices prohibited by the order are not committed in any shopping center in which it is a tenant. Therefore,

It is ordered, That the proceedings be reopened and that the order to cease and desist issued June 10, 1975, be modified by the addition of the following Paragraph III(C):

It is further ordered, That this order shall not prohibit respondent from negotiating to include, including, carrying out, or enforcing an agreement or provision in any agreement which provides that a W&J Sloane furniture specialty store operated by respondent in a shopping center shall be the only tenant in the shopping center primarily engaged in the sale of furniture, home furnishings, and related accessories.

It is further ordered, That Paragraph IV(B) of the order to cease and desist issued June 10, 1975, be modified to read:

Within thirty (30) days after this order becomes final, notify each developer of shopping centers in which respondent is a tenant operating a store containing 50,000 square feet or more of floor space of this order by providing each such developer with a copy thereof by registered certified mail.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents Stevens Bedding Warehouse, Inc., Stevens Northern Bedding, Inc., Stevens Devon Bedding, Inc., Stevens Brookfield Bedding, Inc., Stevens Morton Grove Bedding, Inc., Stevens Harlem Bedding, Inc., Stevens Western Bedding, Inc., Stevens Wabash Bedding, Inc., Stevens Madison Bedding, Inc., Stevens Calumet City Bedding, Inc., Stevens Park Forest Bedding, Inc., Stevens Waukegan Bedding, Inc., Stevens Wheeling Bedding, Inc., Stevens Marquette Bedding, Inc., Stevens Bolingbrook Bedding, Inc., are corporations organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with their principal office and place of business located at 4435 S. Oakley Ave., in the City of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent Norton Baran is an officer and stockholder of said corporate respondents. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondents including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondents.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of home furnishing products, including, but not limited to bedding, sleeper sofas, and related case and upholstered furniture, to the public.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have disseminated and now disseminate, and have caused and now cause the dissemination of advertisements by various means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, including but not limited to advertisements for said products by use of the United States mails, advertisements in newspapers of interstate circulation, advertisements in television and radio broadcasts of interstate circulation, for the purpose of inducing and which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said products in or affecting commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above quoted statements and representations and others of similar import and meaning, but not expressly set out herein, with respect to and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their merchandise, respondents and their salesmen, agents and representatives have represented and are now representing directly or by implication, that:

1. Respondents' products are being offered for sale at special or reduced prices, and that savings are thereby afforded to purchasers from respondents' regular selling price.
2. Respondents' advertised offer is made for a limited time only.
3. Purchasers of respondents' merchandise would realize at least a stated minimum amount of savings from respondents' regular selling prices.
4. Purchasers of respondents' products would receive free gifts or bonuses with the purchase of respondents' advertised products.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' products are not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices, and savings are not thereby afforded purchasers because of reductions from respondents' regular selling prices. The prices advertised by respondents are the usual and customary purchase prices of the products.
2. Respondents' advertised offers are not made for a limited time only. Said merchandise is advertised regularly at the represented prices and on the terms and conditions therein stated.
3. Purchasers of respondents' merchandise do not realize stated minimum amounts of savings over the price at which said merchandise has been sold at retail by the respondents in their recent, regular course of business. The stated percentage of savings constitutes an implied comparison between the manufacturers' suggested retail prices for such merchandise and respondents' usual and customary selling prices.

4. Purchasers of respondents' products do not receive free gifts or bonuses with their purchases of advertised home furnishings and bedding products.

Therefore, the statements, representations and practices as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. The use by respondents of the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and their failure to disclose material facts as aforesaid, has had, and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and complete, and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase said home furnishings and bedding products offered by respondents by reason of said erroneous and mistaken beliefs.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in commerce with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale and distribution of home furnishings, bedding products and service of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Chicago Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondents Stevens Bedding Warehouse, Inc., Stevens Northern Bedding, Inc., Stevens Devon Bedding, Inc., Stevens Brookfield Bedding, Inc., Stevens Morton Grove Bedding, Inc., Stevens Harlem Bedding, Inc., Stevens Western Bedding, Inc., Stevens Wabash Bedding, Inc., Stevens Madison Bedding, Inc., Stevens Calumet City Bedding, Inc., Stevens Park Forest Bedding, Inc., Stevens Waukegan Bedding, Inc., Stevens Wheeling Bedding, Inc., Stevens Marquette Bedding, Inc., and Stevens Bolingbrook Bedding, Inc., are corporations organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois with their executive offices and warehouse located at 4435 S. ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Stevens Bedding Warehouse, Inc., Stevens Northern Bedding, Inc., Stevens Devon Bedding, Inc., Stevens Brookfield Bedding, Inc., Stevens Morton Grove Bedding, Inc., Stevens Harlem Bedding, Inc., Stevens Western Bedding, Inc., Stevens Wabash Bedding, Inc., Stevens Madison Bedding, Inc., Stevens Calumet City Bedding, Inc., Stevens Park Forest Bedding, Inc., Stevens Waukegan Bedding, Inc., Stevens Wheeling Bedding, Inc., Stevens Marquette Bedding, Inc., Stevens Bolingbrook Bedding, Inc., their successors and assigns, and officers, and Norton Baran, as an officer and stockholder of said corporations and as an officer and stockholder of any other corporation which would stand in the same or a substantially similar relationship in operating, structure and business relationship to the named corporate respondents and to him as the respondents do to each other at the date of service of this order and respondents' officers, agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of home furnishings and bedding products or any other products or merchandise advertised, sold or offered for sale or distribution in conjunction therewith in or affecting commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the words "BUY NOW AND SAVE," "DRASTIC REDUCTIONS," "SUPER DISCOUNT WEEKEND SPECIAL," or any other words of similar import not specifically set forth herein, which represent, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that any savings are afforded the public in the purchase of merchandise from respondents at respondents' advertised price unless the price of such merchandise being sold or offered for sale constitutes a reduction, in an amount not so insignificant as to be meaningless, from the actual bona fide price at which such merchandise was sold or offered for sale to the public on a regular basis by respondents for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent, regular course of their business.

2. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that stated minimum amounts of savings are afforded the public in the purchase of merchandise from the respondents at respondents' advertised price, unless, in fact, the price at which merchandise is offered constitutes, at least, the stated minimum amount of reduction from the price at which said merchandise has been usually and customarily sold at retail by the respondents in the recent, regular course of business.

3. Using the words "LAST 2 DAYS," "4 DAYS ONLY," "WEEKEND SPECIAL" or any other words of similar import not specifically set forth herein, which represent that the products advertised are available to the public at the terms, conditions, and prices advertised for a limited time only, when in fact, said products have been offered for sale or sold by respondents at terms, conditions, and prices similar to those stated in the advertisements at times other than those set forth therein in the recent, regular course of respondents' business.

4. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that any merchandise or service advertised, sold, offered for sale or distributed by respondents is furnished "free" or at no cost to the purchaser, when, in fact, the cost of such "free" merchandise or service is directly or indirectly included in the selling price of respondent's products that are advertised, sold, offered for sale or distributed to the purchaser in conjunction with said "free" merchandise or service.

5. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that any merchandise or service is being offered as a "gift," "without charge," "bonus," or other words or terms which tend to convey the impression to the public that the merchandise or service is free, when the use of the term "free" in relation thereto is prohibited by the provisions of this order.

6. Failing to maintain and produce for inspection or copying for a period of three (3) years adequate records:

(a) Which disclose the facts upon which any savings claims, including former pricing claims and comparative value claims, and similar representations of the type described in Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this order are based, and

(b) From which the validity of any savings claims, including former pricing claims and comparative value claims, and similar representations of the type described in Paragraphs 4 and 5 of this order can be determined.

7. Failing to deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel of respondents engaged in the sale or offering for sale of any product and engaged in any aspect of the preparation, creation or placing of advertising and failing to secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person.

It is further ordered, That respondent corporations shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That during the period from the date of service of this order to the expiration of 10 years from such date:

(a) respondents promptly notify the Commission within five (5) business days of the dissolution of a named corporate respondent which does not result in the emergence of a successor corporation or of the creation by incorporation, of a new retail outlet which would stand in the same or a substantially similar relationship in operation, structure and business relationship to the named corporate and individual respondents as the respondents do to each other at the date of service of this order, and

(b) respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondents, with the exception of those changes enumerated in (a) above, such as dissolution, assignment, or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporate respondents which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Stereo Equipment Sales, Inc., a corporation, doing business as Baltimore Stereo Wholesalers, Stereo Wholesalers and Stereo Discounters, and Benjamine Shumate, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Stereo Equipment Sales, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business located at 7A Aylesbury Rd., Timonium, Md. Such corporation does business as Baltimore Stereo Wholesalers, Stereo Wholesalers and Stereo Discounters.

Respondent Benjamine Shumate is an individual and an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of stereo equipment and components and other related merchandise to the public by mail order and through retail outlets.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents are causing, and for some time last past have caused, said merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business located in the State of Maryland to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said merchandise, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and are now, in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of products of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of their mail order business, as aforesaid, respondents offer merchandise for sale by means of advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters, and oral representations by telephone. In connection with their aforesaid business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their said merchandise, respondents have made, and are now making, certain statements and representations with respect to delivery and the promptness with which orders will be filled.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, is the following:

> IF YOUR REQUEST SHOULD NOT BE IN STOCK, NO SUBSTITUTIONS WILL BE MADE WITHOUT YOUR APPROVAL. WE WILL WRITE TO SEE IF YOU WISH A SUBSTITUTION OR A REFUND.

PAR. 6. By and through the use of the statements and representations quoted in Paragraph Five hereof, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set forth herein, and by the offering of merchandise for sale, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. merchandise ordered and prepaid will be delivered within a reasonable period of time after receipt of a purchaser's order; and
2. if the merchandise ordered by a purchaser is not in stock, the purchaser will be so notified and will be sent a notice asking whether the purchaser wants a substitution or a refund.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents, in many instances, have not and are not now shipping merchandise within a reasonable period of time after receipt of a purchaser's prepaid order. Respondents, in many instances, ship merchandise many weeks after receipt of a purchaser's order.
2. When ordered merchandise is not in stock, respondents, in many instances, have not notified purchasers and offered such purchasers substitutions or refunds.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Five and Six, hereof, were and are unfair, false, misleading, and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their mail order business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their said merchandise, respondents have distributed advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters or other material soliciting orders which provide the purchaser with order blanks. The purchaser, if he wishes to completely prepay his order, is required to calculate the postage or shipping charges based on the weight of the merchandise offered, using the postage and shipping rate charts provided. However, the advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters and other material soliciting orders do not indicate the weight of the merchandise offered.

Consequently, in many instances, purchasers have paid respondents more for postage or shipping than the actual postage or shipping charges incurred by respondents in mailing or shipping the merchandise, and said purchasers have not received from respondents a refund for their overpayments. Therefore, the failure of respondents to disclose the weights of their merchandise, and their failure to make refunds of postage or shipping overpayments, was and is unfair, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. By and through the use of the trade name "Baltimore Stereo Wholesalers" and "Stereo Wholesalers" separately and in conjunction with statements appearing in their advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters, or other material soliciting orders, respondents have represented and do represent, directly or by implication, that they are wholesalers and that their prices are wholesale prices and that in each instance the savings afforded to their purchasers is that amount which is realized by purchasers who buy at actual wholesale prices.

PAR. 10. In truth and in fact, respondents are not wholesalers with respect to many of the articles offered for sale and sold by them, nor do they offer to sell, or sell, many of their articles of merchandise at wholesale prices but, to the contrary, the prices of many of such articles are in excess of the prices usually and customarily paid by retailers. Consequently, in many instances, the savings afforded is less than that amount which is realized by purchasers who buy at actual wholesale prices.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraph Nine, hereof, were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 11. The use by respondents of the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices, and their failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and complete and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products, and overpayment of postage or shipping charges, by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Washington, D.C. Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Benjamine Shumate is an individual and an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies acts and practices of said corporation and his principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondent, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

(3) "Prompt refund" shall mean a return of the full amount remitted by the purchaser or the crediting of the purchaser's account for the full indebtedness incurred for the unshipped merchandise within seven (7) working days of the date on which the purchaser's right to refund vests under the provisions of this order. Refunds shall be deemed made when one of the following is mailed to the purchaser by first class mail:

(a) cash, money order or check; or

B

It is ordered, That respondents Stereo Equipment Sales, Inc., a corporation, doing business as Baltimore Stereo Wholesalers, Stereo Wholesalers and Stereo Discounters, or under any name or names, and its officers, and Benjamine Shumate, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' representatives, agents, employees, successors and assigns directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of stereo equipment and components and other merchandise, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Soliciting orders for the sale of merchandise to be ordered by the purchaser through the mail on a prepaid basis, unless such merchandise is shipped within that time clearly and conspicuously stated in such solicitation or, if no time is stated, within thirty (30) days after receipt of payment and a properly completed order from the purchaser.

2. Failing to make, without prior demand, a prompt refund to the purchaser of all moneys received for merchandise solicited on a prepaid basis and ordered through the mails when the merchandise is not shipped:

(a) Within that time clearly and conspicuously stated in the solicitation to which the purchaser responded as the time in which shipment will be made, or

Provided, however, That the inhibitions of Paragraph B(1) shall not apply if the provisions of Paragraph B(2) are complied with; and, Provided, further, That Paragraph B(1) and Paragraph B(2) shall not apply under the following circumstances: where respondents, due to circumstances beyond their control, are unable to make shipment as required in Paragraph B(1) and respondents send to the purchaser a notice of delayed shipment providing the purchaser with the opportunity to express his choice whether to cancel his order and receive a refund or be shipped the merchandise by a specified later date. The notice shall be sent by first class mail and accompanied by a self-addressed, postage paid device upon which the purchaser may indicate his choice, and mailed in advance of the expiration of the thirty (30) day period, or that time stated in the solicitation. The notice shall expressly advise the purchaser of the estimated date of shipment for his order. If, prior to shipment, respondents receive a response from the purchaser requesting a refund, such refund shall be promptly made.

If no response is received from the purchaser and respondents do not ship the merchandise within the estimated date of shipment given in the above notice, and for each subsequent time respondents do not ship merchandise by the estimated date of shipment to which a purchaser has agreed, respondents must send to the purchaser an additional notice of delayed shipment providing the purchaser with the opportunity to express his choice whether to cancel his order and receive a refund or be shipped the merchandise by a specified later date. This additional notice shall be sent by first class mail and accompanied by a self-addressed, postage paid device upon which the purchaser may indicate his choice, and mailed in advance of the estimated date of shipment given in the previous notice. This additional notice shall expressly advise the purchaser of the estimated date of shipment for his order. If, prior to shipment, respondents receive a response from the purchaser requesting a refund, such refund shall be promptly made.

Provided, further, however, That Paragraphs B(1) and B(2) shall not apply to any advertisement which:

(1) does not contain an order blank or other similar means to order merchandise from respondents;

(2) does not make any representation concerning the speed or promptness with which respondents ship merchandise to its customers; and

(3) does not offer specific items for sale at specified prices.

3. Failing to:

(a) Maintain a record of each complaint alleging failure to ship merchandise solicited and ordered on a prepaid basis, or of failure to make refund within the applicable period of time, as specified in Paragraphs B(1) and B(2) of this order, and the disposition of each such complaint. Such record shall be kept for a period of at least eighteen (18) months following the disposition of such complaint;

(b) Maintain records showing the employment of systems and procedures designed to comply with Paragraphs B(1) and B(2) of this order.

4. Failing to disclose, in any brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters, oral representations or other solicitations of orders which provide the purchaser with the means to order merchandise from respondents, the shipping weight of any of the items of merchandise offered.

5. Failing to promptly refund any postage or shipping payments made by a purchaser which are in excess of the postage or shipping charges incurred by respondents in mailing or shipping the merchandise to the purchaser; Provided, however, That respondents may charge a flat percentage of the order price for postage or shipping and handling if that fact is clearly and conspicuously disclosed, orally or in writing, to prospective purchasers before they order merchandise from respondents.

6. Representing, directly or by implication, in any advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters or any other material soliciting orders, or in any of respondents' places of business open to the public, or otherwise representing, directly or by implication, that respondents or any of their divisions are wholesalers, or that they or their divisions sell articles of merchandise at wholesale prices, unless respondents, or the division referred to, in fact:

(a) make a substantial number of their sales to retailers in the ordinary course of business, and

(b) sell items which they offer at wholesale at prices which do not exceed the prices usually and customarily paid by retailers for such merchandise to any source of supply, when purchased in the quantity offered for sale by respondents.

(a) in all advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs or any other material soliciting orders within six (6) months from the date this order is finally accepted;

(b) in all stationery, invoices and other business forms (and in-store promotional material) as the current supply is exhausted, but no later than six (6) months from the date this order is finally accepted; and

(c) in all store signs within eight (8) months from the date this order is finally accepted.

It is further ordered, That respondents deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future employees or other persons engaged in the preparation and placing of respondents' advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters or other material soliciting orders, and the offering for sale, or sale, of respondents' products, and secure from each such employee or other person a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Wards Company, Inc., a corporation, doing business as Dixie Hi-Fidelity Wholesalers and Dixie Hi-Fi, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Wards Company, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with its principal office and place of business located at 5021 Brook Rd., Richmond, Va. Such corporation does business as Dixie Hi-Fidelity Wholesalers and Dixie Hi-Fi.

Par. 2. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of stereo equipment and components and other related merchandise to the public by mail order and through retail outlets.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is causing, and for some time last past has caused, said merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business located in the Commonwealth of Virginia to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in said merchandise, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been, and is now, in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of products of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondent.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its mail order business, as aforesaid, respondent offers merchandise for sale by means of advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters, and oral representations by telephone. In connection with its aforesaid business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of its said merchandise, respondent has made, and is now making, certain statements and representations with respect to delivery and the promptness with which orders will be filled.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, is the following:

> DIXIE, one of the largest stereo wholesalers, fills all your orders promptly.
> We stock every item in this catalog and your order will be shipped promptly and insured.

PAR. 6. By and through the use of the statements and representations quoted in Paragraph Five hereof, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set forth herein, and by the offering of merchandise for sale, respondent has represented, and is now representing, directly or by implication, that merchandise ordered and prepaid will be delivered within a reasonable period of time after receipt of a purchaser's order.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact, respondent, in many instances, has not and is not now shipping merchandise within a reasonable period of time after receipt of a purchaser's prepaid order. Respondent, in many instances, ships merchandise many weeks after receipt of a purchaser's order.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Five and Six, hereof, were and are unfair, false, misleading, and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of its mail order business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of its said merchandise, respondent has distributed advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters or other material soliciting orders which provide the purchaser with order blanks. The purchaser, if he wishes to completely prepay his order, is required to calculate the postage or shipping charges based on the weight of the merchandise offered. However, the advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters and other material soliciting orders do not provide the customer with postage or shipping rate charts.

Consequently, in many instances, purchasers have paid respondent more for postage or shipping than the actual postage or shipping charges incurred by respondent in mailing or shipping the merchandise, and said purchasers have not received from respondent a refund for their overpayments. Therefore, the failure of respondent to make refunds of postage or shipping overpayments, was and is unfair, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the further course and conduct of its mail order business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of its said merchandise, respondent has distributed advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters or other material soliciting orders which provide the purchaser with order blanks. These materials do not disclose that handling or insurance costs will be charged to purchasers ordering from respondent, although such costs are regularly charged to the purchaser. Therefore, the failure of respondent to disclose the handling and insurance costs was, and is unfair, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 10. By and through the use of the trade name Dixie Hi-Fidelity Wholesalers, and in conjunction with statements appearing in its advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters, or other material soliciting orders, respondent has represented and does represent, directly or by implication, that it is a wholesaler and that its prices are wholesale prices and that in each instance the savings afforded to its purchasers is that amount which is realized by purchasers who buy at actual wholesale prices.

PAR. 11. In truth and in fact, respondent is not a wholesaler with respect to many of the articles offered for sale and sold by it, nor does it offer to sell, or sell, many of its articles of merchandise at wholesale prices but, to the contrary, the prices of many of such articles are in excess of the prices usually and customarily paid by retailers. Consequently, in many instances, the savings afforded is less than that amount which is realized by purchasers who buy at actual wholesale prices.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraph Ten, hereof, were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 12. The use by respondent of the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices, and its failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and complete and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's products, and overpayment of postage or shipping charges, by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 13. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Washington, D.C. Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Wards Company, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with its principal office and place of business located at 5021 Brook Rd., Richmond, Va. Such corporation does business as Dixie Hi-Fidelity Wholesalers and Dixie Hi-Fi.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondent, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

For purposes of this order, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) "Shipment" shall mean the act by which the merchandise is physically placed in the possession of the carrier.

(2) "Receipt of payment" shall be deemed to be, (1) at the time respondent receives the order with payment enclosed either in cash or by check or (2) at the time respondent charges a purchaser's account for a credit order.

(3) "Prompt refund" shall mean a return of the full amount remitted by the purchaser or the crediting of the purchaser's account for the full indebtedness incurred for the unshipped merchandise within seven (7) working days of the date on which the purchaser's right to refund vests under the provisions of this order. Refunds shall be deemed made when one of the following is mailed to the purchaser by first class mail:

(a) cash, money order or check; or

(b) if respondent is the creditor, a copy of the credit memorandum which removes the charge from the purchaser's account; or

(c) the actual charge or sales document which would create an obligation by the purchaser to a third party creditor; or

(d) copy of the appropriate credit memorandum to the third party creditor which will remove the charge from the purchaser's account.

B

It is ordered, That respondent Wards Company, Inc., a corporation, doing business as Dixie Hi-Fidelity Wholesalers and Dixie Hi-Fi, or under any name or names, and its officers, and respondent's representatives, agents, employees, successors and assigns directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of stereo equipment and components and other merchandise, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Soliciting orders for the sale of merchandise to be ordered by the purchaser through the mail on a prepaid basis, unless such merchandise is shipped within that time clearly and conspicuously stated in such solicitation or, if no time is stated, within thirty (30) days after receipt of payment and a properly completed order from the purchaser.

2. Failing to make, without prior demand, a prompt refund to the purchaser of all moneys received for merchandise solicited on a prepaid basis and ordered through the mails when the merchandise is not shipped:

(a) Within that time clearly and conspicuously stated in the solicitation to which the purchaser responded as the time in which shipment will be made, or

(b) If no time is stated, within thirty (30) days of receipt of the purchaser's payment by respondent.

Provided, however, That the inhibitions of Paragraph B(1) shall not apply if the provisions of Paragraph B(2) are complied with; and, Provided further, That Paragraph B(1) and Paragraph B(2) shall not apply under the following circumstances: where respondent, due to circumstances beyond its control, is unable to make shipment as required in Paragraph B(1) and respondent sends to the purchaser a notice of delayed shipment providing the purchaser with the opportunity to express his choice whether to cancel his order and receive a refund or be shipped the merchandise by a specified later date. The notice shall be sent by first class mail and accompanied by a self-addressed, postage paid device upon which the purchaser may indicate his choice, and mailed in advance of the expiration of the thirty (30) day period, or that time stated in the solicitation. The notice shall expressly advise the purchaser of the estimated date of shipment for his order. If, prior to shipment, respondent receives a response from the purchaser requesting a refund, such refund shall be promptly made.

If no response is received from the purchaser and respondent does not ship the merchandise within the estimated date of shipment given in the above notice, and for each subsequent time respondent does not ship merchandise by the estimated date of shipment to which a purchaser has agreed, respondent must send to the purchaser an additional notice of delayed shipment providing the purchaser with the opportunity to express his choice whether to cancel his order and receive a refund or be shipped the merchandise by a specified later date. This additional notice shall be sent by first class mail and accompanied by a self-addressed, postage paid device upon which the purchaser may indicate his choice, and mailed in advance of the estimated date of shipment given in the previous notice. This additional notice shall expressly advise the purchaser of the estimated date of shipment for his order. If, prior to shipment, the respondent receives a response from the purchaser requesting a refund, such refund shall be promptly made.

Provided further, however, That Paragraphs B(1) and B(2) shall not apply to any advertisement which:

(1) does not contain an order blank or other similar means to order merchandise from respondent;

(2) does not make any representation concerning the speed or promptness with which respondent ships merchandise to its customers; and

(3) does not offer specific items for sale at specified prices.

Provided further, however, That should the Federal Trade Commission promulgate a trade regulation rule or industry guide concerning Undelivered Mail Order Merchandise and Services, containing provisions comparable to, but less comprehensive or less restrictive than, the provisions of this order, nothing herein shall preclude respondent from exercising its right to petition for appropriate modification of this order under Section 3.72 or any other pertinent provision of the Commission's Rules of Practice or of law.

3. Failing to:

(a) Maintain a record of each complaint alleging failure to ship merchandise solicited and ordered on a prepaid basis, or of failure to make refund within the applicable period of time, as specified in Paragraphs B(1) and B(2) of this order, and the disposition of each such complaint. Such record shall be kept for a period of at least eighteen (18), months following the disposition of such complaint;

(b) Maintain records showing the employment of systems and procedures designed to comply with Paragraphs B(1) and B(2) of this order.

4. Failing to promptly refund any postage or shipping payments made by a purchaser which are in excess of the postage or shipping charges incurred by respondent in mailing or shipping the merchandise to the purchaser; Provided, however, That respondent may charge a flat percentage of the order price for postage or shipping and handling if that fact is clearly and conspicuously disclosed, orally or in writing, to prospective purchasers before they order merchandise from respondent.

5. Failing to clearly and conspicuously disclose, orally or in writing, to prospective purchasers before they order merchandise from respondent, the actual handling and insurance costs which will be charged to the purchaser.

6. Representing, directly or by implication, in any advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters or any other material soliciting orders, or in any of respondent's places of business open to the public, or otherwise representing, directly or by implication, that respondent or any of its divisions is a wholesaler, or that it or its division sells articles of merchandise at wholesale prices, unless respondent, or the division referred to, in fact:

(a) makes a substantial number of its sales to retailers in the ordinary course of business, and

(b) sells items which it offers at wholesale at prices which do not exceed the prices usually and customarily paid by retailers for such merchandise to any source of supply, when purchased in the quantity offered for sale by respondent.

Provided, further, however, That respondent shall be permitted to phase out the use of the word "Wholesalers" in its trade name:

(a) in all advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs or any other material soliciting orders within six (6) months from the date this order is finally accepted;

(b) in all stationery, invoices and other business forms (and in-store promotional material) as the current supply is exhausted, but no later than six (6) months from the date this order is finally accepted; and

(c) in all store signs within eight (8) months from the date this order is finally accepted.

It is further ordered, That respondent deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future employees or other persons engaged in the preparation and placing of respondent's advertisements, brochures, flyers, catalogs, letters or other material soliciting orders, and the offering for sale, or sale, of respondent's products, and secure from each such employee or other person a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Consolidated International Tool & Oil, Inc., a corporation, Globe Marketing & Services, Inc., a corporation, and Joseph La Franka, individually and as an officer of said corporations, and also doing business as Consolidated Distributing Co., hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Consolidated International Tool & Oil, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business formerly located at 4304 Charles St., Rockford, Ill.

Respondent Globe Marketing & Services, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business formerly located at 4304 Charles St., Rockford, Ill.

Respondent Joseph La Franka is an individual and officer of respondent corporations and also does business as Consolidated Distributing Co. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of said business entities including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is 1211 Florist Dr., Rockford, Ill.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of distributorships for automotive products, tools, electrical products, recording tapes and various other products to distributors. These products are purchased by distributors for resale to the public.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents for some time have caused, their said products to be shipped from their place of business in the State of Illinois to distributors located in various other States of the United States, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

PAR. 4. Respondents insert advertisements in newspapers, soliciting persons to become distributors for respondent corporations. Typical and illustrative but not all inclusive of the statements and representations made in newspapers and various promotional materials are the following:

Excellent opportunity for additional Part-Time Income of $6,000 to $8,000 or, a Full-Time Income of $15,000 or more.

IMPORTANT TO INSTALL IMMEDIATELY Install all of your displays immediately after your locations have been secured. Don't put it off. Do it IMMEDIATELY!
INITIAL DISPLAY LOADING Be certain all displays are fully loaded for immediate use by the consumer.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the aforesaid statements and others of similar import not specifically set forth herein, respondents represent directly or by implication that:

1. A person can expect to earn between $500 and $800 or more per month by devoting part time to his distributorship, and that he can expect to earn between $1250 and $2000 or more per month by devoting full time to his distributorship.
2. There is no selling required of a distributor.
3. Respondents guarantee to return the entire investment to a distributor if he is not satisfied with the distributorship.
4. All account locations assigned to a distributor have been established by respondents prior to signing of a contract by distributor.
5. Respondents offer complete training to distributor.
6. Respondents offer distributor continuing support and assistance in making his distributorship a success.
7. Distributor is assigned a defined and exclusive territory in which all of his accounts will be established and in which no other distributor for respondent may operate.
8. Respondents guarantee distributor's investment against loss.
9. Respondents are selective with regard to persons qualified to become distributors.
10. Respondents will provide distributor with products for his displays on a timely basis.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. A person cannot expect to earn between $500 and $800 or more per month by devoting part time to his distributorship, nor can he expect to earn between $1250 and $2000 or more per month by devoting full time to his distributorship. Such earnings claims are greatly in excess of the profit that will accrue in a great majority of cases no matter how much time is devoted to the distributorship.
2. Selling is required of a distributor if profitable locations are to be obtained.
3. Respondents have never returned the entire investment to a distributor who is not satisfied with the distributorship.
4. Account locations assigned to a distributor have not been established by respondents prior to signing of a contract by distributor. In a majority of cases respondents have not established account locations until after the distributor has signed a contract.
5. Respondents do not offer distributor complete training. The only training given is in the form of general suggestions in a "Distributor Operating Manual."

6. Respondents have failed in some instances to support and assist distributor in making his distributorship a success.

7. Though respondents may purport to assign a distributor a defined and exclusive territory, frequently his assigned accounts are outside this territory; territorial boundaries overlap and distributors are not assigned exclusive territories.

8. Respondents in no way guarantee a distributor's investment against loss.

9. Respondents are not selective with regard to persons qualified to become distributors. The only requirement for becoming a distributor is the price of the initial investment.

10. Respondents do not provide distributor with products for his displays on a timely basis.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and in furtherance of their purpose of inducing the purchase of their distributorships, respondents direct various newspapers to print advertisements containing corporate logos of STP Corporation, the BernzOmatic Corporation, General Electric Company and Superscope, Inc. The use of these logos in newspaper advertising and on other printed matter disseminated by respondents represents, directly or by implication, that respondents are closely affiliated with the said corporations.

In fact, respondents are not closely affiliated, nor are they affiliated in any way, with the said corporations. Rather, the relationship between respondents and the said corporations is basically that of buyer and seller.

Therefore, the acts and practices set forth above were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents cause persons who respond to advertisements to contact respondents' sales representatives. For the purpose of inducing the sale of distributorships offered by respondents, said sales representatives make to prospective distributors many statements and representations, directly or by implication, regarding opportunities available to distributors and assistance given to distributors by respondents. Among and typical, but not all inclusive, of such statements and representations are the following:

1. A distributor will earn between $12,000 and $30,000 or more per year.

2. A distributor can expect an average sale of a certain specified amount of merchandise per day.

3. A distributor can recover his initial investment within one year.

4. Accounts will be set up by respondents in profitable sales producing locations.

5. All accounts will be within the certain radius of distributor's home stipulated in distributor's contract.

6. Accounts will be in an exclusive territory where no other distributor for respondent may operate.

7. Respondents will set up 20 separate physical account locations for distributor.

8. Accounts will be set up shortly after distributor signs his contract.

9. A distributor will be able to sell STP products for less than the price charged by retail stores in his area.

10. Respondents would at some undetermined future time become the sole STP dealer in the distributor's area.

11. A distributor would have exclusive dealership for STP products in his territory.

12. A distributor will receive original parts tune-up kits from respondents.

13. A distributor will be supplied with a great variety of products exhibited to him by respondents.

14. A distributor will have 90 days to pay for all products ordered from respondents.

15. Respondents will pay freight costs for shipment of products to distributor.

PAR. 9. In truth and in fact:

1. Few, if any, distributors have earned more than $12,000 per year.

2. A distributor cannot expect an average sale of a certain specified amount of merchandise per day.

3. Few, if any, of respondents' distributors have recovered their initial investment within one year.

4. Accounts are not set up by respondents in profitable sales producing locations. They are usually set up in marginal places of business.

5. Accounts are often located outside the certain radius of distributor's home stipulated in distributor's contract.

6. Accounts are often not in an exclusive territory where no other distributor for respondent may operate. Territories often overlap with more than one distributor sharing a territory or even a single location.

7. Respondents do not set up 20 separate physical account locations for distributor. Often respondents count each display rack in one physical location as a single account.

8. Accounts are not set up shortly after distributor signs his contract. Often there are protracted delays by respondents in setting up accounts.

9. A distributor is seldom able to sell STP products for less than the price charged by retail stores in his area.

10. Respondents never were, nor ever had the opportunity to become, sole STP dealers in any area. Thus there was no possibility that all STP products sold in any area would be sold through respondents' distributors.

11. A distributor never had, nor is he likely to ever have, exclusive dealership for STP products in his territory.

12. A distributor does not receive original parts tune-up kits from respondents.

13. A distributor is not supplied with the great variety of products exhibited to him by respondents.

14. A distributor does not have 90 days to pay for all products ordered from respondents. He must pay cash when ordering.

15. Respondents do not pay freight costs for shipment of products to distributor. Distributor must pay these costs himself.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Eight were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 10. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and in furtherance of their purpose of inducing the purchase of their distributorships, respondents' sales representatives give prospective distributors the names and addresses of alleged "successful distributors" for respondents. Respondents' sales representatives tell prospective distributors to contact these "successful distributors." For the purpose of inducing the sale of distributorships offered by respondents, such "successful distributors" make to prospective distributors many statements and representations, directly or by implication, regarding opportunities available to purchasers of distributorships. Among and typical, but not all inclusive, of such statements and representations are that:

1. They are distributors for respondents.

2. They are extremely successful, earning $25,000 or more per year as distributors for respondents.

PAR. 11. In truth and in fact:

1. They are not, and never have been, distributors for respondents.

2. They are not extremely successful, and do not earn $25,000 or more per year as distributors for respondents.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Ten were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 12. By directing prospective distributors to such "successful distributors," respondents are furthering and abetting the deception of the public in the manner and as to the things hereinbefore alleged.

PAR. 13. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar distributorships.

PAR. 14. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices has had, and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and complete, and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase said distributorships offered by respondents by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 15. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Chicago Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

PAR. 8. Through the use of said television commercial, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that, with proper instruction, motorcycles can be operated as safely as automobiles.

PAR. 9. In truth and in fact, motorcycles cannot be operated as safely as automobiles. Reliable statistics show that the incidence of death and serious injury from accidents is significantly and substantially greater among motorcycle operators than among drivers of automobiles. Therefore, the representation set forth in Paragraphs Seven and Eight hereof was, and is, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 10. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive representation has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the purchase of Yamaha motorcycles under the erroneous and mistaken belief that such representation is true.

PAR. 11. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent Yamaha International Corporation has been, and is now, in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, with corporations, firms, and individuals in the sale of products of the same general kind and nature as those sold by said respondent.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent Botsford Ketchum Inc. has been, and is now, in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, with other advertising agencies.

PAR. 13. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Seattle Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty days, and having duly considered comments filed pursuant to Section 2.34 of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

A. Respondent Yamaha International Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with its principal office and place of business located at 6600 Orangethorpe Ave., Buena Park, Calif.

Respondent Botsford Ketchum Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at 55 Union St., San Francisco, Calif.

B. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Yamaha International Corporation, a corporation, and Botsford Ketchum Inc., a corporation, and their officers, agents, representatives, employees, successors and assigns, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of motorized vehicles or other products as specified below, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing orally, visually, in writing, or in any other manner, directly or by implication, that any motorized vehicle other than an automobile can be operated as safely as an automobile, unless respondents have a reasonable basis for such representation at the time it is made, including documentation of competent and reliable scientific tests or other objective data of statistical validity.

B. Making any claims or statements orally, visually, in writing, or in any other manner, directly or by implication, as to the safety of any transportation device or vehicle, unless respondents have a reasonable basis for such claim or statement at the time it is made, which may consist of documentation of competent and reliable scientific tests or other objective data of statistical validity.

Provided, however, That mere visual depiction of a product, device or vehicle in operation, without more, shall not be deemed a representation, claim or statement as to safety within the meaning of the above Paragraphs A and B.

It is further ordered, That respondent Yamaha International Corporation shall, not later than sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, send a letter in the form annexed hereto as Letter "A" to each person known to have participated in any way in a Yamaha Learn-To-Ride seminar during the year 1973. Mailing by first class mail to the last known address of each such person shall comply with this requirement.

It is further ordered, That respondents maintain complete business records relative to the manner and form of their compliance with this order. Respondents shall retain each such record for at least three years, and shall retain substantiation and other documentation at least two years beyond the last dissemination of any representation, claim, or statement contingent thereon under the provisions of this order. Upon reasonable notice, respondents shall make any and all such records available for inspection and photocopying by authorized representatives of the Federal Trade Commission at respondents' place of business or other properly designated location.

It is further ordered, That respondents forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions, and to all personnel now or hereafter engaged in any aspect of the preparation, creation or placing of advertising of transportation devices or vehicles.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in a corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation or corporations, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other change in said corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a written report setting forth in detail the manner and form of their compliance with this order.

LETTER A

YAMAHA INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION

Dear Learn-To-Ride Participant:

A recent survey financed by our corporation revealed that a considerable number of the persons who attended our Learn-To-Ride program believe that, with proper instruction, they can be just as safe riding a motorcycle as in an automobile.

As one of the leading vendors of motorcycles in the United States, and because of our concern for the safety of all motorcycle owners and riders, we feel it is important to correct this erroneous and potentially hazardous belief. Although the motorcycle's maneuverability helps in avoiding accidents, and training can certainly help make you a safer rider, all presently available statistics show a substantially higher likelihood of accidental death or serious injury for the motorcyclist than for the automobile driver.

In other words: No matter how thorough your training, in the event you become involved in an accident you will be less safe from injury while riding a two-wheel vehicle weighing several hundred pounds than when riding in an enclosed four-wheel vehicle of one to two tons.

We believe that by making this fact clear to all who participated in our Learn-To-Ride program, we can contribute to their future safety as motorcycle operators.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

4. Forthwith terminate the employment or business relationship with any person or firm willfully violating any provision of this order and take appropriate disciplinary and corrective action, which may include termination, for nonwillful violations.

5. Within sixty (60) days from the date on which this order becomes final, mail or deliver, and obtain a signed receipt therefor, a written offer of reinstatement, upon the same terms and conditions available to respondent's other dealers, to any distributor or dealer located in an area where resale prices were not or could not be lawfully controlled, who was terminated by respondent from Jan. 1, 1972 to the effective date of this order, unless respondent can establish that the applicant does not or did not at the time of termination have good credit or that the dealer does not have reasonably adequate facilities for selling respondent's products at retail, and forthwith reinstate any such distributor or dealer who within thirty (30) days thereafter requests, in writing, reinstatement.

It is further ordered, That respondent:

1. Notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation of or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other such change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

2. For a period of three (3) years from the date this order becomes final, establish and maintain a file of all records referring or relating to respondent's refusal during such period to sell its products to any dealer, which file shall contain a record of a communication to each such dealer explaining respondent's refusal to sell, and which file will be made available for Commission inspection on reasonable notice; and, annually, for a period of three (3) years from the date hereof, submit a report to the Commission's New York Regional Office listing the names and addresses of all dealers with whom respondent has refused to deal during the preceding year, a description of the reason for the refusal and the date of the refusal.

Docket C-2748. Complaint, Oct. 28, 1975–Decision, Oct. 28, 1975

Consent order requiring a Pawtucket, R.I., seller and distributor of toy, gift and hobby products, among other things to cease deceptively packaging its merchandise.

For the respondent: David Greene, Aberman, Greene and Locker, New York City.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Hasbro Industries, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Hasbro Industries, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Rhode Island, with its principal office and place of business located at 1027 Newport Ave., Pawtucket, R.I.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of hobby products, toy craft products and activity toys to jobbers and retailers to the public.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent now causes, and for some time last past has caused, said products, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in the State of Rhode Island to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States, and maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in said products in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. Among the products which are offered for sale and sold by the respondent are a number of hobby products, toy craft products and activity toys. Through the use of certain methods of packaging, respondent has represented, and has placed in the hands of others the means and instrumentalities through which they might represent, directly or indirectly, that certain of the above products, as depicted or otherwise described on the exteriors of packages, corresponded in their lengths and widths, or their lengths, widths and thicknesses, with the boxes in which they were contained, and that others of such products were offered in quantities reasonably related to the size of the containers in which they were presented for sale.

PAR. 5. Typical and illustrative of said products as described in Paragraph Four, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

Spangle Beads
Indian Princess Bead Craft
Popeye Paint and Crayon Set Embroidery
Round Knit
Foil Art
Crocheting

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, such products often have not corresponded with their container or package dimensions and are often not offered in quantities reasonably related to the sizes of the containers or packages in which they are presented for sale. Purchasers of such a product are thereby given the mistaken impression that they are receiving a larger product or a product of greater volume than is actually the fact.

Therefore the methods of packaging referred to in Paragraph Four hereof were and are unfair and false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the conduct of its business, at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of products of the same general kind and nature as the products sold by the respondent.

PAR. 8. The use by respondent of the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive methods of packaging has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the quantum or amount of the product being sold was and is greater than the true such quantum or amount, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's product by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it has reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, and having duly considered the comments filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34 of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Hasbro Industries, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Rhode Island, with its office and principal place of business located at 1027 Newport Ave., Pawtucket, R.I.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondent, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Hasbro Industries, Inc., a corporation, and its officers, and respondent's agents, representatives, employees, successors and assigns, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution of hobby products, toy craft products and activity toys, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Packaging said products in oversized boxes or other containers so as to create the appearance or impression that the width or thickness or other dimensions or quantity of products contained in a box or container is appreciably greater than is the fact; but nothing in this order shall be construed as forbidding respondent to use oversized containers if respondent justifies the use of such containers as necessary for the efficient packaging of the products contained therein and establish that respondent has made all reasonable efforts to prevent any misleading appearance or impression from being created by such containers;

2. Providing wholesalers, retailers or other distributors of said products with any means or instrumentality with which to deceive the purchasing public in the manner described in Paragraph (1) above.

It is further ordered, That respondent or its successors or assigns notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporate respondent which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondent distribute a copy of this order to all operating divisions and subsidiaries of said corporation.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Hair Replacement Research Center, Inc., a corporation, trading also as Hair Replacement Research Consultants and Salvatore Saporito, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Hair Replacement Research Center, Inc., trading also as Hair Replacement Research Consultants, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business located at 72 Burroughs Place, Bloomfield, N.J.

Respondent Salvatore Saporito is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents operate the Hair Replacement Research Center salon and promote on their own behalf, among others, the implant hair replacement system hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "System." The system involves a surgical procedure whereby synthetic sutures (prolene) or similar synthetic thread are stitched into the scalps of respondents' customers. Hairpieces are then attached to the suture loops. Respondents sell, install and maintain the system, except that the surgical procedure itself is performed by a medical doctor.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents promote the system by advertising in newspapers of general circulation which are distributed across State lines, and by mailing promotional literature to prospective customers who respond to such advertising. As a result of such newspaper advertising, and literature mailing, respondent has maintained a substantial course of trade in commerce, as "commerce" is used in Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and as a result of such newspaper advertising and mailing of promotional literature, have disseminated and caused to be disseminated false advertisements by United States mails, within the meaning of Section 12 (a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of the hair implant replacement system, respondents, directly have made numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general circulation and in other promotional literature. Typical of the statements and representations contained in said advertisements and promotional literature, but not all inclusive, are the following:

> Without ever having to resort to toupees, hairpieces, * * *.
> It's called implanting hair where none exists, making it a part of you.
> * * * Thus enabling you to style it * * * Like your own hair again.
> This revolutionary technique will assure the client complete success and happiness. Permanent hair in just 2 hours.
> This exciting method of "implant" permits the client to swim under water, change hair styles and most important be able to once again scratch his or her own scalp as they did when they had their own hair.
> The new implantation method requires no between visits for tightenings. You can really shampoo, swim, dive, ski, etc. * * * Like your own hair again. It can't come off * * *.

PAR. 5. Through the use of the above advertisements, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, and by oral statements and representations made by employees and agents of the respondents, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. The implant system does not involve wearing a hairpiece, or toupee.

2. The hairpiece applied becomes part of the anatomy like natural hair, and has characteristics of natural hair, including the following:

(a) The same appearance as natural hair upon normal observation and upon extreme close-up examination.

(b) It may be cared for like natural hair, particularly in that actions such as washing, combing, brushing and mussing may be performed on it in the same manner as might a person with natural hair.

(c) The wearer may engage in physical activities with as much disregard for his hairpiece as might a person with natural hair.

3. After the system has been applied, the wearer can care for it himself, and will not have to seek professional or skilled assistance in maintaining the system, and that the customer will not incur charges over and above the charge for installing the system.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The system does involve the wearing of a hairpiece or toupee.

2. The hairpiece applied does not become part of the anatomy like natural hair. The system involves the suturing of synthetic threads into the scalp of the recipient by a surgical procedure and which may be rejected by the body. The hairpiece differs from natural hair in many respects, including the following:

(a) It does not have the same appearance as natural hair in a substantial number of instances. It is often discernible as a hairpiece or toupee upon normal observation, and upon extreme close-up examination.

(b) It cannot be cared for like regular hair but requires special care and handling. Strong pulling on the hair, such as may be expected to occur in washing, combing, brushing, and mussing, can cause pain because of the pressure exerted on the sutures in the scalp, may cause bleeding, and may cause the sutures to pull out. As a consequence, washing the hair and scalp is difficult. Because washing is difficult, foreign particles and dead skin tissue tend to accumulate beneath the implant hair application and become a significant source of irritation. The hair styles into which the hairpiece may be combed or brushed without professional treatments are limited.

(c) The wearer may not engage in physical activities with as much disregard for his hairpiece as might a person with natural hair. The wearer must at all times be careful that the hair does not pull or get pulled, or become tangled, or strained. Discomfort and pain may be caused by common actions, such as rolling the head on a pillow during sleep.

3. The wearer cannot in most instances care for the hairpiece himself; he must seek professional or skilled assistance on many occasions. Medical problems associated with the surgery or the continuing presence of synthetic thread in the scalp may require subsequent visits to a medical doctor. A substantial additional charge for such service could be incurred. Respondents' applied hair is subject to bleaching in sunlight and other discoloration normally associated with hairpieces, and where the hairpiece has been color-dyed, loss of dye through washing and normal wear; thus replacement hairpieces are required at intervals in order to maintain a color match with any natural hair the wearer may have.

The statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents, have represented in advertisements the asserted advantages of the system, as hereinbefore described. In many cases, respondents have represented their system to be painless and have not disclosed in such advertisements that a surgical procedure is a required step in the system. In no case have respondents' advertisements disclosed:

(a) that clients may experience discomfort and pain as a result of the surgical procedure, from the synthetic sutures themselves, and from pulling normally incident to wearing the hairpiece;

(b) that clients will be subject to the risk of irritation, infections, and skin diseases as a result of the surgical procedure and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp;

(c) that permanent scarring to the scalp may result from the required surgical procedures, and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp.

The consequences described in this paragraph have in fact occurred, and to a reasonable medical certainty can be expected to occur, and respondents knew, and had reason to know, that they could be expected to occur. Furthermore, the surgical procedure has not been used in conjunction with respondents' system for a sufficient experimental period to determine the extent of seriousness of the above side effects, and whether there are any other side effects, including but not limited to rejection of the synthetic sutures through the human body's natural rejection process.

Therefore, the advertisements referred to in Paragraph Seven are false and misleading and the acts and practices referred to in said Paragraph are unfair and deceptive.

PAR. 8. For the purpose of inducing the purchase of the system, respondents entice members of the purchasing public to their salon with advertisements of "* * * Like your own hair again, It can't come off" as a solution to baldness and like advertisements to attract members of the purchasing public concerned about their hair loss, and with offers of free information without any obligations. In most cases respondents do not disclose details of their system unless and until a prospect visits their salon. When members of the purchasing public have visited the salon, they have been subjected to emotional sales pressure, for the purpose of persuading them to sign a contract for the application of the implant system, and to make a substantial down payment, without being afforded a reasonable opportunity to consider and comprehend the scope and extent of the contractual obligations involved, the seriousness of the surgical procedure and the possibilities of discomfort, pain, disease, or disfigurement related to the continued presence of the synthetic suture in the scalp. Persons are insistently urged to sign such contracts and make such downpayments, through the use of persistent and emotionally forceful sales presentations employing the following tactics, among others:

1. Representing that the psychological benefit of having hair replaced is so significant as to be of immediate necessity and that, subconsciously, bald men are desperate for prompt relief.

2. Inducing prospects to sign contracts and/or make downpayments before they have consulted a medical doctor and freely and openly discussed with such doctor the medical risks and consequences of the surgical procedure, and of the synthetic suture being embedded in their scalp. Such consultations typically occur immediately before the commencement of surgery, by which time the client is likely to feel pressured to go through with the application.

Therefore, the advertisements referred to in Paragraph Eight were and are false and misleading, and the acts and practices set forth in such paragraph were and are false and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms, and individuals, in the sale of cosmetics, devices and treatments for the concealment of baldness.

PAR. 10. The use by respondents of the above unfair and deceptive representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead consumers, and to unfairly influence consumers to hurriedly and precipitately sign contracts for the application of the implant hair replacement system, and to make partial or full payment therefor, without affording them reasonable opportunity to consider and comprehend the scope and extent of the contractual obligations involved, or the seriousness of the surgical procedure, and the possibilities of discomfort, pain, disease or disfigurement related thereto, and related to the continual presence of the synthetic suture in the scalp, or to compare prices, techniques, and devices available from competing corporations, firms, and individuals selling baldness concealment cosmetics, devices, and treatments to the purchasing public.

PAR. 11. The respondents' acts and practices alleged herein are to the prejudice and injury of the purchasing public, and to respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and false advertisements disseminated by United States mails, and in commerce, in violation of Section 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Hair Replacement Research Center, Inc., trading also as Hair Replacement Research Consultants, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business located at 72 Burroughs Place, Bloomfield, N.J.

Respondent Salvatore Saporito is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation and his principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Hair Replacement Research Center, Inc., a corporation, trading also as Hair Replacement Research Consultants, and or under any other name or names, its successors and assigns and its officers, and Salvatore Saporito, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device or through franchisees or licensees, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the implant replacement system or other hair replacement product or process involving surgery (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "System"), in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, or by the United States mails within the meaning of Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the system does not involve wearing a device or cosmetic which is like a hairpiece or toupee;

2. That after the system has been applied, the hair applied becomes part of the anatomy like natural hair, and has the following characteristics of natural hair.

a. the same appearance in all applications as natural hair, upon normal observation, and upon extreme close-up examination;

b. it may be cared for like natural hair where care involves possible pulling on the hair;

c. the wearer may engage in physical activity and movement with the same disregard for his hair as he would if he had natural hair.

3. That after the system has been applied, the wearer can care for it himself, and will not have to seek professional or skilled assistance in maintaining the system, and that the customer will not incur maintenance costs over and above the cost of applying the system.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in advertising, offering for sale, selling or distributing the system, disclose clearly and conspicuously that:

1. The system involves a surgical procedure resulting in the implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, to which hair is affixed.

2. By virtue of the surgical procedure involving implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, and by virtue of the synthetic suture remaining in the scalp, there is a risk of discomfort, pain, infection, scarring, and other skin disorders.

3. Continuing special care of the system is necessary to minimize the probabilities and risks referred to in subparagraph two of this paragraph, and such care may involve additional costs for medications and assistance.

4. The purchaser is advised to consult with his personal physician about the system before deciding whether to purchase it.

Discomfort, pain, and medical problems may occur. Continuing care is necessary. Consult your own physician.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Baza'r, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

COUNT I

Alleging violation of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Baza'r, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oregon with its office and principal place of business located at 1845 S.E. Third Ave., Portland, Oreg.

PAR. 2. Respondent is engaged in the operation of a chain of retail food stores. Respondent operates retail food stores and food departments in Oregon, Washington and other States in the United States. Its volume of business is substantial. In the operation of its retail food stores, respondent offers and presents for sale to its customers, and sells to its customers, an extensive line of products, including food, as that term is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, groceries and other merchandise, all of which are sometimes referred to hereafter as "items." Many of said items are purchased from numerous suppliers located throughout the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent now causes, and for some time last past has caused, directly or indirectly, the aforesaid items to be shipped and distributed from manufacturing and processing plants or from other sources of supply to its warehouses, distribution centers, or retail food stores located in various States other than the State of origination, distribution or storage of said items. Respondent maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained a substantial course of trade in the distribution, advertising, offering for sale and sale of the aforesaid items in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, and for some time last past respondent has been and is now disseminating, and causing the dissemination of, certain advertisements concerning the aforesaid items by various means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, including but not limited to, advertisements in newspapers of general and interstate circulation and other advertising media, for the purpose of inducing and which were and are likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said items from respondent; and respondent has been and is now disseminating, and causing the dissemination of, advertisements concerning said items by various means, including but not limited to the aforesaid media, for the purpose of inducing and which were and are likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase from respondent of the said items in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Many of the said advertisements list or depict the aforesaid items and also contain statements and representations concerning the price or terms at which said items would be offered for sale. Many of the aforesaid advertisements contain further direct and express statements and representations concerning the time periods during which the offers would be in effect and the locations of respondent's food stores at which the offers would be made.

PAR. 5. Through the use of such advertisements disseminated and now being disseminated in various areas of the United States served by respondent's retail food stores, respondent has represented and is now representing directly or by implication that in those stores covered by such advertisements, throughout the effective periods of the advertised offers, the items listed or depicted in such advertisements would be or are:

A. Readily available for sale to customers;

B. Readily available for sale at or below the advertised prices; and

C. Sold to consumers at or below the advertised price.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, in a number of respondent's retail food stores located in the Portland, Oreg. metropolitan area in which the aforesaid advertisements were disseminated, in stores covered by such advertisements, during the effective periods of the advertised offers, a substantial number of items listed or depicted in the said advertisements were or are:

A. Not readily available for sale;

B. Not readily available for sale at or below the advertised prices; or

C. Sold to customers at a price higher than the advertised price.

Therefore, the statements and representations as referred to herein, were and are false, misleading and deceptive, and each of such advertisements was and is misleading in material respects and constituted, and now constitutes a "false advertisement," as that term is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 7. By disseminating or causing the dissemination of advertisements which offer or present for sale items as aforesaid, and by failing to have in each of its stores covered by such advertisements, throughout the effective periods of the advertised offers, in quantities sufficient to meet reasonably anticipated demands, the advertised items:

A. Readily available for sale to customers; or

B. Readily available for sale at or below the advertised prices; respondent has been and now is engaged in unfair acts and practices.

PAR. 8. By disseminating or causing the dissemination of advertisements which offer or present for sale items at specific prices, as aforesaid, and during the effective periods of such advertised offers at certain stores covered by said advertisements, by selling said items or other merchandise to customers at prices higher than the advertised prices, respondent has been and now is engaged in unfair acts and practices.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of its business, and at all times referred to herein, respondent has been and now is in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, partnerships, firms and individuals in the retail food and grocery business.

PAR. 10. The use by respondent of the aforesaid unfair and false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices, including the dissemination of the aforesaid "false advertisements," has had and now has the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the said statements and representations were and are true, and to induce such persons to go to respondent's stores and to purchase from respondent substantial quantities of the advertised items at prices in excess of the advertised prices and substantial quantities of items other than the advertised items.

PAR. 11. The acts and practices as aforesaid, and the dissemination by respondent of the false advertisements, as aforesaid, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted and now constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violation of the Federal Trade Commission trade regulation rule concerning retail food store advertising and marketing practices (16 CFR 424), the allegations of Paragraphs One, Two, Three, Four and Nine, respectively, of Count I hereof are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 12. The Federal Trade Commission, pursuant to the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended 15 U.S.C. §41, et seq., and the provisions of Subpart B, Part 1, of the Commission's Procedures and Rules of Practice, 16 CFR §1.11, et seq., conducted a proceeding for the promulgation of a trade regulation rule regarding retail food store advertising and marketing practices. Notice of this proceeding, including a proposed rule was published in the Federal Register on Nov. 14, 1969 (34 F.R. 18252). Thereafter on May 31, 1971 the Commission duly promulgated a trade regulation rule concerning retail food store advertising and marketing practices effective July 12, 1971, 16 C.F.R. §424.1 (1973).

PAR. 13. Respondent is a member of the retail food store industry, and its acts and practices in connection with the sale and offering for sale of food and grocery products or other merchandise are subject to the jurisdiction of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and are within the intent and meaning of, and are subject to, the provisions of the aforesaid trade regulation rule.

PAR. 14. In connection with its aforesaid advertisements, respondent, in a substantial number of instances, has failed to comply with the aforesaid trade regulation rule by offering food and grocery products or other merchandise for sale at a stated price by means of advertisements disseminated in areas served by certain of its stores which were covered by the advertisement but which did not have such products in stock and readily available for sale to customers during the effective period of the advertisement.

PAR. 15. In connection with its advertisements disseminated as aforesaid, respondent, in a substantial number of instances, has failed to comply with the aforesaid trade regulation rule by failing to make certain of the advertised items conspicuously and readily available for sale at or below the advertised prices.

PAR. 16. Respondent's aforesaid violations of the trade regulation rule concerning retail food store advertising and marketing practices constitute violations of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Seattle Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

B. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondent, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That respondent Baza'r, Inc., a corporation, its successors or assigns, its officers, agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of food or grocery products or other merchandise, hereafter sometimes referred to as items, offered or sold in its retail stores, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from, directly or indirectly:

1. 2. There is a sign or other conspicuous marking at the place where an item advertised below regular shelf price is displayed for sale clearly disclosing that the item is "as advertised" or "on sale" or words of similar import as appropriate, and disclosing on such sign or marking, the advertised price;

Provided, further, It shall constitute a defense to a charge of unavailability under subparagraph I.A.1. if respondent maintains and furnishes or makes available for inspection and copying upon the request of the Federal Trade Commission, such records and affidavits as will show that (a) the advertised items were delivered to its stores in quantities sufficient to meet reasonably anticipated demand, or (b) the advertised items were ordered but not delivered due to circumstances beyond respondent's control, and that respondent, upon notice or knowledge of such nondelivery acted immediately to contact the media to correct the advertisement or proposed advertisement to reflect the limited availability or unavailability of each advertised item, and (c) respondent immediately offered to customers on inquiry a "rain check" for each unavailable item which entitled the holder to purchase the item in the near future at or below the advertised price.

In determining compliance with section I of this order, the Commission will consider the circumstances surrounding failure to make advertised items conspicuously and readily available for sale at or below the advertised prices due to circumstances beyond respondent's control.

IV

It is further ordered, That respondent shall cause the following statement to be clearly and conspicuously set forth in each advertisement which represents that items are available for sale at a stated price at any of its stores: "Each of these advertised items is required to be readily available for sale at or below the advertised price in each ____ (store name) ____ store, except as specifically noted in this ad."

It is further ordered, That:

A. Respondent shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions and to each of its present and future officers and other personnel in its organization down to the level of and including assistant store directors who, directly or indirectly, have any supervisory responsibilities as to individual retail stores of respondent, or who are engaged in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising, and that respondent shall secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person;

B. It is further ordered, That respondent shall notify the Commission at least thirty days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the respondent which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

D. Respondent shall, all other provisions of this order notwithstanding, on or before each of the first three (3) anniversary dates of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order in the preceding year.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall notify the Commission at least thirty days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the respondent which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within sixty days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a written report setting forth in detail the manner and form of its compliance with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

D'ARCY-MacMANUS & MASIUS, INC.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket C-2757. Complaint, Oct. 31, 1975-Decision, Oct. 31, 1975

Consent order requiring a New York City advertising agency, among other things to cease making deceptive fuel economy claims for automobiles.

For the Commission: H. Robert Field and Richard A. Bloomfield.
For the respondent: Lewis E. Striebeck, Jr., St. Louis, Mo.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that D'Arcy-MacManus & Masius, Inc. a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

For the purposes of this complaint the following definition shall apply:

1. "EPA test" shall mean the test of air pollution control, containing fuel economy data, conducted by the Environmental Protection Agency, the results of which were published in the Federal Register of Monday, Nov. 5, 1973.

2. "In Commerce" shall mean commerce as commerce is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

3. "Advertisements" shall mean advertisements actually disseminated to the public as well as proposed advertisements or promotional material.

4. "Data cars" shall mean the actual automobiles tested by the Environmental Protection Agency in the EPA test.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent D'Arcy-MacManus & Masius, Inc. is a corporation, organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 437 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been engaged in the advertising and promotion of certain motor vehicles, including but not limited to that model of automobile designated by the Cadillac Division of the General Motors Corporation as the Cadillac Eldorado.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, respondent causes the advertising and promotional materials it prepares to be transported from its places of business located in various States of the United States to various media and clients located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent maintains and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in said advertising and promotional materials in commerce. The volume of business in such commerce has been and is substantial.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has disseminated, has caused the dissemination of, or has prepared for dissemination advertisements for the aforementioned Cadillac Eldorado, said dissemination having been by means of magazines and newspapers and by television stations located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, having sufficient power to carry such broadcast across State lines, for the purpose of inducing and which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said Cadillac Eldorado automobiles.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has prepared to be furnished to Cadillac Eldorado dealers located in various States certain advertisements with the knowledge and expectation that these advertisements and/or advertisements based thereon and substantially similar thereto would be disseminated directly or indirectly by at least some of the said dealers to the general public.

PAR. 6. Among the advertisements so disseminated, prepared, or furnished to dealers as aforesaid in Paragraphs Four and Five above is the advertisement attached as Exhibit A.

PAR. 7. At least some of said dealers did in fact disseminate in commerce an advertisement, substantially identical to the advertisement attached as Exhibit A.

PAR. 8. Exhibit B is an example of the advertisement disseminated by one of said dealers, and is substantially similar to Exhibit A.

PAR. 9. Said Exhibit A and B and other substantially similar thereto contain one or more false, deceptive and misleading representations and fail to disclose facts which are material in light of the representations contained therein. Therefore, the representations contained in said advertisements were, and are, deceptive or unfair.

PAR. 10. Said Exhibits A and B and others substantially similar thereto (hereinafter referred to as said advertisements) represent inter alia that the Environmental Protection Agency (hereinafter EPA) had conducted a test of gasoline economy (hereinafter EPA test) and in that test had found the Eldorado model of Cadillac to be superior in terms of gasoline mileage to the other automobile models listed in said advertisements.

PAR. 11. In truth and in fact the Eldorado model of the Cadillac automobile was not shown in the EPA test to be superior in terms of gasoline mileage to all of the other models of automobiles listed in those advertisements. Therefore, the representations contained in the said advertisements were, and are, deceptive or unfair.

PAR. 12. Respondent failed to disclose in said advertisements that many of the other models of automobiles listed in said advertisements were represented by more than one data car in the EPA test and that in several cases one or more or even a majority or the data cars representing the models of automobiles listed were found to be superior in terms of gasoline mileage in the EPA tests to both data cars of the Cadillac Eldorado. For example, the American Motors Wagoneer, listed sixth on Exhibit A, was represented by three data cars, two of which were superior in terms of gasoline mileage to both data cars of the Cadillac Eldorado.

PAR. 13. Respondent failed to disclose in said advertisement that there were two Cadillac Eldorado data cars tested in the EPA test, and that in many cases, one of these two Eldorado data cars was inferior in terms of gasoline mileage to some or even to all of the data cars representing the other models of automobiles listed in those advertisements. For example, one of the two Eldorado data cars was inferior in terms of gasoline mileage to both of the data cars representing the Mercedes MB-116, listed third on Exhibit A.

PAR. 14. The facts set forth in Paragraphs Twelve through Thirteen are each material in light of the representation contained in said advertisements and their omission makes these advertisements misleading in a material respect. Therefore, the said advertisements were, and are, deceptive or unfair.

PAR. 15. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent D'Arcy-MacManus & Masius, Inc. has been and now is in substantial competition in commerce with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the advertising of automobiles of the same general kind and nature as the Cadillac Eldorado.

PAR. 16. The use by respondent of the aforesaid unfair or deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the consuming public into the purchase of substantial quantities of automobiles manufactured by clients of respondent including General Motors. As a result thereof, substantial trade is being unfairly diverted to respondent and to clients of respondent from their competitors.

PAR. 17. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Bureau of Consumer Protection proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of thirty (30) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent D'Arcy-MacManus & Masius, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 437 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent D'Arcy-MacManus & Masius, Inc., its successors and assigns, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of products in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or by implication, by reference to a test or tests, that any automobile is superior with regard to fuel economy to any other automobile, unless:

(a) such superiority has been demonstrated, as to the model(s) for which it is claimed, by such test or tests with respect to each sample, or the valid average of all identical samples, of each model represented to have been tested; or

(b) the valid test results for each sample, or the valid average of all identical samples, of each model so compared, including the advertised model as well as such makes and models to which the advertised model is compared, are clearly and conspicuously disclosed.

For the purpose of this order "sample" shall mean an actual automobile tested. It is Provided, however, That nothing contained in this paragraph is intended to conflict with any guidelines, rules or regulations with respect to fuel economy testing or advertising that may hereafter from time to time be promulgated by any agency of the United States Government, and, if such conflict does occur, the guidelines, rules or regulations shall govern.

2. Misrepresenting in any manner the fuel economy of any automobiles or the superiority of any automobile over competing products in terms of fuel economy.

3. Representing, directly or by implication, by reference to a test or tests, that the performance of any consumer automotive product has been tested either alone or in comparison with other consumer automotive products unless such representation(s) accurately reflect the test results and unless the tests themselves are so devised and conducted as to substantiate each such representation concerning the featured tests.

4. Misrepresenting in any manner the purpose, contents or conclusion of any test, report or study relating to the performance of any consumer automotive product.

For purposes of Paragraphs 3 and 4 of this order "test" shall include demonstrations which are claimed to be proof of the representations made.

5. It shall be a defense under Paragraphs 1-4 of this order that respondent neither knew nor should have known of the facts concerning the test, fuel economy or performance which make the advertising false or misleading.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Tri-West Construction Company, Inc., a corporation, and William B. Cafarelli, individually and as an officer of Tri-West Construction Company, Inc. (hereinafter respondents), have violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45) and various provisions of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues this complaint:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Tri-West Construction Company, Inc.

(hereinafter Tri-West) is an Idaho corporation with its principal office and place of business located at 3826 W. State St., Boise, Idaho.

Respondent William B. Cafarelli is president and sole owner of Tri-West. He controls the policies, acts and practices of Tri-West, including those hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of Tri-West.

PAR. 2. Respondents operate a home improvement and renovation business in which they offer for sale, sell, distribute and install residential siding materials and other home improvement products, and services related thereto.

COUNT I

Alleging violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count I as if fully set forth verbatim. All allegations stated in the present tense include the past tense.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents cause their products, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of Idaho to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States including Washington, Oregon and Nevada, and cause work orders, contracts and other business papers and documents to be transmitted across State lines by and between respondents' representatives, in implementation and facilitation of their said sales of products and services. Respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in these products in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their home improvement products and services, respondents through their salesmen and representatives make numerous statements in oral sales presentations with respect to the nature and time limitations of their offer, their prices, their business affiliations, and savings available to purchasers.

By and through their use of such statements, respondents represent directly or by implication that:

A. Tri-West is a subsidiary or division of United States Steel Corporation.

B. Tri-West has an exclusive arrangement with United States Steel Corporation whereby Tri-West is the only distributor of such company's residential siding materials in the particular trade area.

C. Tri-West and United States Steel Corporation advertise their siding materials and/or services by means of Tri-West's work on customers' homes.

D. After the installation of respondents' siding is completed, the homes of their customers will be used for demonstration and advertising purposes; and, as a result of allowing or agreeing to allow their homes to be used as models, demonstrators, or before-and-after examples, such customers will be granted discounts or reduced prices.

E. The prices offered by respondents to customers are discount or special prices available for only a limited period of time, and which afford savings to customers because of reductions from respondents' regular selling prices.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact:

A. Tri-West is not a subsidiary or division of United States Steel Corporation.

B. Tri-West does not have an exclusive or any other arrangement with United States Steel Corporation whereby Tri-West is the only distributor of such siding materials in any particular area.

C. Neither Tri-West nor United States Steel Corporation advertise their siding materials and/or services by means of Tri-West's work on customers' homes.

D. After the installation of respondents' siding is completed, the homes of respondents' customers are not and will not, in most instances, be used for demonstration or advertising purposes; and customers are not granted discounts or reduced prices as a result of allowing or agreeing to allow their homes to be used as models, demonstrators, or before-and-after examples.

E. The prices offered by respondents to customers are not special or reduced prices available for only a limited period of time, and do not afford savings to customers because of reductions from respondents' regular selling prices. In fact, respondents do not have regular selling prices; the prices at which their home improvement products and services are sold vary from purchaser to purchaser.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraph Four are false, misleading, and deceptive.

PAR. 6. In the further course and conduct of their business, and in furtherance of a sales program for inducing the purchase of their home improvement products and services, respondents and their salesmen or representatives in many instances engage in the following additional unfair, misleading and deceptive acts or practices:

A. After a binding purchase order has been signed between respondents and the customer, specifying the work to be done and the agreed price therefor, respondents attempt by various means, either before or after starting the work, to coerce or induce an increase in the price of such work. Among such means are statements and declarations by respondents that the contract price was a mistake, that the work cannot be done at the contract price, that Tri-West will stop work if a higher price is not agreed on, and other statements of similar import. Respondents thereby deprive customers of the opportunity to choose freely the products and services that they desire, and place at a severe bargaining disadvantage those customers for whom work has already started before respondents demand the higher price.

B. Prior to actual completion of the work, respondents obtain and attempt to obtain the customer's signature on a "Certificate of Completion" or other document attesting to respondents' completion of the work contracted for. In order to obtain this signed certificate respondents make oral statements and representations that it is only a technical requirement, and otherwise disparage the importance of the certificate. By obtaining such signed certificate prematurely, respondents deprive customers of bargaining leverage in instances where respondents fail to complete the work promptly or to the satisfaction of the customer.

C. Respondents fail to disclose to the customer that their furnishing of home improvement products and services gives respondents and others the right, under State law, to file a lien for materials and/or labor on the customer's home. Such fact, if known to respondents' customers, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase such products and services from respondents. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose a material fact.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents are and have been in substantial competition in or affecting commerce with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of home improvement products and services of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 8. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements and representations and the aforesaid unfair and deceptive acts and practices, and respondents' failures to disclose material facts, as alleged above, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations are true and complete, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce and unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violations of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two above are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim. All allegations stated in the present tense include the past tense.

PAR. 10. In the ordinary course and conduct of their business, respondents regularly extend and arrange for the extension of consumer credit, as "arrange for the extension of credit," and "consumer credit" are defined in Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 11. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, in the ordinary course of business and in connection with their credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Regulation Z, respondents have caused and are causing their customers to execute a binding purchase order, hereinafter referred to as the "Order Contract." Respondents do not provide customers with any other consumer credit cost disclosures before the transaction is consummated.

PAR. 12. By and through their use of the order contract, respondents:

A. Fail to use the term "cash downpayment" to describe the downpayment in money made in connection with the credit sale, as required by Section 226.8(c)(2) of Regulation Z.

B. Fail to use the term "amount financed" to describe the amount of credit extended, as required by Section 226.8(c)(7) of Regulation Z.

C. Fail to use the term "finance charge" to describe the sum of all charges required by Section 226.4 of Regulation Z to be included therein, as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(i) of Regulation Z.

D. Fail to use the term "deferred payment price" to describe the sum of the cash price, all charges which are included in the amount financed but which are not part of the finance charge, and the finance charge, and fail in some instances to disclose that sum, all as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(ii) of Regulation Z.

E. Fail to disclose the date on which the finance charge begins to accrue when different from the date of the transaction, as required by Section 226.8(b)(1) of Regulation Z.

F. Fail to use the term "total of payments" to describe the sum of the payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness, as required by Section 226.8(b)(3) of Regulation Z.

G. Fail in some instances to disclose the due dates or periods of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness, as required by Section 226.8(b)(3) of Regulation Z.

H. Fail to describe or identify the type of security interest retained or acquired by the creditor in connection with the extension of credit, as required by Section 226.8(b)(5) of Regulation Z.

I. Fail to identify the method of computing any unearned portion of the finance charge in the event of prepayment of the obligation when said obligation includes a precomputed finance charge, as required by Section 226.8(b)(7) of Regulation Z.

J. Fail to include in the finance charge certain charges or premiums for credit life insurance when respondents did not disclose to the customer in writing that such insurance is not required and did not obtain a specific dated and separately signed affirmative written indication of the customer's desire for such insurance as prescribed by Section 226.4(a)(5) of Regulation Z, and thereby fail to state the finance charge accurately as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(i) of Regulation Z.

K. Fail to furnish to the customer a duplicate of the instrument or other statement containing the disclosures prescribed by Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.8(a) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 13. By and through the use and acceptance of the Order Contract and by virtue of the work performed by respondents on the customer's residence, a security interest, as "security interest" is defined in Section 226.2(z) of Regulation Z, is or will be retained or acquired in real property which is used or expected to be used as the principal residence of the customer. The retention or acquisition of such security interest in said real property confers upon respondents' credit customers the right to rescind the transaction until midnight of the third business day following the consummation of the transaction or the date of delivery of all the disclosures required by Regulation Z, whichever is later, as prescribed by Section 226.9 of Regulation Z.

By and through their use of the order contract respondents fail to furnish such customers with any copy whatever of the notice of opportunity to rescind required by Sections 226.9(a) and (b) of Regulation Z, and to set forth on such notice the "Effect of rescission," Section 226.9(d) of Regulation Z, in the manner and form prescribed by Section 226.9(b) of Regulation Z.

Further, in some instances respondents make physical changes in such customers' property and performed work or services on such property before expiration of the rescission period provided in Section 226.9(a) of Regulation Z. Respondents' failure to refrain from commencing work pursuant to rescindable contracts, before the rescission period has expired, is in violation of Section 226.9(c) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 14. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failures to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z constitute violations of that Act and, pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondents have thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Seattle Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act and of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty days, and having duly considered the comment filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34 of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

A. Respondent Tri-West Construction Company, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Idaho, with its office and principal place of business located at 3826 W. State St., Boise, Idaho.

For the respondents: Robert L. Klabacka, Klabacka & Kirkhuff, Sun Prairie, Wis.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Diesel Truck Drivers Training School, Inc., a corporation, and Robert L. Klabacka, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Diesel Truck Drivers Training School, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Wisconsin, with its principal office and place of business located at rural route #1, Sun Prairie, Wis.

Respondent Robert L. Klabacka is an individual and officer of respondent corporation. His business address is the same as that of said corporate respondent.

The said individual respondent formulates, directs and controls that acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and have been for some time last past, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of courses of study and instruction purporting to prepare graduates thereof for employment as truck drivers and related occupations. Said courses when pursued to completion include a three-week period of in-residence training at a training facility located at Sun Prairie, Wis.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, the publication of advertisements concerning the said courses in newspapers of general circulation and have utilized the services of salesmen and franchisees who induce prospective purchasers of said courses, located in States other than the State of Wisconsin, to contact said salesmen and franchisees at respondents' and franchisees' offices. Said salesmen and franchisees transmit to and receive from respondents contracts, checks and other instruments of a commercial nature relating to the sale of said courses to said purchasers. Respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have published or caused to be published in the "Help-Wanted" and other columns of newspapers advertisements containing statements regarding job opportunities, training and wages for persons interested in becoming truck drivers. Typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive, of such advertisements are the following:

DIESEL TRUCK DRIVER TRAINING 3701 East State St., Room 103, Rockford, Ill. 61108 - Phone 397-0430

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the statements contained in the advertisements set forth in Paragraph Four, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, respondents represent, directly or by implication, that:

1. The corporate respondent operates, or is affiliated with, or represents a trucking company.
2. Respondents are offering employment to qualified applicants who will be trained as truck drivers.
3. Persons receiving training from respondents will earn $350 per week as truck drivers or in related occupations upon completion of training.
4. There is a reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be a need or demand for truck drivers which respondents' training is designed to meet.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The corporate respondent does not operate or represent and is not affiliated with any trucking company but, to the contrary, is engaged in the sale of courses of instruction to prospective purchasers.
2. Respondents do not offer employment to persons who have been trained as truck drivers but attempt to and do sell courses of instruction to said purchasers.
3. Few persons who received training from respondents pursuant to said offer have earned amounts such as $350 per week as truck drivers or in related occupations as a result of such training.
4. Respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be a need or demand for truck drivers which respondents' training is designed to meet.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents cause persons who respond to the aforesaid or similar advertisements to contact respondents' salesmen and franchisees. For the purpose of inducing the sale of said courses, such salesmen and franchisees make to prospective purchasers many statements and representations, directly or by implication, regarding opportunities for employment as truck drivers available to purchasers of said courses, the assistance furnished to graduates of courses offered by respondents in obtaining employment and other matters. Some of the aforesaid statements and representations appear in brochures, pamphlets and other printed material furnished to said salesmen and franchisees by respondents and in other statements and representations made orally by said salesmen and franchisees. Among and typical, but not all inclusive, of such statements and representations are the following:

1. Respondents have been requested by trucking companies to train drivers for jobs as truck drivers with their companies upon completion of said training.

2. Respondents provide a placement service which will secure jobs as truck drivers for graduates of said courses and who want to work in such capacities.

3. Graduates of said courses who want to work are assured jobs as truck drivers as a consequence of graduating from said courses.

4. Respondents have a free placement service and free job assistance for their graduates.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents have not been requested by trucking companies to train people for jobs as truck drivers, which jobs shall be offered by such companies to graduates of said training.

2. The placement service provided by respondents will not secure a job as a truck driver for graduates of said courses who want to work in such capacity.

3. Graduates of said courses who want to work are not assured jobs as truck drivers as a consequence of graduating from said courses.

4. Such placement assistance as is furnished by respondents is not free, but rather is included in the tuition cost of courses offered by respondents.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Seven hereof were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. Respondents offered for sale courses of instruction to prepare graduates thereof for jobs as truck drivers without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives or franchisees: (1) the recent percentage of graduates of each school that were able to obtain the employment for which they were trained; (2) the employers that hired any such graduates; (3) the initial salary any such graduates received; and (4) the percentage of recent enrollees of each school for each course offered that have failed to complete their course of instruction. Knowledge of such facts would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon graduation and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose a material fact, which, if known to certain prospective enrollees, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase such courses of instruction. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair.

PAR. 10. Respondents have entered into contracts with purchasers of said courses of instruction which contain provisions for the cancellation of said contracts and the refund of tuition monies paid by said purchasers. In many instances, respondents have failed to offer to refund and refused to refund to purchasers who have cancelled their contracts such monies as may be due and owing according to the terms of said contracts.

The use by respondents of the aforesaid practice and their continued retention of said sums, as aforesaid, is an unfair act or practice and an act of unfair competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 11. (a) Respondents have been using the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading or deceptive acts and practices, which a reasonably prudent person should have known, under all of the facts and circumstances, were unfair, false, misleading or deceptive, to induce persons to pay or to contract to pay over to them substantial sums of money to purchasers in connection with their future employment and careers was of little value compared to the sums of money paid by said purchasers. Respondents have received the said sums and have failed to offer refunds and have failed to refund such sums to rescind such contractual obligations of substantial numbers of enrollees and participants in such courses who were unable to secure employment in the positions and fields for which they have been purportedly trained by respondents.

The use by respondents of the aforesaid acts and practices, their continued retention of said sums and their continued failure to rescind such contractual obligations of their customers, as aforesaid, are unfair acts or practices.

(b) In the alternative and separate from Paragraph Eleven (a) herein, respondents, who are in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of courses of vocational instruction, have been and are now using, as aforesaid, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices, to induce persons to pay over to respondents substantial sums of money to purchase courses of instruction.

The effect of using the aforesaid acts and practices to secure substantial sums of money is or may be to substantially hinder, lessen, restrain, or prevent competition between respondents and the aforesaid competitors.

Therefore, the said acts and practices constitute an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 12. By and through the use of the aforesaid acts, practices, statements and representations, respondents place in the hands of others the means and instrumentalities by and through which they mislead and deceive the public in the manner and as to the things hereinbefore alleged.

PAR. 13. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar courses of study and instruction.

PAR. 14. The use of respondents to the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and their failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and complete, and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase said courses of study and instruction offered by respondents by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 15. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Diesel Truck Drivers Training School, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and officers and Robert L. (A) have in good faith conducted a statistically valid survey which establishes the validity of any such representation at all times when the representation is made, and

(B) have disclosed in immediate and conspicuous conjunction with any such representation, that:

IN THE MATTER OF

CARSON PRODUCTS COMPANY, ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SECS. 5 & 12 OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket C-2761. Complaint, Nov. 3, 1975-Decision, Nov. 3, 1975

Consent order requiring a Savannah, Ga., manufacturer of facial depilatory and beard removal products, among other things to cease failing to make material disclosures as to the safety and correct use of its products.

For the Commission: Barry E. Barnes.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Carson Products Company, a corporation, and Parker A. Reische, Jr., individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues this complaint, stating its charges as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Unless otherwise required by context, the following definition shall apply for purposes of this complaint and the accompanying order:

"Material facts" means facts material in light of representations made or material with respect to consequences which may result from the use of the commodity to which the advertisement or representations relate under such conditions as are customary or usual or under the conditions prescribed in the advertisement or representations.

All allegations in this complaint stated in the present tense include the past tense.

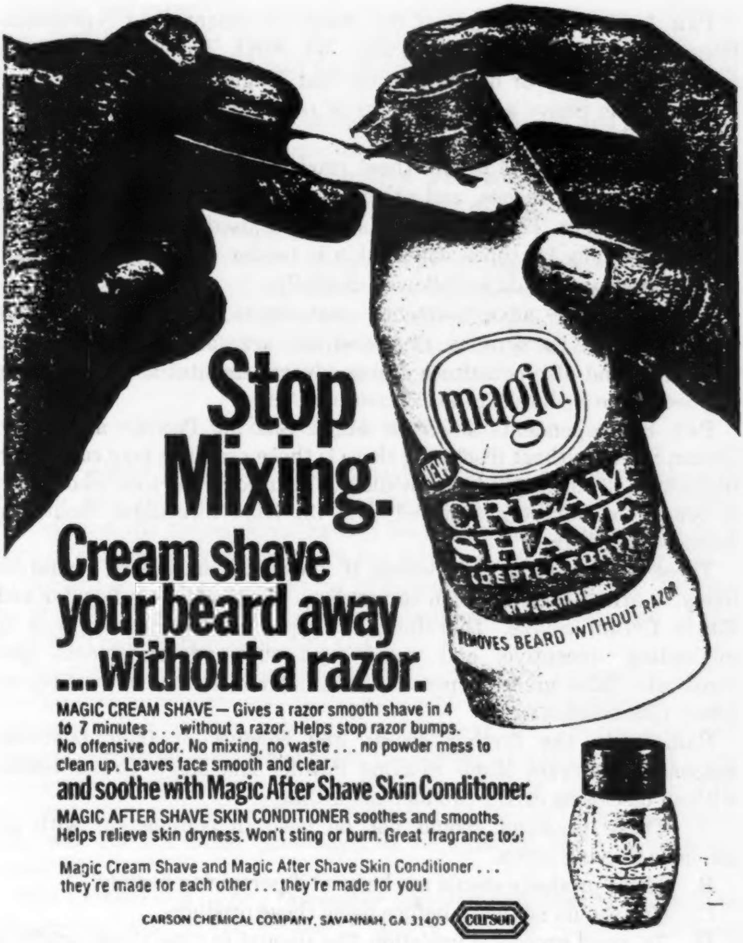
PAR. 2. Respondent Carson Products Company, formerly known as Carson Chemical Company, Inc., is a Georgia corporation with its office and principal place of business located at P.O. Box 3457, Savannah, Ga.

Respondent Parker A. Reische, Jr. is an officer of Carson Products Company. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of Carson Products Company, including those hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of said corporation.

PAR. 3. Respondents Carson Products Company and Parker A. Reische, Jr. engage in the manufacturing, advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of Magic Shaving Powder and Magic Cream Shave, facial depilatory or beard removal products, which are "drugs" or "cosmetics," or both, as those terms are defined in Section 15 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. When applied to the skin, said products remove facial hair through chemical action. They are used frequently by men who suffer from pseudofolliculitis, or "razor bumps," a painful skin condition caused by shaving with a razor.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, respondents cause these depilatory products, when sold, to be shipped and distributed from their place of business to retail stores and other purchasers located in various other States of the United States and in foreign countries. Respondents disseminate or cause to be disseminated certain advertisements concerning Magic Shaving Powder and Magic Cream Shave (1) by United States mails, newspapers and magazines of interstate circulation, radio broadcasts of interstate transmission, and by various other means in or having an effect upon commerce, for the purpose of inducing or which are likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of these depilatory products; or (2) by various means, for the purpose of inducing, or which are likely to induce, the purchase of these products in or having an effect upon commerce. Thus, respondents maintain a substantial course of trade in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 5. Typical and illustrative of the statements and representations made in respondents' advertisements, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:



Stop Mixing.

Cream shave your beard away ...without a razor.

MAGIC CREAM SHAVE — Gives a razor smooth shave in 4 to 7 minutes . . . without a razor. Helps stop razor bumps. No offensive odor. No mixing, no waste . . . no powder mess to clean up. Leaves face smooth and clear.

and soothe with Magic After Shave Skin Conditioner.

MAGIC AFTER SHAVE SKIN CONDITIONER soothes and smooths. Helps relieve skin dryness. Won't sting or burn. Great fragrance too!

Magic Cream Shave and Magic After Shave Skin Conditioner . . . they're made for each other . . . they're made for you!

CARSON CHEMICAL COMPANY, SAVANNAH, GA 31403 carson

PAR. 6. Through the use of the above statements and representations, and others not specifically set forth herein, respondents represent, directly or by implication, that Magic Shaving Powder and Magic Cream Shave are safe means of removing facial hair without a razor for virtually everyone.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact these products contain chemicals which can cause burns, rashes, and other skin irritations for a substantial number of users. These products should be used with caution at all times, especially by those whose skin is tender or severely irritated. Label directions should be followed carefully.

Therefore, the advertisements, statements and representations referred to in Paragraphs Five and Six are false, misleading and deceptive, and also constitute "false advertisements" as that term is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 8. Respondents advertise Magic Shaving Powder and Magic Cream Shave without disclosing that (1) these products may cause skin irritations; (2) these products should not be used by persons whose skin is tender or severely irritated; and (3) label directions should be followed carefully.

These are material facts which, if known to consumers, would be likely to affect their decision to purchase Magic Shaving Powder and Magic Cream Shave. Therefore, failure to disclose such facts is misleading, deceptive, and unfair and such advertisements also constitute "false advertisements" as that term is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 9. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents market Magic Shaving Powder and Magic Cream Shave without disclosing on the product labels that:

A. These products should not be used in conjunction with an alcoholic shaving lotion.

B. These products should not be used if perspiring heavily.

C. One should not wash before using these products.

D. To avoid excessive irritation, the amount of time these products are left on the skin is crucial.

E. If hairs remain after the first application, one should not immediately reuse these products, but should wait at least 36 hours before reapplication.

These are material facts which, if known to consumers, would be likely to affect their decision as to whether or not to purchase these products. Therefore, failure to disclose such facts on the product labels is unfair and deceptive.

PAR. 10. Respondents' aforesaid use of false, misleading and deceptive advertisements and unfair and deceptive labeling has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive consumers into erroneous and mistaken beliefs about the safety of Magic Shave Powder and Magic Cream Shave and into the purchase of substantial quantities of these products.

PAR. 11. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been and are now in substantial competition in or affecting commerce with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of products of the same general kind and nature as sold by respondents.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and respondents' competitors and constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices and unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce in violation of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Seattle Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

A. Respondent Carson Products Company, formerly known as Carson Chemical Company, Inc., is a Georgia corporation with its office and principal place of business located at P.O. Box 3457, Savannah, Ga.

Respondent Parker A. Reische, Jr. is an officer of Carson Products Company. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of Carson Products Company. His address is the same as that of said corporation.

II

It is further ordered, That respondents Carson Products Company, a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Parker A. COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and by virtue of authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Ira Sachs, an individual, trading and doing business as Burglar King, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

ORDER GRANTING JOINT MOTION TO WITHDRAW MATTER FROM ADJUDICATION

The administrative law judge has certified a joint motion to withdraw this matter from adjudication for settlement purposes (Rules of Practice, Section 3.25(b)). The motion is opposed by Allied Grape Growers, whom we allowed to participate in these proceedings on the limited issue of relief by our order of June 26, 1973 (82 F.T.C. 1826).

The complaint alleged that on or about Feb. 21, 1969, respondent Heublein acquired a controlling interest in United Vintners, Inc., a wholly-owned production and marketing subsidiary of Allied. United is now a wholly-owned subsidiary of Heublein Allied Vintners, Inc., in which Heublein has an 82 percent interest and Allied the remainder.

The acquisition was alleged to have violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The notice order would require divestiture, within nine months from the date the order becomes final, of all assets acquired by Heublein and would allow individuals or groups of individuals who were members of Allied on Aug. 31, 1968, first option to purchase the divested property.

The proposed consent order, agreed to by complaint counsel and counsel for respondent Heublein, would exclude from divestiture certain trademarks,[1] properties and equipment and does not provide that members of Allied will have a first option.[2] The proposed order requires that divestiture be accomplished within two years from the date the order becomes final subject to the following proviso:

> That the running of the period within which respondent must divest shall be suspended until the effect of this consent agreement and the obligations imposed on Heublein by this consent agreement on the rights and obligations of Heublein, United and Allied Grape Growers ("Allied") relating to the grape supply contract executed by said firms on February 19, 1969, and the legality of said supply contract are finally adjudicated or resolved and, Provided, further, however, that the divestiture period will not be suspended unless a proceeding to resolve any unresolved issues with respect to the effect of this consent agreement upon said rights and obligations and the legality of said supply contract is instituted no later than sixty (60) days after this order becomes final.

The grape supply contract purports to grant Allied the right to supply United's grape requirements for up to 80 years as well as much of Heublein's California grape requirements for the same period. The contract also provides that Allied would have a first option to purchase United's capital stock.

The proposed consent order makes no further reference to the supply contract. However, Exhibit A to the joint motion provides that, in the event the current supply agreement is held to be illegal or inoperative, alternative supply agreements for shorter periods of time and smaller percentages of requirements would become effective.

The Commission granted Allied leave to participate in these proceedings with respect to the issue of relief "either at a special hearing devoted to the issue of relief, or during such parts of the trial as may relate to the issue of relief* * *." (82 F.T.C. 1826, 1828). The Commission, in granting Allied limited participation, recognized "that in selling 82 percent of its marketing arm to Heublein, Allied intended thereby to retain sufficient contractual rights so that United would remain a large purchaser of grapes produced by Allied's grower-members.[3] Allied now sees the rights and expectations with which it entered into its joint venture threatened by the Commission's complaint." (82 F.T.C. at 1828).

Although the instant motion was opposed by Allied, the law judge concluded that the motion was "unopposed" within the meaning of Section 3.25(b) of the rules of practice, and that he was, accordingly, required to certify the motion to the Commission. The law judge, however, included in his certification a recommendation that the joint motion be denied.

[2] Respondent has, however, indicated a willingness to add to the proposed consent order a provision granting Allied a right of first refusal.

[3] Heublein asserts that the supply contract was not consideration for the acquisition. However, whether or not it was consideration, the important point is that Allied claims that its contract rights could be jeopardized by a divestiture order.

We agree with the law judge's determination that he was required to certify the joint motion to the Commission. We also concur in his conclusion that the opposition of a non-party participant does not necessarily preclude acceptance of a consent order. Non-parties are permitted to participate in our proceedings upon a determination that they will make a sufficiently important contribution to our understanding of one or more issues to outweigh any delays and other added costs resulting from their participation. We see no reason why non-party participants should be afforded a right to veto a proposed agreement. We disagree, however, with the law judge's recommendation that the joint motion be denied. The judge recommended that we deny the motion for the following reasons:

1. The number of issues and the prolonged hearings that may be required preliminary to acceptance of the consent agreement and the possibility that the consent agreement may then not be accepted, in which event the entire case would still have to be tried anew, but would be substantially delayed by virtue of the interim proceedings;
2. The apparent reliance of complaint counsel and respondent in agreeing upon the consent order upon the mistaken belief that an order allowing the transfer of the property back to Allied under right of first refusal would per se violate the principles of the antitrust laws;
3. The inappropriateness of submission of a consent order where the meaning and effect thereof on interested parties requires subsequent adjudication with provision for delay in implementing that order of two years following finality of that subsequent adjudication. A consent order should be intrinsically clear as to its meaning and intent. This comment is particularly applicable to complaint counsel who recognize, but take no position on, issues that have been raised;
4. The approach of determining private rights as between parties as a condition precedent to considering the consent order-as opposed to considering the consent order but taking into account private rights and equities as appropriate;
5. The determination of contractual rights and obligations between Heublein and Allied as to property proposed to be kept by Heublein, and a rewriting of the contractual obligations between Heublein and Allied as to such property. These appear to be individual rights and obligations not appropriate for Commission determination.

We disagree that any hearings, prolonged or otherwise, would be required preliminary to provisional acceptance of the consent agreement. The first step in our consideration of a consent agreement is our determination whether the proposed consent order is adequate to protect the public interest. In the event that the Commission determines that the proposed order is inadequate, the agreement will be rejected and there will, of course, be no need to hear Allied's objections to the agreement.

In case the agreement is provisionally accepted, it will be placed on the public record, and members of the public, including Allied, will have an opportunity to raise any and all objections to the agreement. At that time Allied would have an opportunity to argue that hearings were required on its claim that the proposed order is inconsistent with its rights and interests.

Other questions raised by the law judge and Allied about the merits of the consent agreement can best be considered by the Commission in connection with its determination whether to provisionally accept the agreement. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the joint motion to withdraw this matter from adjudication be, and it hereby is, granted.

INTERLOCUTORY ORDER

These matters are before us upon two applications for review and a certification by an administrative law judge. In Electronic Computer Programming Institute, Inc., the administrative law judge denied complaint counsel's application for a subpoena duces tecum seeking, in part, evidence needed to support restitutionary relief and granted complaint counsel the right to appeal pursuant to Section 3.23(b) of the rules of practice. Respondents had argued that the subpoena sought information which was irrelevant in view of Heater v. F.T.C., 503 F.2d 321 (9th Cir. 1974), which held that the Commission lacks authority under Section 5 to order restitution for deceptive practices that occurred prior to the issuance of a final cease and desist order ("retroactive restitution."). The law judge, without deciding the relevancy of the subpoena's specifications, suggested that the Commission might consider whether further proceedings in this matter should be deferred pending final review of Heater in the Supreme Court.[1]

In Lafayette United Corporation, the administrative law judge issued an order denying respondents' motion to strike the notice order provision providing that consumer redress might be sought, granted in part and denied in part respondents' motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum, and granted respondents' motion for a protective order. The law judge certified to the Commission the limited question whether further proceedings should be stayed, in whole or in part, pending the Commission's decision whether it would be in the public interest to allow complaint counsel to continue to seek restitutionary relief.

Finally, in Control Data Corporation, respondent Control Data filed a motion to strike Paragraph Eleven of the complaint which alleges in part that Control Data's retention of funds obtained for "virtually worthless" courses of instruction was an unfair act or practice in violation of Section 5. Respondent contended that the paragraph was included in the complaint solely to lay the groundwork for an award of retroactive restitution, barred by the Heater decision. The law judge denied the motion but granted respondent permission to appeal under Section 3.23(b).

[1] The Commission subsequently decided not to seek review in the Supreme Court.

On July 15, 1975 [p. 180, herein], the Commission placed the above-captioned matters on its docket for review pursuant to Section 3.23(b) of the rules of practice and invited the parties to brief the following issues:

> (1) To what extent, if any, should evidence be presented and findings be made in the administrative proceedings regarding the nature and extent of the injuries sustained by consumers as a result of the challenged acts or practices?
> (2) To what extent, if any, should evidence be presented and findings be made on the issue whether the challenged acts or practices are such that "a reasonable man would have known under the circumstances [that they are] dishonest or fraudulent"? [Federal Trade Commission Act, 9(a)(2), as amended by Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act, Pub. Law 93-637, §206 (Jan. 4, 1975)].

Although the Commission adheres to its view that Heater was wrongly decided, we have determined that restitution under Section 5 will not be ordered in these cases. In the event, however, that cease and desist orders issue in these matters, and should the circumstances warrant, the Commission reserves the right to bring consumer redress actions under these cases is whether inquiry into issues relating solely to redress under Section 19 should be permitted before the administrative law judges.

Section 19(a)(2) authorizes the Commission, after it has issued a final cease and desist order, to seek consumer redress in a court of competent jurisdiction. "If the Commission satisfies the court that the act or practice to which the cease and desist order relates is one which a reasonable man would have known under the circumstances was dishonest or fraudulent, the court may grant relief under subsection (b)."[2]

Section 19(c)(1) provides that in a consumer redress action, "the findings of the Commission as to the material facts in the proceeding under Section 5(b)* * *shall be conclusive unless (i) the terms of such cease and desist order expressly provide that the Commission's findings shall not be conclusive, or (ii) the order became final by reason of Section 5(g)(1) [providing that a cease and desist order becomes final if a timely appeal is not taken], in which case such finding shall be conclusive if supported by evidence."

Section 19 clearly contemplates that the Commission will make all findings pertinent to the Section 5(b) proceeding and the court will make those additional determinations relevant to the redress action. Thus, the court will decide whether redress is warranted under the "reasonable man" standard, applicable to actions brought under Section 19(a)(2), the nature of the relief necessary to redress any injury to consumers, and which consumers, if any, are entitled to relief.

[2] Subsection (b) authorizes the court to grant such relief as may be necessary to redress injury, including, but not limited to "rescission or reformation of contracts, the refund of money or return of property, the payment of damages, and public notification respecting * * * the unfair or deceptive act or practice * * *."

However, as complaint counsel argue, the roles of the Commission and the court will frequently overlap. Subject to the exceptions set forth in Section 19(c)(1), "the findings of the Commission as to the material facts in the proceeding under Section 5(b) * * * shall be conclusive * * *." Frequently, findings material to the Section 5 proceeding will also have a bearing on whether the "reasonable man" standard has been satisfied and on consumer injury issues.

For instance, while an advertiser's knowledge of the falsity of a representation is not an element of a Section 5 violation, see, e.g., D.D.D. Corp. v. F.T.C., 125 F.2d 679 (7th Cir. 1942), it may be relevant to issues relating to the scope of relief and the degree to which a respondent must be "fenced in" to prevent recurrences of the illegal conduct in the future. See, e.g., F.T.C. v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 429 (1957); William H. Rorer, Inc. v. F.T.C., 374 F.2d 622, 626 (2d Cir. 1967); Joseph A. Kaplan & Sons, Inc. v. F.T.C., 347 F.2d 785, 789 (D.C. Cir. 1965); Taylor-Friedsam Co., Inc., 69 F.T.C. 483, 497 (1966).

Moreover, while a showing of actual injury to consumers is not necessary to a finding that Section 5(b) has been violated, see, e.g., Northern Feather Works, Inc. v. F.T.C., 234 F.2d 335 (3d Cir. 1956), evidence relevant to injury may, under some circumstances, also be pertinent to whether the challenged representations were false and, hence, in violation of Section 5. The complaints in the instant cases allege that respondents falsely represented the availability of jobs for which their students were trained. A finding that graduates were not placed in such jobs would be relevant both to whether the representations were false and to whether consumers were injured.

Nevertheless, it is clear that findings pertinent to Section 19 issues, but not material to Section 5 issues, would not be conclusive in a consumer redress action. This does not mean that inquiry into Section 19 consumer redress issues[3] should await the issuance of a cease and desist order. If consumers are to be afforded the relief to which they are entitled, redress actions must be commenced as soon as possible and the actions must be prosecuted expeditiously. Delay in such cases would often reduce the chances of granting fully effective relief to consumers since, with the passage of time, evidence inevitably becomes more difficult to obtain, assets are dissipated or hidden, and some of the consumers to be granted redress become impossible to locate.

[3] Issues relevant to the Section 19 action but not to the determination of Section 5 liability will henceforth be referred to as "Section 19 issues." Evidence relevant to whether a Section 19 action should be brought and to the determination of Section 19 liability, but not to liability under Section 5, will be referred to as "Section 19 evidence."

There can be little doubt that during the pre-complaint stage of an investigation, the Commission can collect Section 19 evidence since the prospect of obtaining consumer redress will often be a factor in deciding whether the issuance of a complaint would be in the public interest. Information collected during the pre-complaint investigation will, of course, also be available at the close of the administrative proceedings to assist the Commission in deciding, assuming law violations have been found, whether to commence a redress action. It is likely that information collected during the pre-complaint investigation and the record of the Section 5 proceeding will provide the Commission with most of the information it will need to decide whether to commence a redress action.

Therefore, we can see little reason why proceedings before the law judges should be delayed by the discovery and reception of evidence relevant only to Section 19 issues. We have, thus, determined that the law judges should not permit the discovery or introduction of evidence relevant only to Section 19. On the other hand, efforts to obtain or introduce evidence material to the Section 5(b) proceeding shall not be objectionable merely because the evidence might also be relevant to a Section 19 redress action.[4]

With these guidelines in mind, we shall consider the motions now before us:

1. Control Data Corporation, et al.

We agree with complaint counsel that Paragraph Eleven should not be stricken from the complaint. Since a seller's retention of its customer's money can be an unfair trade practice in and of itself, e.g., Curtis Publishing Co., 78 F.T.C. 1472, 1516 (1971), the paragraph states a cause of action, and, if proved, might warrant the ordering of other than restitutionary relief.

2. Electronic Computer Programming, Inc., et al.

Now that we have ruled how the redress issues in these cases should be treated, there is obviously no need to defer further proceedings. Since the law judge has not ruled on the propriety of complaint counsel's discovery requests, he should now consider their application in accordance with the guidelines set forth in this opinion.

3. Lafayette United Corporation, et al.

As in Electronic Computer Programming Institute, Inc., there is now no need to stay further proceedings. Respondents' claim that restitution is inappropriate in this matter because their services were not "worthless" has largely been mooted, in view of our decision not to order retroactive restitution under Section 5 in this matter. To the extent that it might be relevant to other kinds of relief under Section 5, a determination of respondents' claim will have to await a fuller record. Accordingly,

[4] Because of our decision not to permit inquiry into Section 19 issues during the proceedings below, we find it unnecessary at this time to decide claims made in Docket Nos. 8940 and 8963 that discovery of Section 19 evidence would be inappropriate because Section 19 does not reach acts that occurred prior to Jan. 4, 1975, the date of enactment of the Improvement Act, or prior to the issuance of the complaints in these matters.

It is ordered, That the administrative law judge's order in Docket No. 8940 denying the motion by respondent Control Data Corporation to strike Paragraph Eleven of the complaint is affirmed; the order of the administrative law judge in Docket No. 8952 denying complaint counsel's application for a subpoena duces tecum is remanded for reconsideration in accordance with the guidelines set forth at p. 5 of this interlocutory order; and the motion in Docket No. 8963 that further proceedings in this matter be stayed is denied.[5]

[5] The Commission denies the motions by respondents in Docket Nos. 8940 and 8963 for oral argument.

Services, Inc., a corporation, and Jerome E. Baker, Jerry L. Nickell and James F. Bell, individually and as officers of said corporations, and Ronald A. Green and Thomas F. Fangrow, individually and as officers of Inter-Continental Services Corporation, and Richard L. Wilson, individually and as an officer of North American Credit Services, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Inter-Continental Services Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, with its principal office and place of business located at 2000 Johnson Dr., in the city of Shawnee Mission, State of Kansas.

Respondent North American Credit Services, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, with its principal office and place of business located at 2000 Johnson Dr., in the city of Shawnee Mission, State of Kansas.

Respondents Jerome E. Baker, Jerry L. Nickell and James F. Bell are officers of both corporations. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their address is the same as that of the corporate respondents.

Respondents Ronald A. Green and Thomas F. Fangrow are officers of Inter-Continental Services Corporation. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

Respondent Richard L. Wilson is an officer of North American Credit Services, Inc. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past, have been engaged in the business of collection of delinquent accounts and the retrieval of credit cards for business organizations throughout the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course of their business as aforesaid, respondents, and each of them, now cause, and for some time last past have caused, money, contracts, business forms, information requests, payment demands and other commercial paper and printed materials, in connection with said collection and retrieval business, to be sent by United States mail from respondents' place of business to creditors, debtors and other persons located throughout the United States and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in or affecting commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their collection and retrieval business, respondents have, at all times mentioned herein, been in substantial competition, in commerce, with other corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the collection of delinquent accounts and the retrieval of credit cards.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of their collection and retrieval business, respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations, both orally, in conversations with consumers, and written, in various form letters, forms, documents and other printed materials which respondents mail or otherwise transmit to consumers. Typical of such oral and written statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

> Your promptness may bear on your future credit.
> We have been retained in an action against you.
> If these cards are not received in three days, it may be necessary to take legal action to recover them.
> Further delay in settlement of this action will leave our firm with no recourse but to institute proceedings.
> We would like to discuss this matter with your employer.
> RECOMMENDATION FOR CIVIL SUIT
> NOTICE OF INTENT TO FILE SUIT

PAR. 6. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements, and others of similar import and meaning but not specifically set forth herein, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication that:

1. Respondents are credit reporting agencies and maintain general files as to the credit-worthiness of members of the public.
2. Failure to pay amounts requested will result in immediate legal action.
3. Failure to pay amounts requested will result in garnishment of wages or attachment of the property of the debtor.
4. Respondents are empowered to file legal actions against the debtor.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

1. Corporate respondents are not credit reporting agencies and perform no credit reporting functions and keep no credit records other than those associated with accounts referred to them for collection.
2. Failure by debtors to pay amounts requested by respondents does not, normally, result in legal action.
3. Failure by debtors to pay amounts requested by respondents does not result in prejudgment garnishment of wages or attachment of property of the debtor.

4. Respondents are not empowered to file legal action against the debtor.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Five and Six hereof were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents have engaged, and are now engaging, in numerous acts and practices intended to induce payment of amounts requested from debtors or the retrieval of credit cards. Typical of such acts and practices, but not all-inclusive thereof, are the following:

1. Respondents have mailed or caused to be delivered to debtors forms that resemble legal process.

2. Respondents have mailed or caused to be delivered to debtors letters which, taken as a whole, represent that such letters are from a law firm contemplating legal action.

PAR. 9. In truth and in fact:

1. Such forms are not legal process.

2. Such letters are not from a law firm, but in fact are from certain of corporate respondents' employees who are not licensed attorneys.

The use of such forms and letters misleads the recipient as to their nature, import, purpose and urgency. Therefore, the use by respondents of said forms and letters as set forth in Paragraph Eight was and is false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 10. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents have contacted persons not liable for the alleged debts and discussed debtors' accounts with such persons.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents as described in Paragraph Ten hereof have had and now have the tendency and capacity to endanger the alleged debtor's employment and job advancement and to invade his privacy. Therefore, the use by respondents of such acts and practices was and is unfair.

PAR. 12. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements and representations were and are true and to induce recipients thereof into the payment of accounts and other actions by reason of the said erroneous and mistaken belief.

The use by the respondents of the aforesaid unfair acts and practices has had and now has the tendency and capacity to induce alleged debtors into the payment of accounts and other actions by reason of the said unfair acts and practices.

PAR. 13. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Kansas City Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, and having duly considered the comments filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34 of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Inter-Continental Services Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, with its office and principal place of business located at 2000 Johnson Dr., city of Shawnee Mission, State of Kansas.

Respondent North American Credit Services, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, with its office and principal place of business located at 2000 Johnson Dr., city of Shawnee Mission, State of Kansas.

Respondents Jerome E. Baker, Jerry L. Nickell and James F. Bell are officers of said corporations. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporations and their principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

Respondents Ronald A. Green and Thomas F. Fangrow are officers of Inter-Continental Services Corporation. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and their principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

Respondent Richard L. Wilson is an officer of North American Credit Services, Inc. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Inter-Continental Services Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and North American Credit Services, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Jerome E. Baker, Jerry L. Nickell and James F. Bell, individually and as officers of said corporations, and Ronald A. Green and Thomas F. Fangrow, individually and as officers of Inter-Continental Services Corporation, and Richard L. Wilson, individually and as an officer of North American Credit Services, Inc., and respondents' representatives, agents and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the collection of accounts or the retrieval of credit cards in or affecting commerce as "commerce" is defined by the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or by implication, that any legal action is being considered, will be taken, or has been taken, or using any forms, letters or other documents which simulate legal process.

2. Representing, directly or by implication, that respondents or their agents or employees are attorneys, or misrepresenting in any manner the position or function of any of respondents, their agents or employees.

3. Representing, directly or by implication, that the failure of any individual to pay amounts requested, or to take any other action, will result in garnishment of wages, attachment of any property, or will affect the individual's credit rating.

4. Communicating or threatening to communicate with any alleged debtor's employer or any other person not liable for the debt, other than the spouse or attorney of the alleged debtor, except by order of a court, or solely to locate an alleged debtor whose whereabouts are genuinely unknown by respondents, Provided That, in these circumstances, no mention of the alleged indebtedness is made.

5. Placing of any telephone call to any alleged debtor or to any individual from whom respondents wish to retrieve a credit card, in the time zone of such person, before the hour of 8:00 a.m. or after the hour of 9:00 p.m. on weekdays, including Saturdays; or before the hour of 11:00 a.m. or after the hour of 9:00 p.m. on Sundays unless permission is received from such person to so call.

6. Misrepresenting in any manner the consequences of individuals' or alleged debtors' failure to comply with any of respondents' requests or demands.

It is further ordered, That respondents maintain and make available records relative to complaints received by respondents involving the acts and practices prohibited by this order and which describe steps taken by respondents to investigate and dispose of said complaints. Said records shall be maintained for a period of six (6) months from the date such complaint is received, for inspection and copying by the Federal Trade Commission.

It is further ordered, That respondent corporations shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions, to each of their branch offices, and to each of their customers.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondents such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporations which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondents named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of their present business or employment and of their affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondents' current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which they are engaged as well as a description of their duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

KENNECOTT COPPER CORPORATION

Docket 8765. Order, Nov. 18, 1975

Denial of petition to reopen proceeding to enlarge time for compliance.

Appearances

For the Commission: Fiodie P. Favarella and Joseph Eckhaus.

For the respondent: John L. Warden, Sullivan & Cromwell, New York City and John Bodner, Jr. and Francis A. O'Brien, Howery, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Wash., D.C.

ORDER DENYING PETITION TO REOPEN THE PROCEEDING TO ENLARGE THE TIME FOR COMPLIANCE

On Oct. 14, 1975, respondent Kennecott Copper Corporation filed a "Petition To Reopen the Proceeding To Enlarge the Time for Compliance." By answer dated Nov. 10, 1975, the Bureau of Competition has opposed the petition.

The Commission is of the view that respondent's petition to reopen is not a proper vehicle for seeking an extension of time within which to comply with an order, and has determined to deny the petition, for the reasons elaborated in its order of May 5, 1975 [85 F.T.C. 848], denying a similar petition to reopen these proceedings to enlarge the time for compliance.

The Commission will consider separately respondent's request, filed simultaneously pursuant to Section 4.3(b) of the rules of practice, for an extension of time within which to comply with the order to cease and desist in this matter. Therefore,

It is ordered, That the "Petition To Reopen the Proceeding To Enlarge the Time for Compliance" be, and it hereby is, denied.

IN THE MATTER OF

AMERICAN GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Docket 8847. Order, Nov. 18, 1975

Denial of motion by respondent and intervenor for reconsideration of 1972 order vacating administrative law judge's initial decision and remanding case for further proceedings.

Appearances

For the Commission: Harold E. Kirtz, Karen G. Bokat and Charles W. Corddry, III.

For the respondent: Michael J. Henke, Vinson, Elkins, Searls, Connolly & Smith, Wash., D.C.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

Respondent American General Insurance Company and intervenor Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland move for reconsideration of an order by the Commission, dated Dec. 5, 1972 [81 F.T.C. 1052], vacating the administrative law judge's initial decision and remanding the case for further proceedings. The administrative law judge filed an initial decision sustaining the complaint in this matter on Aug. 7, 1975.

Respondent and intervenor have failed to make a sufficient showing why the Commission should grant their motion for reconsideration, especially after the lapse of almost three years from the date of issuance of the order they seek to challenge. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid motion for reconsideration be, and it hereby is, denied.

IN THE MATTER OF

KOSCOT INTERPLANETARY, INC., ET AL.

ORDER, OPINION ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT AND SEC. 2 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket 8888. Complaint, May 24, 1972-Final Order, Nov. 18, 1975

Order requiring an Orlando, Fla., seller and distributor, of cosmetics and cosmetic distributorships, among other things to cease using its open-ended, multilevel marketing plan; engaging in illegal price fixing and price discrimination and imposing selling and purchasing restrictions on its distributors; and to cease making exaggerated earnings claims and other misrepresentations in an effort to recruit distributors.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc., corporations, and Glenn W. Turner, Terrell Jones, Malcolm Julian, Ben

Bunting, Michael Delaney, Hobart Wilder, and Raleigh P. Mann, individually and as former officers, officers, or directors of said corporations, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc., are corporations organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with their principal office and place of business located at 4805 Sand Lake Rd., Orlando, Fla.

Respondent Glenn W. Turner is chairman of the board of directors of Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and is the sole stockholder of Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc. Mr. Turner was the founder of Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and instituted the marketing plan and distribution policies. He, with others named herein, has been and is responsible for establishing, supervising, directing and controlling the business activities and practices of corporate respondents Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc., including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Mr. Turner's address is the same as that of the corporate respondents.

Respondents Terrell Jones, Malcolm Julian, Ben Bunting, Michael Delaney, Hobart Wilder, and Raleigh P. Mann are officers, or directors of said corporate respondents. Together with others, said respondents have been and are responsible for the formulation, control and direction of the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their address is the same as that of the corporate respondents.

The aforementioned respondents cooperate and act together in carrying out the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 2. In the conduct of their business, at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been in substantial competition in commerce with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of cosmetics, toiletries and associated items of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 3. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of cosmetics, toiletries and associated items and distributorships and franchises to the public, and are inducing, and have induced, persons to invest substantial sums of money in respondents' multilevel marketing program as hereinafter more fully described.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, their products, when sold, to be shipped from their places of business in various States to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of origination, and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents have used a multilevel marketing program having four levels of distributors and are presently using a multilevel marketing program which allows the potential participant to enter at any one of three levels, i.e., beauty advisor, supervisor or director. All participants are designated as independent contractors and except for the beauty advisors who sell primarily at retail through party plans and door-to-door methods, are permitted to, and do, sell or attempt to sell at both wholesale and retail. A description of these levels, in order of ascendency, follows:

1. Beauty advisor (retailer)—The beauty advisor purchases products from her sponsor (who may be a supervisor or director) at a 40 percent discount, for sale to the consuming public. The beauty advisor receives a refund bonus from her sponsor each month, based on the total retail volume ordered during the month. Entrant qualifies by investing $10 for a starter kit.

2. Supervisor (sub-distributor)—The supervisor purchases products from the company at a 55 percent discount for distribution to his beauty advisors and direct sales to the consuming public. The supervisor receives a special commission for each new supervisor order he creates, $500 or 25 percent of the $2000 paid for the initial order. An entrant qualifies as a supervisor in any one of these ways:

a. By investing $2000 immediately;

b. By purchasing $5400 in Koscot cosmetics (at retail value) from his sponsor;

c. By selling a portion of the required $5400 volume through his organization and purchasing the balance in one lump sum.

3. Director (distributor)—The director purchases products from the company at a 65 percent discount for distribution to his direct distributors (supervisors and beauty advisors) and for direct sales to the consuming public. The director is entitled to a 10 percent special commission on all of his supervisor's purchases. He receives $500 for each supervisor order that he sells. The director sponsoring a new director is also entitled to a 65 percent commission ($1,950) on the $3,000 additional inventory which the new director is required to purchase. An entrant qualifies as a director by: a) becoming a supervisor, purchasing the additional $3000 director inventory and selling a new supervisor order in order to replace himself in his sponsoring director's organization; or b) by initially investing $5000 and becoming known as an apprentice director until he fulfills all the necessary aforementioned requirements.

These positions are described more fully to the prospective investors at "Opportunity Meetings" held weekly in various locations across the country. At such a meeting, a movie is shown and speeches are made which concentrate upon the unlimited potential to earn large sums of money in a relatively short time by recruiting others into the Koscot program. In most instances, the opportunity meeting will closely follow the script provided by respondents as found in the distributor's training manual. This meeting is run in such a manner as to excite those attending and to induce them into making an emotional decision to invest in the program.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have done and performed and are doing and performing the following:

1. Respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. has entered into contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings with its distributors whereby said distributors agree to maintain the resale prices established and set forth by respondent corporation, notwithstanding that some of such distributors are located in States which do not have Fair Trade laws.

2. Respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. has entered into contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings with its distributors whereby said distributors agree to maintain the discounts, overrides, rebates, bonus schedules, finder's fees and release fees, between and among all other distributors, as established and set forth by respondent corporation.

3. Respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. has entered into contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings with its distributors whereby said distributors understand that a violation of any company rule or regulation is reason for immediate termination of their status as distributors by the company board of directors.

4. Respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. has instituted certain rules and regulations, among which are those set out below, whereby its distributors:

(a) Agree to purchase merchandise only from respondent or his sponsor in accordance with Koscot's marketing program,

(b) agree that all purchases of merchandise from respondent corporation or his sponsor constitutes a nonrefundable sale,

(c) agree not to engage in the sale of a competitive line of products or individual products which would be considered competitive to respondent corporation,

(d) agree never to make any consignment of merchandise to anyone without receiving written notice of approval by Koscot Interplanetary, Inc.,

(e) agree to restrict retail sales and display of cosmetics to home service routes and beauty forums, and to certain categories of retail outlets specified by respondent but only with Koscot's approval,

(f) agree to obtain prior written approval from Koscot for any promotion or advertising of Koscot products or his distributorship,

(g) agree to maintain a record of the names and addresses of all his customers and to provide Koscot with such information through his supervisor or director,

(h) agree not to transfer to another organization without prior written consent of all distributors above him in his organization, including respondent corporation,

(i) agree to have a financial interest in only one Koscot distributorship at a time and that he cannot be part of two separate distributorships,

(j) agree not to enter into any agreement with a distributor in another Koscot organization to make a division of profits, assets, or new recruits in violation of the "Koscot Marketing Koncept."

5. Respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. has entered into contracts, agreements, combinations or understandings with its distributors whereby respondent:

(a) Prohibits a corporation from becoming a Koscot distributor,

(b) requires that the organization of a distributor, who quits or loses his status as a distributor, becomes a part of the organization of the distributor immediately preceding him on Koscot's organizational chart.

6. Respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. discriminates in price, directly or indirectly, between different purchasers of its products of like grade and quality by selling said products at lower prices to some purchasers than to other purchasers, many of whom have been and now are in competition with the purchasers paying the higher price. For example, director-distributor purchases his products directly from respondent corporation at approximately: (a) 22.2 percent discount as compared with the cost to a supervisor-distributor, (b) 41.7 percent discount as compared with the cost to a beauty advisor.

There are approximately 7,988 director-distributors and approximately 10,726 supervisor-distributors in the program.

The supervisor-distributor who purchases his products directly or indirectly from respondent corporation, purchases at approximately a 25 percent discount as compared with the cost to a beauty advisor.

In addition, respondent corporation has agreed to pay the director-distributor a 2 percent override on the purchases of the entire organization of each supervisor-distributor recruited by said director-distributor when such supervisor-distributor works up or buys in and becomes a director himself. Thereafter, although both director-distributors buy from respondent corporation, only the first will receive the 2 percent override from respondent corporation.

COUNT I

Alleging violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One through Six hereof are incorporated by reference in Count I with respect to respondents, as if fully set forth herein.

PAR. 7. Respondents make various oral and written statements to prospective investors regarding the sale of their cosmetics, toiletries and associated items and the recruitment of additional participants in their marketing program. Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

> 1. To become a Director a Supervisor * * * must go out, create a new Supervisor's initial order, and bring this order to you, the Director, before you release this Supervisor to become a Director * * *. When this new Supervisor entered the program, he ordered $2000 in retail products. This Supervisor created the order, so he receives the 25% commission on products. But you are the Director, so you earn the 10% Director's commission of $200.
> As soon as this Supervisor's initial order is received by the company, the company sends you the 65% commission on this $3000 additional inventory. This is $1,950! You now have earned a total of $2,850!
> Create this volume once a month and at the end of the year you will have earned over $34,000.
> 2. As a Director with one Supervisor in your organization, your job is to help this Supervisor become successful. See that he and his retail manager are thoroughly trained and make certain he fully understands the program. When he is ready to enjoy additional benefits, help him create a new Supervisor's initial order for kosmetics and he will become a Director.
> Continue to help the one Supervisor you will always have. Help him sell only one Supervisor's order per month for your organization and you will earn over $26,000 per year! But work with your Supervisor full-time to make him a success! Do this twice a month and your income will exceed $52,000 per year!
> 3. Let's assume you decide to recruit girls to be trained as Beauty Advisors * * * Let's look at your third month in the business. Again sponsor only eight girls who produce the part-time volume of only $300 a month. This new group will produce $2,400 their first 30 days. The last group you sponsored has learned the benefits of our incentive plan. They have learned that by increasing their efforts and continuing to service their customers they can produce a monthly volume of $900 each. When this occurs, this group will give you an additional $7,200 in volume.
> Your first group of girls may have increased their volume even more, but suppose they are producing only $900 each per month or $7,200 for the group. Then your total monthly volume is $16,800!
> At this point you will certainly want to become a Director and enjoy the benefits of a 65% discount! You continue to sponsor eight girls a month and train them to produce the necessary volume, and you will be giving yourself an $1,800 a month raise in income every month.

PAR. 8. Respondents' multilevel marketing program, as represented by the above-quoted statements, contemplates an endless recruiting of participants since each person entering the program must bring in other distributors to achieve the represented earnings. The demand for prospective participants thus increases in geometric progression whereas the number of potential investors available in a given community or geographical area remains relatively constant. Consequently, a person coming into the program at a later stage will be unable, in a substantial number of instances, to find additional investors because the recruiting of participants into the program at an earlier stage by others has exhausted the number of prospective participants. It is self-evident that respondents' marketing program must of necessity fail when the market for potential distributors has become saturated.

Although some participants in respondents' multilevel merchandising program may realize a profit, all participants do not have the income potentiality represented by respondents, such as described in Paragraph Seven through recruiting other participants and the resultant finder's fees, commissions, overrides, rebates and other compensation arising out of the sale of respondents' products. In reality, some participants in the program will receive little or no return on their investment.

Respondents' multilevel merchandising program is organized and operated in such a manner that the realization of profit by any participant is predicated upon the exploitation of others who have virtually no chance of receiving a return on their investment and who had been induced to participate by misrepresentations as to potential earnings. Therefore, the use by respondents of the aforesaid program in connection with the sale of their merchandise was and is an unfair act and practice, and was and is false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, and the purchase of distributorships and participation in their multilevel marketing program, the respondents have made, and are now making numerous statements and representations in certain promotional materials, including, but not limited to, film strips, newsletters, information manuals, marketing plan booklets, meeting scripts, and other materials.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are those set out below, as well as those in the distributor's training manual.

1. The world's largest kosmetic company sponsors over 200,000 girls a year. Knowing this, with a full-time effort in our program, don't you believe you can sponsor 2 girls a week?

2. There are ordinary men and women in KOSCOT like you and me who are earning five and even ten thousand dollars per month!

3. Ladies and gentlemen, this is over $50,000 a year and now we are talking about a great deal of money aren't we? Do you know what excites me about this figure? Many KOSCOT Distributors are presently earning this kind of money and more! The point you should consider is this: When we can do so much, surely you can do as well or even better when you exert the necessary effort.

PAR. 10. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, as well as the exposition of the "Koscot Marketing Koncept," as found in the distributor's business manual, and other statements and representations of similar import and meaning, but not expressly set out herein, respondents and their agents and representatives, represent, and have represented, directly or by implication, to prospective participants, that:

1. It is not difficult for participants in the Koscot program to recruit and retain distributors and sales personnel to work home routes and sell respondents' products door-to-door enabling said participants to recoup their investment and to earn the represented profits set forth herein.

2. Participants in the Koscot marketing program have the potentiality and reasonable expectancy of receiving large profits or earnings.

3. The Koscot marketing program is commercially feasible for all participants and the supply of available entrants and investors is virtually inexhaustible.

PAR. 11. In truth and in fact:

1. It is difficult for participants in the Koscot program to recruit and retain distributors and sales personnel to work home routes and sell respondents' products door-to-door, hence, many participants cannot even recoup their investment, much less earn the represented profits set forth herein.

2. Participants in respondents' marketing program do not have the potentiality and reasonable expectancy of receiving large profits or earnings (for the reasons hereinbefore set forth).

3. The Koscot marketing program is not commercially feasible for all participants and its operation exhausts the supply of available entrants and investors as hereinbefore explained.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Nine and Ten have been and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 12. Respondents' merchandising program is in the nature of a lottery in that participants are induced to invest substantial sums of money on the possibility that by the activities and efforts of others, over whom they exercise no control or direction, they will receive the profits described in Paragraphs Seven and Nine herein. The realization of such financial gain is not dependent on the skill and effort of the individual participant, but is the result of elements of chance including the number of prior participants and the degree of saturation of the market which exists when the participant is induced to make his investment.

The use by respondents of a multilevel marketing program, which is in the nature of a lottery, is contrary to the public policy of the United States and is an unfair act and practice and an act of unfair competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 13. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the investment of substantial sums of money to participate in the respondents' multilevel marketing program and the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors in commerce and unfair methods and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One through Fourteen hereof are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth herein.

PAR. 15. The acts and practices, courses of conduct and methods of competition engaged in, followed, pursued or adopted by respondents, as alleged hereinabove, have had and continue to have the purpose and effect of substantially lessening, restraining, preventing and excluding free and open competition by, between, and among respondents' distributors in the marketing, sale and distribution of respondents' products throughout the United States in the following manner:

a. By fixing, maintaining and otherwise controlling the prices at which respondents' products are resold in both the wholesale and retail markets.

b. By fixing, maintaining or otherwise controlling the various fees, bonuses, rebates, or overrides required to be paid by one distributor or class of distributors.

c. By restricting the sellers from whom respondents' distributors may purchase their products and the customers to whom they may sell their products.

d. By restricting their distributors to reselling respondent corporation's products only in certain categories of retail outlets.

e. By unreasonably restricting the freedom of respondents' distributors to market their products in the manner of their own choosing.

Said acts, practices, courses of conduct and methods of competition are prejudicial and injurious to the public; have a tendency to hinder and prevent competition and have actually hindered and restrained competition, and constitute unfair acts or practices and unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT III

Alleging violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One through Five and subparagraph (6) of Paragraph Six hereof are incorporated by reference in Count III as if fully set forth herein.

PAR. 16. The difference in net cost among the various distributors of respondents' products, each of whom is in competition with other distributors of respondents' products, results in substantial discrimination in the net prices for products sold to the nonfavored customers, who are both direct purchasers and indirect purchasers of respondents' products.

In addition, the various fees, overrides, or other payments result in discriminations among the direct and indirect purchasing distributors who are in competition with one another. These monies are direct and indirect payments by respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. and are in effect discriminations in the net price of products to the various distributors.

The effect of respondent Koscot Interplanetary, Inc.'s discrimination in net price as alleged herein may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the line of commerce in which its favored purchaser is engaged, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition between the favored and nonfavored purchasers or with the customers of either of them, except to the extent that competition has been lessened by the acts and practices alleged in Counts I and II hereof.

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents constitute violations of the provisions of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended.

COUNT IV

Alleging violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One through Fourteen hereof are incorporated by reference in Count IV with respect to respondents, as if fully set forth herein:

PAR. 17. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents' multilevel merchandising program is organized and operated in a manner that results in the recruitment of many participants who have virtually no chance to recover their investments of substantial sums of money in respondents' program and who have been induced to participate by misrepresentations as to potential earnings. Respondents have received the said sums and have failed to offer to refund and refused to refund such money to participants that were unable to recover their investment.

The use by the respondents of the aforesaid program and their continued retention of the said sums, as aforesaid, is an unfair act and practice and an act of unfair competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 18. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors in commerce and are unfair acts and practices and unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The complaint in this proceeding, charging violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, and of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13, was issued on May 24, 1972, and was thereafter duly served on all respondents except Terrell Jones (see infra). The complaint, containing four counts, charges as unlawful certain of respondents' practices in connection with the sale and distribution of toiletries and cosmetics and the recruitment of distributor-investors.

Count I of the complaint charges that respondents' "multi-level marketing program" was not only inherently deceptive and unfair but also involved numerous misrepresentations. Count II alleges that agreements between respondent Koscot and its distributors were in unlawful restraint of trade. Count III alleges that respondents discriminated in price among various classes of customers, in violation of the Clayton Act as amended. Count IV charges in effect that respondents' retention of funds obtained through misrepresentation constituted an unfair practice.

Respondents filed answers on Aug. 22, 1972, and on Sept. 7, 1972, which put in issue most of the material allegations of the complaint.[2]

After extensive prehearing procedures, including several prehearing conferences, hearings were held between July 30, 1973, and Oct. 18, 1974, in Washington, D.C., New York City, Kansas City, Mo., and Orlando, Fla. At these hearings, testimony and other evidence were offered in support of and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint. The testimony and evidence presented—aggregating 5224 pages of transcript and thousands of pages of documentary exhibits—have been duly recorded and filed.

Forty-one witnesses were called to testify in support of the allegations of the complaint, including the seven individual respondents, one additional former officer of respondent Koscot, two officials of Avon Products, Inc., three expert witnesses (marketing and economics), and 28 distributors or former distributors of respondent Koscot.

Four of the individual respondents—Glenn W. Turner, Malcolm Julian, Ben Bunting, and Hobart Wilder—were excused from testifying after each pleaded his constitutional right to remain silent on the ground that answers to questions propounded or proposed on the subject matter of this proceeding might tend to incriminate him. These Fifth Amendment pleas were made in the light of a pending criminal proceeding in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida (Koscot Interplanetary Incorporated, et al., Criminal No. 73-71). (See Tr. 912-91).

Respondents called no witnesses in defense but offered some documentary evidence, primarily relating to the status of respondent Koscot as a result of its petition for an arrangement under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

Hearings were in recess from October 1973 until August 1974, because certain witnesses whose testimony was required to complete the case-in-chief in support of the complaint were prohibited from testifying by protective orders issued on Oct. 17, 1973, by the Honorable Gerald B. Tjoflat, United States District Judge for the Middle District of Florida, in connection with the criminal case styled United States v. Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., et al., No. 73-71-Orl-Cr. On Aug. 1, 1974, such protective orders were modified so as to permit the testimony in question, and hearings in support of the complaint were resumed on Aug. 19, 1974, and concluded on Aug. 22, 1974. After further proceedings, including the submission of documentary exhibits on behalf of respondents, the evidentiary record was closed on Oct. 18, 1974.

[2] The answer filed on Aug. 22, 1972, on behalf of the corporate respondents and respondents Turner, Julian, and Wilder was later amended to reflect that it was also the answer of respondent Michael Delaney (order granting motion to amend answer, Sept. 11, 1972).

The parties were represented by counsel and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and to cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues.[3] Also, although respondent Raleigh P. Mann was afforded a full opportunity to participate in the trial, he was not represented by counsel during the hearings and did not participate other than to appear as a witness subpoenaed by complaint counsel and to make a statement under oath on his own behalf at the conclusion of his testimony (Tr. 4814-15). He filed no exceptions or other response to the proposed findings, etc., submitted by complaint counsel. However, on Sept. 26, 1974, he filed pro se a motion to dismiss the case as to him on grounds that there had been failure of proof. The motion was taken under advisement for determination as part of the initial decision herein.

After the presentation of evidence, proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law and a proposed form of order were filed by counsel supporting the complaint, together with a supporting brief. (Certain errors in complaint counsel's proposed findings of fact, etc., as originally filed, were corrected by a "Notice of Corrections" filed on Jan. 2, 1975.)

Counsel for respondents filed a brief in opposition to the submittals of complaint counsel, and complaint counsel filed a reply brief.

In their brief, all respondents except Mann have consented to the issuance of the order proposed by complaint counsel except that part (Section V) which requires that restitution be made by the corporate respondents and by three of the individual respondents. As to the proposed findings of fact submitted by complaint counsel, respondents' exceptions are directed only to those that are intended to provide a factual predicate for the restitution order. Their brief states:

> Counsel strongly disagrees with the opening language used in complaint counsel's brief whereby Koscot, et al. are described as inherently deceptive and fraudulent. However, in view of the recognized fact that none of these respondents are presently participating in such illegal marketing deceptions and frauds we do not take issue with the proposed order except for the proposed findings which deal with restitution. [Footnote omitted.]

[3] Terrell Jones, although cited in the complaint, was not a party since he was not served with a copy of the complaint (Tr. 4835-37). (He was later located and was called as a witness by complaint counsel.)

> we do not wish for anyone to interpret our silence as a stipulation that such did occur. We simply reaffirm our proffer that the interests of justice can best be served in this case by the issuance of an order which enjoins that conduct which complaint counsel argues existed. If such conduct and practice did exist in the context as complaint counsel argues them then respondents are the first to agree that such activity should be forever stopped.

> * * * [I]t is respectfully submitted that the remedies requested by complaint counsel as regards restitution be denied and that all other injunctive relief be ordered and noted as not objected to by respondents. (RB, pp. 1, 8, 19; see also pp. 17-18).

In view of these concessions by the principal respondents, most of the essential facts are virtually undisputed, and most of the provisions of the proposed order may be entered as "not objected to." Accordingly, despite the size of the record and the volume of counsel's submittals, the administrative law judge has made relatively brief findings of ultimate facts. The proposed findings of complaint counsel are meticulously detailed, with extensive citations to the record. Since, for the most part, respondents have not challenged these proposed findings, they are incorporated by reference as subsidiary findings that support the findings of ultimate fact constituting this initial decision.[4] Respondents' exceptions are essentially limited to those proposed findings that underlie complaint counsel's plea for a restitution order. These exceptions have been carefully considered and are discussed in greater detail than those matters that respondents have not specifically contested. As requested (RB, p. 8), the undersigned has carefully reviewed the testimony, particularly the cross-examination, of Messrs. Delaney, Edwards, Mann, and Jones.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. Respondents and Their Business

A. The Corporate Respondents

1. Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. ("Koscot")[5] is a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at 4805

[4] Where references are made to proposed findings submitted by the parties, such references are intended to include their citations to the record unless otherwise indicated. Citations to the record, as well as to the proposed findings, are intended to serve as convenient guides to the testimony and to the exhibits supporting the findings of fact, but they do not necessarily represent complete summaries of the evidence considered in arriving at such findings. The proposed findings of the parties not adopted, either in the form proposed or in substance, have been rejected as lacking support in the record or as involving immaterial matters.

[5] The name "Koscot" is an acronym for the term "Kosmetics for the Communities of Tomorrow." Spelling cosmetics with a "k" was designed to call attention to the product (CX 11, p. 3). Later, Turner spelled the word "cash" with a "k" for a company called "Kash Is Best," which involved a discount for cash payments (Jones 4896).

Sand Lake Rd., Orlando, Fla. It was organized on or about Aug. 21, 1967 (complaint, ¶ 1; answer of Koscot, et al., ¶ 2; CX 29 C).

2. Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc. ("Turner Enterprises") is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at 4805 Sand Lake Rd., Orlando, Fla. It was originally organized prior to October 1970 under the name of Dare To Be Big, Inc. (complaint, ¶ 1; answer of Koscot, et al., ¶ 2; CX 30 B).

3. Koscot was founded by respondent Glenn W. Turner, who, directly or indirectly owned the controlling interest in Koscot until August 1973. He was its sole stockholder from December 1970 until August 1971, when Koscot became a wholly-owned subsidiary of Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc., which had previously been a subsidiary of Koscot. Turner was the sole stockholder in Turner Enterprises. Turner Enterprises held 100 percent of the voting stock of Koscot until August 1973, when all of the outstanding capital stock of Koscot was sold by Turner Enterprises to Max Morris for the sum of $15,000 (complaint, ¶ 1; answer of Koscot, et al., ¶¶ 2-3; CX 1 A-C; CX 13 A; CX 27 F; CXs 29-30; CX 190 C-D; CX 357 H, CX 358 H; CX 362 G; CX 759 A; Tr. 5210-11). This stock sale took place about a month after Koscot filed a petition for an "arrangement" with its creditors under Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy Act. A plan of arrangement has been submitted by Koscot, and further proceedings were scheduled in early 1975 (RXs 12 A-Z-102, 16, 17 A).

In this decision, references to the record are made in parentheses, and certain abbreviations are used as follows:

CPF - Complaint counsel's proposed findings—"Proposed Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, and Order."

CB - Complaint counsel's "Brief in Support of Proposed Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Order."

CRB - "Complaint Counsel's Reply Brief and Other Submissions."

CX - Commission exhibit.

RB - Respondents' brief—"Brief in Opposition to Commission's Brief in Support of Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, and Order."

RPF - Respondents' proposed findings, as contained in RB (pp. 1-7).

RX - Respondents' exhibit.

Tr. - Transcript. (References to testimony sometimes cite the name of the witness and the transcript page number without the abbreviation "Tr."—for example, Jones 4868.)

References to the proposed findings of counsel are to paragraph numbers, while citations to the briefs are to page numbers.

Having heard and observed the witnesses and having carefully reviewed the entire record in this proceeding, together with the proposed findings and briefs filed by the parties, the administrative law judge makes the following findings of fact, enters his resulting conclusions, and issues an appropriate order.

4. For most of the period 1971 until August 1973, Turner Enterprises controlled and directed the affairs of Koscot (CXs 358 H, 362 G; CXs 271-73, 275 A, 279 A-B, 291 A, 568 B; Mann 4403-06, 4494) and derived most of its income from Koscot. From September 1971 to August 1973, Koscot was required to make weekly transfers of funds to Turner Enterprises amounting to 10 percent of all revenues, net of commissions paid out (CXs 291 A, 358 Q, 362 Q). For the 11-month period ending June 30, 1972, more than one-half of the total income of Turner Enterprises came from Koscot (CXs 179 E, 330 C). Money was transferred regularly between Turner Enterprises and Koscot, as well as between other subsidiaries and affiliates, foreign and domestic, of Turner Enterprises (CX 758 A-B; Jones 4899). As of July 1972, Turner Enterprises had investments in and advances to foreign corporations in excess of $2 million. These foreign corporations included the following:

Koscot of Australia Pty. Ltd.
Fashcot of Australia Pty. Ltd.
Dare To Be Great of Australia Pty. Ltd.
Koscot Interplanetary of Canada (1971) Limited
Koscot GmbH
Dare To Be Great GmbH
Koscot Hellas L.L.C.
Koscot Italia S.R.L.
Koscot Interplanetaria De Mexico, S.A.
Koscot A.G.
Koscot Interplanetary (U.K.) Ltd.
Koscot De Venezuela S.A.

5. During January 1973, all of the outstanding capital stock of one or more of the companies listed in ¶ 4, supra, was sold by Turner Enterprises to Ariarnes, a corporation (not otherwise identified), for an amount ranging between $10,000 and $100,000 (CXs 758 A, 759 B-C; Tr. 5210-11).

6. As of July 31, 1972, Koscot had total assets of $22.5 million, but as of July 1973, its total assets had dwindled to $11.7 million (CX 758 A; RX 12 Z-70-71, 76-77, 91).

B. The Individual Respondents

7. Glenn W. Turner—Glenn W. Turner was the founder of Koscot[6] and instituted its marketing plan and its distribution policies. He owned a controlling interest, directly or indirectly, in each of the corporate respondents. He was president of Koscot from August 1967 to January 1968 and chairman of its board of directors from January 1968 until at least March 1972. He was also chairman of the board of directors of Turner Enterprises from February 1971 until March 1972 (see ¶3, supra).

8. Each of the two corporate respondents was, in essence, the alter ego of Turner. He was primarily responsible for establishing, supervising, directing, and controlling the policies, business activities, and practices of each of the corporate respondents. Despite ostensible changes in corporate officers, as well as the establishment of a voting trust for Koscot, both corporations operated under his ultimate control and domination. He appointed and removed corporate officers and directors. The two corporations had many officers and directors in common and, with other Turner-controlled companies, essentially operated as a single enterprise. Turner controlled the corporate funds and used them for such purposes as he saw fit, borrowing and otherwise using corporate funds as his own.

9. Although there is evidence that Turner resigned as a corporate officer of Turner Enterprises in March 1972,[7] a document submitted by respondents as Appendix I of their brief shows that in October 1974, he signed a stipulation of settlement in a class action suit pending in the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania as president of Turner Enterprises, as president of Dare To Be Great, Inc., and also on behalf of Koscot (capacity not designated).

10. Although Turner retained ultimate veto power over corporate operations, he necessarily delegated authority to others. Those who shared with him the responsibility for the formulation, control, and [6] Turner established Koscot in August 1967 with $5,000 in borrowed money. He supposedly had no other capital despite the fact that he claimed to have earned $30,000 to $35,000 a month as a "General" in Holiday Magic, with which he had been associated since late 1966. (Jones 4847-48, 4853), and Koscot literature portrayed him as having earned $250,000 in cosmetics in "twelve short months" (CX 11, pp. 19, 34) before he founded Koscot.

[7] Turner resigned as chairman of the board of Turner Enterprises on Mar. 13, 1972, but announced he would serve as a consultant. He requested $250,000 a month for such consulting services, and other financial considerations were to be negotiated (CX 292).

direction of the acts and practices of the corporate respondents included the following respondents:

Ben Bunting
Hobart Wilder
Malcolm Julian
Raleigh P. Mann

The role of each may be outlined as follows:

11. Ben Bunting—Respondent Ben U. Bunting played a key role in Koscot operations from 1969 until mid-1971 and was a well-paid "consultant" thereafter. As the "right hand man for Turner" during most of this period, he virtually had total control of Koscot operations. Beginning as a Koscot distributor, he later held the following corporate offices in Koscot:

National director—November 1968-January 1969;
president—January-June 1969;
corporate president[8]—June 1969-July 1970; member and chairman of voting trust—April-December 1970; and international corporate president—July 1970-July 1971.

In addition, Bunting was involved in Turner Enterprises, as assistant to the chairman of the board (July 1970-February 1971) and as vice chairman of the board (February-July 1971). Thereafter, he became a consultant to Turner Enterprises while apparently continuing to serve as a director of Turner Enterprises (Mann 4387-88, 4391-92, 4488; Jones 4904-06, 4970, 4991; CXs 2 D-U, 3 A, 5, 13 J, 46 F, 211, 223, 245, 252 A, 253, 279, 490 A, 568 A, 574 A-B, 614 C).

12. On July 8, 1971, Bunting resigned from the boards of directors of all companies except Turner Enterprises and was designated to be in charge of all monies for that corporation (CX 574 A-B). About this same time, Bunting and Turner entered into a contract providing that 3 percent of the gross receipts of Turner Enterprises and its subsidiaries, including Koscot, were to be paid to Bunting for consulting services (Mann 4577-78). Meanwhile, using a loan of $250,000 from Turner, Bunting acquired a foreign "shell corporation," Candida Holdings, NV ("Candida") (Mann 4574-4577, 4580; CX 611 A). In November 1971, Candida became a publicly-held company, but Bunting continued to hold in excess of 50 percent of its stock (CX 611 A; Mann 4577, 4584). Shortly thereafter, Bunting assigned his consulting contract to Candida (CX 611 A; Mann 4578).

13. Bunting continued to meet regularly with Turner and often attended the board meetings of Turner Enterprises in 1971-72 (CX 279 A-B; CX 285; CX 291 A; Mann 4571).

[8] The distinction between "President" and "Corporate President" is not altogether clear, but it appears that, at least in theory, the corporate president was superior to the president of the corporation (CX 13 J).

14. In a contract dated Aug. 25, 1971 (CX 279 C), Turner and Turner Enterprises retained Candida for management and sales consultation services.[9] Turner Enterprises agreed to pay Candida 3 percent of its gross sales, and Turner individually agreed to cause other corporations that he controlled to pay the same amount. In addition, all expenses for services to Turner corporations were to be reimbursed, and office facilities were to be made available to Candida on request. Although adjustments might be made in the percentage fee, the minimum fee was stated to be 3 percent plus expenses. The arrangement was to continue for five years. The contract was signed by Turner as chairman of the board of Turner Enterprises and as an individual and was accepted by Bunting as managing director of Candida. Candida was to provide "complete management and sales consultation services" (CX 279 C) and "to structure and develop new sales and marketing plans and programs * * *" (CX 611 B).

15. As of Apr. 1, 1972, the contract between Turner Enterprises and Candida was terminated (CX 612 B; Mann 4571, 4581). As a result of the operation of the contract and the agreed settlement for its premature termination, Candida received nearly $2 million, comprising the following:

(a) $475,020, representing 3 percent of the gross sales of Turner Enterprises and its subsidiaries for the months of September, October and November 1971 (CX 611 A).

(b) $666,503, representing 3 percent of the gross sales of Turner Enterprises from Dec. 1, 1971, until the original contract was terminated (CX 612 A).

(c) $270,912, representing one percent of the gross sales of Turner Enterprises from Apr. 1, 1972, until Aug. 31, 1972 (CX 612 A).[10]

(d) $183,375, representing a lump sum payment for the termination of the original contract with Turner Enterprises (CX 612 A-B).

(e) Approximately $400,000 representing notes from F. Lee Bailey and Enstrom Helicopter Corporation transferred from Turner Enterprises upon termination of the original contract between Turner Enterprises and Candida (Mann 4579).[11]

16. Hobart Wilder—Respondent Hobart Wilder likewise played a significant role in the operations of Koscot and Turner Enterprises. Beginning as a distributor and advancing to the position of state director, he then held the following offices in Koscot: National director

[9] A report to Candida's shareholders dated Feb. 4, 1972, shows the contract date as Dec. 1, 1971 (CX 611 A).

[10] Whether Candida has continued to collect one percent of the gross sales of Turner Enterprises is not clear from the record. A report to Candida shareholders states that "Candida has received a lump sum settlement of $183,375, and a fee of 1 percent of Turner Enterprises' gross sales for the remainder of the original contract period which ends Dec. 1, 1976" (CX 612 B).

[11] The directors placed a value of $40,000 on the notes receivable assigned to Candida (CX 612 B).

of field operations—July-October 1970; president—October 1970-February 1971; and corporate president—February-July 1971.

Wilder was also active in Turner Enterprises, serving as international corporate president from July 1971 until March 1972, when he became chairman of the board. He ultimately replaced Bunting as the No. 2 man in the Turner operation. He apparently left the Turner organization between July 1972 and July 1973 (Delaney 874-75; Mann 4390-93, 4403-04, 4488, 4554-55, 4562-64; Jones 4906-07; CXs 234 A, 237 A, 270 A, 279 A, 292, 490 A, 560, 567 A, 568 A, 574 A, 605, 606, 614 D).

17. Wilder received a salary many times greater than Bunting, Julian, and Mann—$102,300 in 1972 (CX 322), compared to a range of $16,000 to $37,000 for such other officials (CXs 297, 299, 300, 307, 309, 324, 326). In May 1973, he also received a loan from Koscot of $161,000, which had not been repaid as of July 1973 (RX 12 Z-74).

18. Malcolm Julian—Respondent Malcolm Julian was another top official of Koscot. He served twice as president of Koscot (June 1969-July 1970 and September-December 1971). He was also a member of the voting trust (April-August 1970) and served as international corporate vice-president from July 1970 to September 1971. He was also a member of the board of directors of Turner Enterprises, resigning in December 1972. He subsequently became a consultant to Koscot (Delaney 1044; Mann 4442; CXs 2 D, 5, 13 J, 223, 235, 245 A, 262 A, 271, 279 A, 286, 287, 490, 502 C).

19. Raleigh P. Mann—Respondent Raleigh P. Mann also held important positions in Koscot. After joining Koscot as a distributor in June 1968, he later moved to Canada and in early 1969 became president of Koscot's Canadian affiliate. He then served as president of Koscot (July-October 1970), a member of the voting trust (August-December 1970), and international president (October 1970-July 1971). He resigned all offices and directorships in all Turner corporations in July 1971 but was retained as a Koscot consultant until October 1971 (Mann 4347-52, 4358-60, 4386, 4397-4400; CXs 5, 6, 85, 258, 262 A, 490 A, 559, 560, 566, 568 A, 573).

20. As a consultant, Mann initially prepared a memorandum recommending to Turner in effect that Koscot get out of the "wholesale promotion business" and become a real cosmetics marketing company independent of Turner Enterprises (CX 575 A-C; Tr. 4556-57, 4563-65). His later consulting work was unrelated to Koscot (Tr. 4567-70). Meanwhile, Mann had become associated with Bunting as a stockholder and as a consultant in Candida (supra) and engaged in consulting work unrelated to Turner Enterprises until August 1972 (Tr. 4570).

21. Mann testified that his salary from Koscot in the course of approximately two and one-half years (including his consulting fees) amounted to approximately $90,000, while his income from Candida was approximately $60,000 (Tr. 4614-16). Koscot had advanced him $51,000 for a downpayment on his home, but this note was paid off when the house was sold (Tr. 4614-15). Mann initially had 10,000 shares of Candida stock (at $1 a share), which later increased to 100,000 shares as a result of a stock split. He later sold 82,475 shares for approximately $23,000 and retained 17,525 shares, which he characterized as worthless (Tr. 4582-83).

22. Although he was unemployed for most of 1973 because of the "Turner stigma," he was then employed by a drapery and carpet company owned by his wife (Tr. 4617-20). As of August 1974, Mann described his financial condition as "broke." He was living in a rented house, owned one car, and had a minimal bank balance. He concluded: "We have our personal belongings; we have our furnishings; we have our clothing. We have no trust funds, trust accounts, hidden assets or anything else." (Tr. 4619; see also Tr. 4814-15).

23. In November 1974, Mann's address was Route 3, Box 281 (Jacaranda), Orlando, Fla. (attachment to motion to correct the official transcript, filed Nov. 22, 1974).

24. The business address of all the individual respondents was the same as that of the corporate respondents.

25. Respondents Bunting, Wilder, Julian and Mann were responsible, along with Turner and others, for the formulation, direction, and control of the acts and practices of Koscot and Turner Enterprises. They participated actively and knowingly in such acts and practices, as outlined more fully infra, ¶¶ 132-39.

26. In summary, respondents Koscot, Turner Enterprises, Turner, Julian, Bunting, Wilder, and Mann cooperated and acted together in carrying out the acts and practices herein found.

27. On the basis of the foregoing facts, as well as those developed infra on the record as a whole, the motions to dismiss for failure of proof that were entered by respondent Mann (pro se on Sept. 26, 1974) and by counsel for Julian (Tr. 5054-57) are hereby denied.

28. Two other individuals were cited in the complaint but are being dismissed as respondents:

(a) Terrell Jones—Although Terrell Jones, whose address in August 1974 was in Indian Hills, Colo., was named as a respondent in the complaint and played a significant part in Koscot's operations, he was never served with a copy of the complaint and thus is not a party to this proceeding. As proposed by complaint counsel (CPF 25), the complaint is being dismissed as to Jones, without prejudice, however, to the right of the Commission to bring further proceedings against him if the public interest so warrants. (See Tr. 4835-37.)

(b) Michael Delaney—Respondent Michael Delaney is an individual who was residing in August 1974 at 241 Timberlane Trace, Longwood, Fla. He was associated with Koscot from September 1969 to February 1971 in the following capacities: Assistant director of manufacturing—September-December 1969; director of manufacturing—December 1969-September 1970; voting trust member—April-December 1970; and executive vice-president—December 1970-February 1971.

Thereafter he engaged in various administrative duties until he resigned in July 1973. Since then he has been a Koscot consultant (Delaney 792-98; CXs 2 D-U, 245 A, 269 A, 273 B).

At the conclusion of the hearings, counsel for Delaney (Kenneth Michael Robinson) renewed a previous motion that the complaint be dismissed as to Delaney for failure of proof. Complaint counsel joined in the motion, and it was accordingly granted by the administrative law judge. (Tr. 5041-54) The reasons for this action are essentially summarized in the argument of defense counsel (Tr. 5041-52) and on the basis of the following record references: Delaney 792-910, 994-1120; Mann 4624, 4651-60, 4683, 4709-16, 4720-21, 4753, 4764-65; Jones 4929, 4957, 4962, 4964, 4974.

(Unless otherwise indicated, the term "respondents" as used herein is not intended to refer to Jones or Delaney. The term "Koscot" may sometimes be used to refer to all respondents collectively.)

C. Jurisdictional Findings

29. For several years the respondents have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, and sale of distributorships and franchises and of various products and services, including a line of cosmetics, toiletries, and associated items sold and distributed under the trade name Koscot. In so doing, respondents have caused their products to be shipped from their places of business in various States to purchasers located in various States other than the State of origination and have maintained a substantial course of trade in such products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act and in the Clayton Act (complaint, ¶¶ 3-4; answer of Koscot, et al., ¶¶ 7-9; RPF 9; CXs 29 F, 69 A-S, 72 A-D, 103 A-F, 105 A-J, 110 A-113 V, 120 A-123 K).

30. Respondents have been in substantial competition in commerce with corporations, firms, and individuals in the sale of cosmetics, toiletries, and associated items of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents (complaint, ¶ 2; answer of Koscot, et al., ¶ 6; RPF 9).

II. Unfair and Deceptive Practices

A. Introduction

31. Glenn Turner had an "impossible dream" (Tr. 5003). And, for a time, the dream became a sort of reality for him, for some of his associates, and for those relatively few who got in on the ground floor. But for thousands of others, it remained an impossible dream and a virtual financial nightmare. The impossible dream was the creation of a distribution network for the sale of cosmetics that was represented as offering an opportunity for untold riches for those who became involved in an "endless chain" of recruiting distributors for this business and in selling Koscot products. The Koscot plan is somewhat complicated to explain, but it was made to appear deceptively simple at "golden opportunity" meetings.

32. Koscot offered a plan that was ostensibly designed to sell cosmetics but that actually operated as a scheme to defraud the gullible—and even the not-so-gullible. To those who were victimized, the description of Turner as a "share-cropper on his way to harvest the world" (CX 11, preface) has an ironic twist.

33. Koscot's distribution method has come to be known as multileveling or pyramid selling (Westing 1197; Darling 1444; Nelson 2057). Such a system has been condemned as unlawful by the Commission, as well as by numerous courts.[12]

34. Cosmetics were to be sold, not through shops, but by direct selling, that is, by sales effected by individuals in the homes of the purchasers. There was a hierarchy of individuals involved, and those at the higher levels had to pay Koscot substantial sums for their so-called franchises (although the term "franchise" does not seem to have been used). The attraction was that the higher level participants received substantial commissions if they or those under them recruited new members to such upper levels. Through this method, a sales force in something of the shape of a pyramid was built up, with Koscot at the top and with two or more levels of individuals beneath, with the bottom level supposedly being the most numerous, and each level being connected with the others by a system of commissions whereby the higher levels profited from the activities of the lower levels.

35. The primary vice under attack in this proceeding is that this system of paying commissions on recruitment has the same appeal and the same ultimate result as a "chain letter."

36. Although, initially, Koscot had no cosmetics to sell, it began an operation ostensibly designed to sell cosmetics in the manner described in ¶ 34, supra. Koscot set up a hierarchy of individuals through whom sales were to be made. At the lowest level, there were beauty advisors, who were to sell Koscot products directly to members of the public through door-to-door selling or through "party plans", involving group selling. These beauty advisors were appointed by supervisors or subdistributors, who were the next rung on the Koscot distribution ladder. The supervisors, in turn, were appointed by the top rung (other than Koscot), who were called distributors or directors. The rights that went with the position of a distributor or supervisor might be analogized to a franchise. Koscot products were to be sold through distributors at a discount of 65 percent off retail price; supervisors in turn were to enjoy a 55 percent discount; and beauty advisers were to have a 40 percent discount.

37. However, product sales were by no means to be the only source of revenue, either for Koscot or for the distributors and supervisors. Each distributor was required to pay to Koscot a stated amount, ranging up to $5,000, for his position, for his initial inventory, and for the right to recruit supervisors and other distributors. If he had been introduced by another distributor, that other distributor received a commission of $2,650, with Koscot keeping the balance of $2,350. A supervisor had to pay Koscot $2,000 for his position. If he had been introduced by a distributor, the distributor got a commission of $700, the balance of $1,300 remaining with Koscot. If the new supervisor had been recruited by another supervisor, the same commission of $700 was payable, but the supervisor who found the new recruit got only $500, with the remaining $200 going to that supervisor's distributor. If a supervisor advanced to distributor, he was required to pay Koscot an additional $3,000, of which $1,950 was paid to the distributor who had sponsored him. He was also required to recruit another supervisor to replace himself, a transaction on which both he and his sponsoring distributor received the fees listed supra.

38. This was Koscot's basic "dual level" program, as outlined essentially in CXs 11 and 13. There were earlier and later variations, with different commission and discount figures, including a "single level" plan in which there was no supervisor or subdistributor (CXs 8 A-Z-23, 9, 10, 14, 15, 98 A-J). Many of the changes were made to meet legal objections raised in particular States. The variations are set forth in detail in CPF 116-62.

39. In their literature, and in their presentations in opportunity meetings and on GO-Tours, respondents held out the promise of big profits for all in an "endless chain" of recruiting, supplemented by fat commissions on subsequent sales of cosmetics.

40. A cardinal feature of the Koscot plan was that, irrespective of any sales of cosmetics to consumers, a distributor or supervisor who had paid his entry fee could supposedly get it back, and more, by means of recruiting further distributors or supervisors, each of whom paid similar sums to Koscot. The one certainty was that Koscot received substantial sums on each appointment. Whether those who recruited the new distributors or the new supervisors got some or all of their money back, or made any profit, depended on the number of new appointments.

41. The beauty advisors, on the bottom rung, were outside these commission arrangements, and their compensation was based on the 40 percent spread between their acquisition cost of product and the retail price at which they sold.

42. It is readily apparent that there existed a strong financial incentive for distributors and supervisors to recruit others to these positions. Whereas the recruitment of beauty advisers merely facilitated increased earnings on sales, the recruitment of other distributors or supervisors, brought immediate and substantial commissions. A distributor who paid $5,000 for his position would get his money back, and more, if he recruited two distributors or eight supervisors, while a supervisor got his money back if he recruited four supervisors. For so-called franchise holders, the commissions on any recruitment above these numbers were all profit. Additionally, apart from any commissions earned by a distributor by his own efforts, there was always a possibility that one of his supervisors would recruit another supervisor and thus bring the distributor $200 without any effort on his part.

43. Stated another way, the system had financial attractions in that both in the franchise structure and in the sales structure, there were rewards not only for work done by the participant himself but also for work done by others, through a system of overriding commissions on sales made by others.

44. This does not purport to describe the system in all its details, nor all of the variations that Koscot instituted. However, this sufficiently describes the essentials of the plan to indicate its nature.

45. The record supports findings that for approximately a year following the establishment of Koscot and the institution of its marketing plan, respondents were engaged solely in the marketing of distributorships; that, thereafter, the sale of cosmetics was merely incidental to the marketing of distributorships; that except for a relatively few distributorships in the early stages of the program, the distributorships conferred few, if any, effective legal rights upon the holders and were virtually worthless; that members of the public were induced to purchase distributorships by a variety of misrepresentations as to their value and as to the income likely to be realized; and that distributors were encouraged to recoup their losses and to make profits by recruiting others by deceptive means. There follows a more detailed examination of the massive deception involved in the Koscot operation.

B. "Endless Chain"

46. The Koscot marketing program clearly contemplated an "endless chain" in that it involved the continual recruitment of additional participants, since each person entering the program had to bring in other distributors to achieve the specified earnings. The demand for prospective participants thus increased in geometric progression while the number of potential investors available in a given community or geographical area remained relatively constant (Westing 1271-72, 1278; Nelson 1718-19; Darling 1445).

47. The fallacy in the "endless chain" aspect of the Koscot marketing program, with each distributor supposedly recruiting successively two other distributors a month, is that it involves a geometric progression which, carried through to its ultimate result, would mean that in 18 months the entire United States population (203 million in 1970) would be involved in the plan (CX 536; Westing 1273; Darling 1445-48).

48. Aside from the mathematical fallacy inherent in the Koscot plan, an endless chain scheme must, in any event, ultimately fail to provide returns to all participants. Such a scheme must cease when it exhausts the number of people willing to invest in it. The exhaustion of prospects results from over-saturation, leading potential purchasers to realize that their chance for success is limited in view of the numbers already recruited; lack of funds on the part of otherwise potential purchasers; or a negative reaction on the part of potential purchasers for any number of other reasons. Recruiting must always cease, and those recruited into the program at or near its conclusion must lose (Westing 1271, 1273; Nelson 1729-30). And the fact is that most Koscot distributors lost by relying on the endless chain aspect of the Koscot marketing program (CPF 225).

49. Respondents' defense to the endless chain charge (complaint, ¶ 8) is that because of "self-imposed" quotas on the number of distributorships, sales of distributorships "would not be like a chain letter, hence not deceptive or unfair to the investor," so that "Turner believed that if the quota was followed then there could be no misrepresentations involved about it." Respondents state that Turner's original quota of one distributor per 4,000 population was changed in 1969 to one per 7,000 upon the advice of counsel and a marketing consultant. On the basis that the population in 1972 was 207 million, they contend that Koscot complied with its self-imposed quota when it stopped selling franchises in mid-1972 with just under 30,000 distributorships (RPF 12, 25).

50. This defense is rejected. First, the facts are contrary to the defense claims. Actually, the purported quota of one per 7,000, which had been instituted in February 1970 (CX 233 A), was discontinued in September 1971 in favor of the earlier quota of one per 4,000 population (CX 239), so that the so-called quota nationally was 51,000 distributors. Second, the purported quotas were on a State basis rather than on a national basis (Mann 4623). Third, the quotas were not always "self-imposed;" in several States, a quota was imposed as the result of legal action by State authorities (Westing 1278-79; Jones 4892-93). Fourth, the quotas were deliberately ignored and circumvented by respondents. Among other things, Koscot classified numerous distributors as "inactive" and thus not chargeable against the quota. Other devices were encouraged and permitted to evade the so-called quota. (CPF 173, 178-89) Fifth, distributors were either not told of the quota or of its specific impact (CPF 172), or, if they were, it was "used as a high pressure tactic" to enroll the prospect before it was too late (Jones 4893).

51. In addition, even where there was ostensible compliance with the quota as far as Koscot sales were concerned, respondents established additional companies operating on a similar basis and allowed Koscot distributors to participate in them and thus continue the chain of recruitment (CPF 191-216). The fact that respondents deliberately provided distributors with the opportunity to continue recruiting when enforcement of the so-called quota might otherwise have stopped such activity is sufficient to show their intent to operate an endless chain recruitment scheme.

52. Finally, even if the quota had been adhered to, the theory that this would defeat any chain letter aspect and prevent the Koscot program from being deceptive or unfair will not withstand scrutiny. First, even with the purported limitations of one Koscot distributor for each 7,000 people, this would involve the recruitment of 29,000 distributors within ten months; and if the limitation were one distributor for each 4,000 people, this would involve the recruitment of nearly 51,000 distributors, or a saturation point likewise reached within ten months (CX 536; Westing 1273; Darling 1445-48). Second, the imposition of an inappropriate statewide quota did not negate the endless chain representation, nor did it prevent the chain from soon reaching the saturation point in numerous local areas. This was largely because, with rare exceptions, distributors naturally tended to recruit in their own circumscribed local areas, and the chain soon ended in such an area before a statewide quota was breached (CPF 174-77).

53. In summary, the imposition of quotas that ostensibly limited the number of distributors within each State did not really affect the endless chain aspect of the Koscot program. Respondents continued to recruit distributors by portraying the program as an endless chain; they devised numerous means to circumvent the quotas; and they established and promoted numerous other companies whose distributorships could be sold by Koscot distributors (CPF 172-216). Meanwhile, distributors learned to their sorrow that the chain was not endless but that all too soon it reached its inevitable end in their communities.

C. Other Misrepresentations

Distributor Earnings

54. The deception inherent in the endless chain aspect of Koscot's marketing plan is but one of numerous misrepresentations made by respondents. This basic deception necessarily involved, of course, gross misrepresentations of the income to be made through recruitment.

55. The earnings claims varied with the various programs. Again using CX 11 as typical, we find Koscot claiming that a distributor could readily sell a minimum of 12 distributorships a year or, with a little more effort, 24 distributorships a year. Depending on how many were directly recruited as distributors and how many were "promoted" from the supervisor level, the annual income was represented as ranging from $26,000 to $52,000 (CX 11, pp. 12-13; CXs 531, 532; Darling 1309-13). These claims were scaled down from those in an earlier manual, which had portrayed earnings ranging from $33,000 to $175,000 (CX 15, pp. 21-22). The falsity of such representations as applied to virtually all of Koscot's distributors has already been demonstrated supra (¶¶ 47-53). None of the typical distributors who testified even approached such figures.

56. In addition to gross misrepresentation of the earnings from recruitment, respondents also made numerous misrepresentations concerning the status of Koscot and the opportunities for success and wealth in selling Koscot cosmetics.

57. To begin with, respondents misrepresented the ease with which beauty advisors could be recruited and retained; the volume of initial orders that could be realized; and the extent of repeat business. Contrary to respondents' representations, it was difficult to recruit beauty advisors and, for the relatively few recruited by most distributors or subdistributors, it was even more difficult to keep them working (CPF 242-47).

58. Then, using a gross misstatement of the retail market for cosmetics—average family purchases of $17.82 per month (CX 11, p. 3), when the correct figure was $8.33 (Nelson 1581)—respondents persisted in presenting a totally false and misleading picture of the volume of sales and the profits that could be made by beauty advisors, by subdistributors, and by distributors (CPF 247-71).

59. The falsity of respondents' representations concerning anticipated retail sales is demonstrated not only by mathematical analysis of the market in the light of the representations made but also by Koscot's records and by the actual experience of those who testified in this proceeding.

60. Koscot painted a picture of 400,000 beauty advisors (CX 13 B), each earning over $8,000 a year in commissions on an annual volume (at retail prices) of $21,600 (CX 11, p. 4; Darling 1299-1300). This multiplies out to annual retail sales for Koscot of $8.6 billion, when total retail sales by all companies of the type of products sold by Koscot amounted to only $5.1 billion in 1970 (CX 21; Nelson 1573-79). Similarly, Koscot represented earnings of $50,000 a year by a distributor through sales made by his beauty advisors (CX 11, p. 9). This would necessitate retail sales of over $200,000 for each distributor. With 40,000 distributors (CX 13 B), Koscot's total retail sales would have to be $8.1 billion—again, far in excess of the total market for Koscot-type products. Even if we were to cut in half the represented sales of a distributor's retail organization, this would contemplate an 80 percent saturation of the market by Koscot.

61. However, it is not necessary to rely on mathematical theory. Analysis of Koscot's records shows that in Illinois, Kansas, and New Jersey, average or mean sales per distributor were only a fraction of the figures represented by Koscot. Whereas Koscot depicted a distributor's annual product sales as ranging from $50,000 to more than $200,000 (CX 11, pp. 8-9; Darling 1302-06), the actual annual average or mean sales of distributors in those States in 1971 were reported in hundreds of dollars, not thousands. The national distributor averages were $1125 in 1970, $1733 in 1971, and $938 in 1972. (CPF 270; see also CPF 267-69)

62. Distributors and subdistributors having the greatest volume of sales in New Jersey had retail sales ranging only from $8,507 to $24,384, while in Illinois, the range was from $8,160 to $22,760 (CPF 271).

63. In summary, the average distributor found it difficult to recruit beauty advisors and even more difficult to retain them. Contrary to Koscot's claims, he wound up with just a few, and even fewer stayed on the job for more than three months. For the most part, their sales were minimal, and most distributors wound up trying to sell directly themselves or relying on their wives or other family members (CX 609

A; CPF 246). The claimed volume of sales simply did not materialize, and, of course, neither did the promised profits (Jones 4979-81). Thus, Koscot's representations concerning the earnings of distributors, supervisors, and beauty advisors were vastly overstated, contrary to what might reasonably be expected, and without basis in fact (CPF 239-71).

64. The lack of success at retail by Koscot's distributors was amply demonstrated by Koscot's own books and records, but that did not deter respondents from continuing to make their grossly deceptive claims of huge retail sales with resulting huge profits for distributors, supervisors, and beauty advisers. As a matter of fact, at a meeting attended by Turner, Bunting, and Julian, the suggestion that Koscot literature be revised to reflect the actual retail sales experience of Koscot distributors was rejected by Turner because "the figures weren't high enough to arouse the enthusiasm that he wanted" (Jones 4892).

Status of Koscot

65. Koscot made grandiose claims concerning its status as a seller of cosmetics and its prospects of surpassing within a year or two Avon Products, Inc., as the leading seller of cosmetics—of becoming "Number One in '71" (CX 11, pp. 3, 20, 34-35; CX 3 A; Mann 4450; CPF 272-79).

66. Illustrative of misrepresentations concerning the status of Koscot and its operations is the following:

> KOSCOT was begun with an investment of $5,000. During its first month in operation, it sold $67,000 in retail kosmetics. One year later, its sales were exceeding one million dollars per month, and seven months after that the retail sales were in excess of four million dollars per month (CX 11, p. 20).

67. Contrary to such representations, there was no product for many months after Koscot was launched in August 1967, and total product revenues in 1968 totalled only $255,000 (CX 29 E). During the first year of its operations, Koscot was engaged almost exclusively in the sale of distributorships and devoted almost no effort to providing a basis for future retail sales. Koscot had a minuscule share of the market throughout its history—considerably less than one percent (Mann 4450-51, 4740; CPF 282), and it could not reasonably be expected to become the leading seller of cosmetics for at least ten years (Delaney 1057; Mann 4451, CPF 282-97).

Opportunity Meetings and GO-Tours

68. Distributorship sales were generally accomplished by high-pressure sales methods applied at golden opportunity meetings and on golden opportunity tours (GO-Tours). The opportunity meetings were carefully contrived and scripted to create a highly-charged emotional atmosphere in which prospects were persuaded that Koscot offered a fantastic opportunity to "achieve financial success beyond [their] greatest expectations" (CX 11, p. 1). Koscot was presented as an opportunity for "ordinary men and women" to earn from $5,000 to $20,000 a month (CX 15, p. 13; CX 11, p. 5; CPF 70, 76, 82). Scripts were generally followed, but even the exaggerated figures that they contained would sometimes be further exaggerated by overly enthusiastic distributors (CPF 71-72).

69. Koscot literature outlined in detail various techniques designed to "close" the prospect (CX 15, pp. 40-51, 55-58, CPF 58, 80-81). Success stories of named individuals were frequently grossly exaggerated or almost entirely fabricated (CPF 83).

70. To create an impression that affiliation with Koscot was the pathway to success and wealth, hundred dollar bills and thousand dollar bills, as well as Koscot checks for large sums of money—some of them fakes—were ostentatiously displayed (Jones 4856, 4861-62; CPF 84).

71. Through its literature, and particularly through its opportunity meetings and GO-Tours, Koscot represented that there was a virtually unlimited potential to earn large sums of money in a relatively short time by affiliating with Koscot (CPF 67-70, 80). None of the witnesses could fully articulate the atmosphere of the opportunity meetings, but it is apparent that they were generally conducted in such a manner as to excite most of those attending and to induce them to make an emotional decision to invest in the program (CPF 62, 66). Opportunity meetings took on the charged atmosphere of an old-fashioned revival meeting, except that the god was Mammon. For example, there "was a 'money hum,' where the crowd would hum 'money' and then shout it loudly" (Jones 4909). Another widely-favored chant was "Get that check; get that check" (ibid.).

72. Anyone who had or could get the amount of the enrollment fee was a prospect (CPF 59). Under the extreme psychological and emotional pressures established at opportunity meetings and on GO-Tours, individuals were sold on the idea that anyone could succeed in the Koscot program. For those who had reservations about their qualifications, Koscot promised to provide the necessary training.[13] > things like grabbing people's lapels, pulling their ties off, hitting them on the back, yelling in their ear, * * * any bizarre, odd things that could change a person's state of consciousness so much that he would just unthinkingly invest in the company, on the spot sometimes (Jones 4908-09).

73. One former Koscot official described the "extremely high pressure" tactics used by respondent Hobart Wilder to "get that check" from a prospect:

74. Opportunity meetings were supplemented periodically with GO-Tours. A GO-Tour was a trip by bus or plane to a Koscot facility, climaxed by an opportunity meeting. With a captive audience of distributors and prospective distributors, the GO-Tour presented an extended opportunity for Koscot to use all its high-pressure recruitment techniques. The technique was to "keep everyone enthused, vibrating. You had to keep them excited until you got the money * * *. This was the whole thing, constant sing, shout, holler, go, go, go." (Tell 3887-88; CPF 85-96)

One GO-Tour participant reported:

> When I got back home I didn't sleep for five nights after this, neither did my wife. The guy got us so jacked up, in thousands, I was ready to sell the Brooklyn Bridge to Eisenhower. (Vaz 2476)

Company Support of Retail Sales

75. The failure of distributors and their so-called sales organizations (subdistributors and beauty advisors) to achieve any substantial consumer sales was due in major part to Koscot's failure to make good on its representations as to company support of retail sales.[14] Respondents concede that the "promises attached to the sale of Koscot distributorships" included commitments (1) to provide product availability—initial inventory and a distribution system for the delivery of products; (2) to provide free training with respect to both recruitment and retail selling; and (3) to provide advertising (RPF 26). Respondents have put in issue the question whether or not Koscot lived up to those commitments. They have proposed numerous findings that purportedly "rebut much of the evidence complaint counsel sought to adduce" respecting product, training, and advertising, as well as other subjects (RB, p. 8). Respondents claim too much. Many of their proposed findings lack record support or are actually contrary to the record, and others are irrelevant to the issues presented. Each of these aspects of the Koscot operation will be examined in turn.

Product Availability

76. It is undisputed that ready availability of product is necessary for a successful retail operation. In recognition of this truism, Koscot promised ready availability of product to its distributors and their retail sales organizations. Respondents argue that they met their commitments with regard to provision of product and that therefore no fraud occurred with respect to this aspect of the Koscot marketing program. Respondents' proposed findings regarding product may be summarized as follows:

1. Koscot did better in providing product than did Holiday Magic (RPF 14, 16, 18, 31).

2. Events beyond the control of Koscot or Turner caused whatever shortages occurred (RPF 19, 21, 32, 34, 40).

3. Koscot and Turner actually desired to have product (RPF 23, 33, 39).

4. Koscot took actions to obtain product (RPF 27, 35-38).

5. Koscot provided an effective product distribution system (RPF 30).

6. Koscot provided adequate product availability from late 1968 on (RPF 40).

77. A comparison of the foregoing summary with complaint counsel's contentions (CRB, pp. 4-5) shows that the principal dispute relates to the question of product availability and distribution methods after 1968, with subsidiary questions relating to the reasons for the lack of product in 1967-1968 and Turner's intent respecting retail operations.

78. Respondents concede that product "was not readily available in 1967 and most of 1968" but they blame this situation on factors "beyond Koscot's control" and contend that by the end of 1968 "product was beginning to pour into Koscot and thereafter product was always plentiful" (RPF 40). Thus, the acknowledged fact is that for more than a year after Koscot was organized and began recruiting and making claims of product availability, neither Koscot nor any of its distributors had any product available for immediate sale (Edwards 1132-36, 1163; Mann 4349, 4639, 4648; Jones 4921-24, 4928-29, 4952-54; CXs 196 A, 198). It is by no means clear that this initial lack of product was due to factors beyond Koscot's control. And, in any event, such a circumstance does not justify the continuing misrepresentations as to product availability.

79. It is true that cosmetics worth millions of dollars were produced or purchased by Koscot thereafter (Jones 4952). The record establishes, however, that even after the first year, Koscot was consistently unable to fill immediately its distributors' orders with the products desired, particularly the most popular products. There were significant lags in obtaining product necessary to fill completely the orders of distributors. (CXs 275 A, 277 A, 609 A; Jones 4876-77, 4989; CPF 334-35)

80. Some of the production and distribution problems encountered by Koscot, particularly in the first year or so, might be rationalized as simply the growing pains of a new company, complicated by mismanagement due to the lack of qualified personnel, as well as certain other factors. Actually, the factors allegedly beyond Koscot's control which respondents cite to excuse their initial failure to deliver product apply only to the first year of Koscot's operation. Respondents blame the incompetence of the personnel assigned to get product (RPF 19, 21, 32, 34).

81. This excuse must be assessed against the fact that no one with any experience in cosmetics was brought into the company in its early days and that officials were selected on the basis of their ability to sell distributorships rather than skill in managing a cosmetics sales operation (Delaney 1084-86, 1090, 4452, 4468; Mann 4792; Jones 4902-03, 4962). Thus, by selecting personnel unqualified to successfully obtain product, Koscot and Turner took actions whose predictable consequence was the shortages of product they experienced, particularly in the early history of Koscot.

82. Respondents also refer to a glass industry strike in 1968 (RPF 34), but the record fails to establish sufficient details concerning the date or the duration of the strike or its actual impact on Koscot operations (Delaney 1051-53; Edwards 1163; Mann 4639).

83. It is true, moreover, that efforts were ultimately made to develop good products and to employ some personnel knowledgeable in the field of cosmetics production and marketing. Nevertheless, this record establishes that product sales were constantly subordinated to recruitment. Koscot and its distributors were primarily in the business of selling distributorships (Westing 1214-16; Nelson 1726). The extent and nature of Koscot's product inventories demonstrated its expectation of limited product sales (Westing 1237-39).

84. That the principal activity of Koscot was the sale of distributorships is shown by financial records reflecting that during the period 1967-1972 distributorship sales accounted for the bulk of its revenues. The breakdown is as follows:

Period	*Total Revenues	*Recruitment Revenues	% of Total	*Product Revenues	% of Total
1967	143	143	100%
1968	2,932	2,676	91.3%	255	8.7%
1969	13,658	11,400	83.5%	1,474	10.8%
1970	22,716	13,200	58%	9,516	42%
1971	56,204	36,700	65%	19,504	35%
1971	46,135	37,363	81%	8,772	19%

 For 11 months ended June 30, 1971; see infra.

Notes: The figures are drawn primarily from CPF 464 and the sources there listed (by "Notice of Corrections"), except that the figures for the fiscal years 1970 and 1971 have been inserted from CXs 357 G-H and 358 F, I. Although the Koscot financial records from which this analysis was drawn are not models of clarity, and there are a few discrepancies, they appear to be the best information available. Some explanation is required as to methodology.

CX 29 E, a Koscot report to the Commission, is the source for the 1967 and 1968 figures. For the fiscal year ended July 31, 1969, the total revenues figure is found at CX 26 F; the recruitment figure at CX 26 G. For fiscal 1969, product revenues were derived by subtracting the recruitment revenues from total revenues and then adjusting that figure by subtracting revenues for sales aides, newspaper income, and trucking, as shown on CX 26 Q. Here there are two discrepancies: (1) CX 26 G cites distributor revenues of $11.4 million, "of which $9,816,000 is included in revenue;" and (2) CX 26 Q shows "Cosmetic sales" of $9.7 million. If the $9.8 million figure were used instead of $11.4 million, the percentage figures would be 71 percent and 29 percent respectively. As a further complication, CX 29 E presents another set of figures, showing "gross sales" of $13.03 million, distributorship revenues of $8.9 million, and product revenues of $4 million. These figures would result in percentages of 69 percent and 31 percent respectively.

The 1970 figures, shown in CPF 464 as not available, were derived from CX 357 G-H for the fiscal year ended July 31, 1970. Product revenues were obtained by subtracting the recruitment revenues from total revenues.

The first set of 1971 figures (for the fiscal year ended July 31, 1971) was similarly derived from CX 358 I (but see 358 F). The second set of 1971 figures, taken from CPF 464, is for the eleven months ended June 30, 1971. The total revenues figure was arrived at by adding "Receipts from New Contracts" (CX 168 B) to "Receipts—Product Sales" (CX 168 B), except that this product figure has been adjusted to reflect net prices by subtracting the "Territory Override." (Since the year-to-date override entry on CX 168 B is illegible, it was arrived at by using the year-to-date figure on CX 167 D and adding to it the June 1971 figure shown on CX 168 B.) The substantial variance between the 1971 figures has not been explained. Presumably, complaint counsel considered CX 168 more reliable than CX 358.

The figures for the fiscal year ended July 31, 1972, were derived from CX 180 D. Recruitment revenues represent the sum of the "New contracts" figure plus "GO Tour" revenue. The product revenue figures represents the "Product sales" figure from which the "Territory override" was subtracted to reflect net prices. (See also Westing 1214-16 and Nelson 1727-38.)

85. Whatever the shortcomings of the data in ¶ 84, there nevertheless is no doubt that during the period covered, distributorship sales accounted for most of Koscot's revenues (Edwards 1173; Westing 1216; Nelson 1728).[14]a

86. Respondents also plead good intentions on the part of Turner and his associates (RPF 23, 33, 39). The evidence tends to show that Turner initially wanted to establish a successful company to sell cosmetics at retail, but there are also indications that this desire may have changed in the face of the constant need of the Turner empire for more cash, which could be more quickly realized through recruiting activities than through cosmetic sales (Delaney 1057, 1089-91; Edwards 1152-56, 1160-61, 1173; Mann 4564-65, 4589-91, 4650-55, 4670-75, 4695-99, 4794-95, 4802-05; Jones 4875, 4926-36, 4949-50, 4990-94, 4998, 5001-03).

87. Regardless of respondents' intentions, the fact remains that from the inception of Koscot, there were serious misrepresentations regarding retail operations—(1) the availability of product; (2) the extent and nature of supporting advertising; (3) the training offered with respect to retail operations; as well as (4) the likelihood of success and the amount of income to be realized through retailing of Koscot products (supra). And these were knowing misrepresentations.

88. Until early 1969, the only method used by Koscot to distribute its products was by direct factory shipment to distributors. All initial inventories, less out-of-stock items, were shipped direct to the distributors. These initial inventories consisted of an assortment of products chosen by Koscot. All reorders for product had to be made in case lots direct from Koscot (CPF 315).

89. Beginning in March 1969, distributors, with Koscot's advice and assistance, began establishing local cooperative warehouses ("co-ops") in which their inventories were stored. The idea was that such co-ops would provide immediate product availability on a local basis by establishing a larger inventory assortment than would have been available to a distributor under the direct factory shipment method. Although distributors could continue to get direct factory shipment, they were strongly discouraged from doing so and encouraged, instead, to join in the co-op warehouse (CPF 316-17).

90. To establish a co-op, existing distributors put in the inventory which they already possessed, while new distributors either received their initial inventory direct from Koscot and placed it in the co-op or Koscot simply credited the co-op account with the amount of product due a new distributor (CPF 318).

91. Distributors were required to maintain a minimum inventory account at the co-op. A distributor could withdraw products without additional charge only so long as his inventory value exceeded this minimum. The co-ops soon encountered difficulties in re-stocking (CPF 319-20).

[14]a From August 1967 until July 1972, Koscot netted $14.1 million after paying recruiting fees (CPF 226-228).

92. Within a few months, Koscot acquired control of the co-ops and their inventory and converted them to "satellite warehouses" and also opened additional satellites. By June 1970, there were 350 satellite warehouses in operation (CPF 321) Koscot obtained control of existing inventories of the co-ops and assumed their liability to distributors for their inventory accounts. As new distributors were recruited, Koscot established for them an inventory account at the nearest satellite. There were restrictions on withdrawal of inventory. Distributors had to maintain a minimum inventory value at the satellite and paid immediately for all product withdrawn once this minimum was reached (CPF 322-23).

93. In 1971, Koscot began closing down the local satellites and replaced them with five regional mail-order satellites. These mail-order satellites assumed the obligations of the local satellites and were operated in the same manner as the local satellites with respect to the crediting of distributor inventory and the withdrawal of product by distributors or their sales organization. (CPF 325-27). The mail-order satellites disadvantaged, rather than helped, retail sales (CPF 344). There are indications that the mail-order satellites were later closed and that all orders thereafter were shipped from Orlando, Fla. (Bennett 3709).

94. Thus, Koscot's successive modifications of its distribution system, so that a distributor's initial inventory was not physically delivered to him, meant that Koscot was receiving payment for product that it did not actually deliver. As a matter of fact, between July 1969 and July 1973, Koscot had less finished goods inventory on hand than the amount for which it already had been paid by its distributors. During this period, Koscot steadily reduced the amount of finished goods that it had on hand, in comparison to the initial inventories for which it had been paid by distributors but had not furnished. The table prepared by complaint counsel from respondents' own records tells the story as follows:

Fiscal Year	Koscot's Finished Goods Inventory	Cost of Product Due Distributors	*Percentage Relationship
1969	$995,000	$1,155,000	86
1970	2,579,000	4,291,000	60
1971	5,557,000	10,362,000	54
1972	4,793,592	9,693,000	49
1973	1,400,000	9,693,000	14.4

* Finished inventory as a percentage of product due distributors.

95. Such a practice allowed funds paid for product to be diverted to other uses (Westing 1237-39; Darling 1459-60).

96. The weakness in respondents' defense is pointed up by the fact that they are driven to claim that Koscot did better in providing product than did Turner's "alma mater," Holiday Magic (RPF 14, 16, 18, 31). Complaint counsel concede that Koscot supplied a better and more extensive line of cosmetics than did Holiday Magic. But this is irrelevant, as is the disputed claim of respondents that Koscot provided its distributors a greater availability of product than Holiday Magic. Even if we accept respondents' contention that Holiday Magic had "little product" and was "not interested in the retail cosmetics business" (RPF 31), this would merely show that Koscot, in its failure to provide what it promised, may not have been as derelict as another firm that the Commission has found to have engaged in a fraudulent operation (Holiday Magic, Inc., supra).

97. As a matter of fact, the Koscot plan was adopted from the Holiday Magic plan. Turner quit Holiday Magic and established Koscot when Holiday Magic curtailed the opportunity to earn large commissions on recruiting by imposing certain requirements for retail sales. Koscot's manuals were based on those of Holiday Magic, and Turner's instructions were to out-magic Holiday Magic by raising the ante on the earnings claims (Jones 4851-53, 4860-61). Although there is some testimony that does tend to introduce some ameliorating factors and to suggest some "honorable parts of Koscot's history" different from the Holiday Magic scheme" (RB, p. 8), the undersigned has not made a detailed comparative study of the two plans, and he sees no occasion to do so. To predicate a defense on the theory that Koscot's offenses were not as bad as those of a similar operation (Holiday Magic) already found to have been fraudulent is to confess the bankruptcy of the defense. Degrees of fraud are somewhat akin to degrees of pregnancy.

98. However anomalous it may seem for Koscot to operate in a manner apparently designed to discourage consumer sales of its products, that was the effect of its supply and distribution policies and practices (CPF 338-41, 344; see infra, p. 41 [p.1149, herein]). Whatever the cause of its failure to provide ready availability of product for resale, Koscot plainly did not make good on its representations in that regard.

Training

99. Because of the lure of the money to be made through recruitment, many Koscot distributors sold distributorships to others whom they knew or believed to be unqualified (Hatcher 3115; Brown 3390-91; Tell 3883-86; Fletcher 3977). So long as it was possible to "get that check," anybody with a "pulse and two legs" (Vaz 2465) or "anyone that was breathing" (Tell 3883) was a prospect by Koscot standards (Mann 4475-76; CPF 97-98, 100, 104).

100. Many persons who purchased Koscot distributorships were unqualified to operate a cosmetics selling business by reason of their age, lack of education and training, or lack of business, administrative, or sales experience. Koscot's recruitment methods tended to result in the enrollment of persons without any special qualifications, including frequently the credulous, who in turn tended to recruit others with similar profiles. By reason of their limited education and modest backgrounds, such persons tended to have a limited degree of sophistication in financial and business matters. (CPF 100, 103, 106-09, 111, 304-06, 310-11) They were particularly vulnerable to the misrepresentations and the high-pressure enrollment techniques used at opportunity meetings and on GO-Tours (supra, p. 26 [p.1137, herein]).

101. Consistent with the Turner philosophy, respondents represented that anyone could achieve success by becoming a seller of Koscot cosmetics-that no special qualifications or experience were necessary (CX 11, pp. 5, 34; CPF 100, 305-06. To those who expressed doubts on this score, Koscot promised to provide training that would overcome any such shortcomings (CPF 307, 345-47, 349). This record demonstrates that Koscot's representations of this nature were false and misleading (CPF 310-11, 350-354a).

102. Koscot deliberately chose a method of recruitment that enrolled distributors who, for the most part, did not know how to set up and manage a wholesale or retail business and then, to compound the offense, used the promise of its training program to overcome objections by potential distributors that they were not qualified (CPF 104-11, 348-49).

103. Because of certain terminology used in the findings that follow, it is important to understand that in the operation of the Koscot plan, the sale of distributorships for compensation was known as "wholesale," while the sale of cosmetics, whether at wholesale or at retail, was known as "retail." In theory, and to a very limited extent in practice, a Koscot distributor performed a traditional wholesale function in supplying products to others (supervisors (or subdistributors) and beauty advisors) for eventual sale at retail to consumers. To avoid the possible confusion that may result in referring to the sale of distributorships as "wholesale," the undersigned has usually referred to the sale of distributorships in those words or by the use of the terms

"recruitment" or "recruiting" (see CPF 128). However, in this section, "wholesale training" refers to salesmanship and motivation training designed to teach distributors to recruit others into the Koscot program. As used by counsel and witnesses, "retail training" primarily means business training respecting the establishment and operation of a distributorship for the sale of cosmetics, etc., although the term was also loosely used sometimes to include the training of beauty advisors for retail selling. To avoid confusion, the term "business training" will be used herein except when quoting.

104. Respondents do not dispute that Koscot promised its distributors "free training—both wholesale and retail"[15] (RPF 26). In contending that respondents met this commitment, defense counsel have proposed the following findings:

> Glenn Turner created Koscot with the idea that he would get better product and training to his distributors than Ben Patrick gave his with Holiday Magic. * * * The training was superior. (RPF 14)
> Glenn Turner gave Miss Jeri Jacobus 5 percent of Koscot to be in charge of retail training. She was knowledgeable and her judgment was valued. * * * Miss Jacobus did provide training programs for the beauty advisors. In excess of $20,000 per month was spent on such training alone as early as 1968. (RPF 15) Jeri Jacobus provided free, expert training in the early days for Koscot retailers * * * and thereafter, Jerry McLaughlin headed a substantial (perhaps a 100) husband and wife retail training teams. * * * In excess of $35,000 per month was spent by Koscot on salaries and travel expenses for the retail training teams while Mann was president of Koscot. * * * In 1968, Koscot had spent in excess of $20,000 per month for training while Mr. Edwards was president. (RPF 28)

105. The difficulty with such proposed findings is that they fail to meet the issues posed by complaint counsel's proposed findings (CPF 345-354a). And, although the record citations tend to support respondents' proposed findings on the general subject of training, the testimony relied on is principally concerned with "wholesale" training and training of beauty advisors. Complaint counsel concede that respondents provided free training, both "wholesale and retail," and that such training was superior to that offered by Holiday Magic (CRB, pp. 14-15). Complaint counsel also concede that respondents spent considerable sums on training Koscot distributors how to recruit and that this phase of the training was effective (ibid.). However, the allegation is that Koscot falsely promised business training—to teach its distributors and subdistributors how to set up and manage a cosmetics business—a wholesale-retail operation. Respondents' proposed findings simply fail to meet the record evidence in support of this allegation. The testimony relied on by respondents relates almost exclusively to "wholesale" training and to the training of beauty advisors. At most, the cited testimony (Edwards 1157; Mann 4631-34; Jones 4918-19) simply demonstrates that there was some "retail" training and that this involved the expenditure of Koscot funds (see Mann 4452, 4470, 4473-74, 4773-80; Jones 4952-53, 4982, 4997). The figures cited by respondents in RPF 15 and 28 are not figures for business training but cover wholesale training and beauty advisor training (Edwards 1157; Mann 4635, 4684, 4773-77). As a matter of fact, although Koscot represented that $300 of each distributorship fee went for training, company records indicate that out of $2 million earmarked for training in the fiscal year ended July 31, 1969, Koscot spent only $1.4 million (CXs 13 D-E, 26 Q).

106. The business training that was provided did not qualify distributors to operate a cosmetics business (CPF 353). No training in record-keeping or cost accounting was provided (CPF 353a), although such subject matter was necessary to enable distributors to operate any business successfully (CPF 348).

107. Although Koscot recognized the need for business training and promised to provide it, it actually discouraged distributors from taking it, so that they could be trained instead in recruitment (CPF 353). Frequently, Koscot's so-called business training sessions were devoted in large part to "wholesale" and to motivational aspects or to product description and application and the recruitment, control, and maintenance of beauty advisors (CPF 350, 353b).

108. The former Koscot officials who, according to respondents (RB, p. 17), were "highly complimentary" of the retail training program failed to support the claim of effective business training for distributors as each testified that he was unfamiliar with the nature of such training (Edwards 1174; Mann 4780; Jones 4982, 4997). Even so, one of them, a former president of Koscot, testified that in 1971, the retail training program for distributors "needed a tremendous amount of improvement" (Mann 4473).

109. In summary, Koscot promised to teach its distributors how to set up and manage a business, and it did not do so, regardless of how much money it may have spent.

Advertising

110. Respondents have offered a simplistic defense to the proposed findings of complaint counsel on the subject of advertising. They contend that Koscot promised to spend $75 per distributor for advertising and that Koscot spent from 1968 to 1972, an amount greater than that commitment (RPF 26, 29). These proposed findings of respondents must be rejected as irrelevant and as contrary to the record. First, although there was apparently a contractual commitment in Koscot's early days to spend $75 per distributor on advertising (Edwards 1143, 1159; Mann 4635-37), Koscot's representations as to advertising were far broader than that narrow commitment. The issue is not whether the contractual commitment was met, but whether Koscot provided the advertising it promised in its manuals, in opportunity meetings, and otherwise. But, second, even if we were to adopt respondents' test, the record fails to support the claim that Koscot spent on advertising $2.25 million between 1968 and 1972. Respondents arrived at this figure by multiplying the supposed number of Koscot distributors (30,000) by the $75 figure and then asking a former president of Koscot whether that amount was indeed spent on advertising. It is true that an affirmative answer was given (Mann 4636), but it is entitled to scant weight when considered in the light of the whole record, including Koscot's own records.

111. Mann's testimony does not demonstrate any basis for his knowing Koscot's advertising expenditures for the period 1968-72, or even having an informed opinion. Moreover, some of his other answers materially detract from his estimate (Tr. 4452-67, 4628-30, 4664-68, and 4672-73). Mann testified that advertising expenditures while he was international president of Koscot totalled $450,000 for October 1970-February 1971 and that he knew of no other period where such an amount was spent for advertising (Tr. 4460-61). He contrasted it with an advertising budget of $60,000 for the last six months of 1971 (Tr. 4461; CXs 570-72).

112. Above and beyond its contractual commitment to spend on advertising $75 per distributor, Koscot promised that it would be spending millions of dollars on advertising within a year or two to create a consumer demand and to make Koscot the leading firm in the cosmetics industry ("No. 1 in '71"). Koscot promised to place effective advertising on network television and radio and in magazines and newspapers (CPF 355-56, 369).

113. Koscot's promises concerning advertising demonstrated recognition by its officials, as well as by its distributors, that extensive advertising would be necessary for a new firm selling cosmetics door-to-door in competition with one or more firms already firmly entrenched in the industry (Mann 4451-52, 4751-52; CPF 355e, 357-59). Yet Koscot's advertising effort was far overshadowed by that of the industry leader, Avon Products, Inc. (CPF 364).

114. Koscot announced its intention "to reach the greatest heights in product recognition—to become the one product everyone thinks of when kosmetics are mentioned!" This was said to be a "fantastic idea" but "one that is fast becoming a reality!" (CX 11, p. 3).

115. The "reality" was that more than once Turner disapproved of advertising expenditures to reach such a goal (Edwards 1141-42; Jones 4875). Jeri Jacobus favored "massive advertising to get product recognition" (Jones 4929-30), but Turner "always said that most of the money was coming out of the wholesale[16] side, and he thought that most of the money should be devoted to that end" (Jones 4875).

116. Thus, the substantial advertising promised by Koscot did not materialize. Advertising was "minimal" in 1968 (Edwards 1140). Later, there were periods when nothing was spent on advertising and other periods when a "good bit" was spent (Edwards 1143-44, 1159-60; Jones 4929-30, 4953-54). Such advertising as Koscot did sponsor was too little and too late, and the glowing promises regarding product recognition were never fulfilled (CPF 369, 371-72). There were some limited local TV commercials, many in other than prime time, and a few magazine and newspaper advertisements (CPF 365, 367).

117. Contrary to respondents' dubious estimate that at least $2.2 million was spent for advertising[17] between 1968 and 1972 (RPF 29), the fact is that only about half of this amount was spent for advertising. As developed from Koscot's own records, its advertising expenditures were as follows:

Year	Total Amount	Media	Production
1969	$110,512	$ 99,871	$10,641
1970	$311,302	$287,511	$23,791
1971	$317,263	$273,246	$44,017
1972	$370,459	$332,993	$37,466
Total	$1,133,982	$993,621	$115,915

* Includes some expenditures made through 3/14/69.

From CPF 360. Sources: CXs 625, 651, 652, 699 A-B, 743 A-B, 756 A-K (see Tr. 4339-41).

118. Some of these advertising expenditures were forced upon Koscot in the light of legal proceedings instituted or threatened. For example, as a result of negotiations with the attorney general of New York, $100,000 was spent in a single campaign in that State (Mann 4465). Although Koscot designated certain funds for advertising in its financial records, actual advertising expenditures were substantially below the funds so earmarked (Edwards 1143, 1159-60; CPF 362). As a matter of fact, as of July 31, 1972, Koscot had a book entry reflecting $1,876,989 designated for advertising expenses but unspent (CX 758 B).

119. Despite the conceded quality of Koscot cosmetics, they remained largely unknown to the consuming public, and lack of advertising was a significant factor leading to this negative result. Koscot failed to make good on its representations concerning the nature and scope of its advertising.

[16] See ¶ 103, supra.

[17] "Sales aids" were included in respondents' estimate, but Koscot sold these items to its distributors at a profit (CPF 378).

D. "Wholesale v. Retail"[18]

120. Koscot's emphasis on the "get-rich-quick" aspect of its endless chain recruitment had predictable results. Koscot raked in millions of dollars, and a few early birds also realized huge profits before the bubble burst. Meanwhile, the sale of "kosmetics" to the public languished, and Koscot's representations about this phase of its business turned out to be just as false and misleading as those concerning recruiting. Koscot's initial glowing promises about the retailing of cosmetics were at best highly dubious. But the preoccupation of Turner and his cohorts with the "big money" to be made through recruitment virtually ensured the failure of the retail operation.

121. That is one of the saddest and most ironical aspects of this case. There is evidence indicating that Koscot did indeed have a potential for success as a seller of cosmetics. As a matter of fact, now that it is out of the business of selling distributorships, Koscot may yet emerge as a viable cosmetics company. According to most of the distributors and subdistributors who testified, the Koscot products had merit and might have achieved considerable consumer acceptance with proper promotion and advertising. Some of the company officials saw this potential, particularly Delaney, Mann and Julian, and many distributors made prodigious efforts to succeed in the retail sale of the product. However, the steps necessary for success in the sale of cosmetics were almost invariably subordinated to the promotion of the sale of distributorships. Company officials who tried to change the emphasis to retailing either quit in disgust or were forced out of the company or into subordinate positions.

122. The Koscot marketing program was structured so as to maximize recruitment earnings even at the expense of retail earnings. Distributors were encouraged to devote their energies to recruiting by virtue of the apparent opportunity to make big money fast. No real effort was made to obtain distributors interested in or qualified for the operation of a retail business. The incentives in the Koscot marketing program were so structured that recruitment provided the possibility of large immediate rewards. In contrast, the work of building a retail sales organization was very difficult, initial rewards were small, and it took time to develop and build a retail sales organization. Koscot's former president recognized the difficulty of getting distributors to concentrate their efforts on retail when it appeared that the rewards from recruiting were faster and more substantial (Mann 4473).

123. By encouraging the recruitment of any person who had or who could get sufficient money to buy into the program, regardless of their qualifications or their location in reference to other distributors, the Koscot program virtually foredoomed the retail effort to failure.

124. The result was an inadequate and unbalanced distribution network, with too many distributors serving certain areas and too few serving other areas. Distributors were not evenly distributed in any State in proportion to the relative population of the various marketing areas. Instead, distributors were concentrated in certain marketing areas in numbers greatly disproportionate to the population of those marketing areas. (CXs 537-39)

125. One of complaint counsel's expert witnesses expressed it this way:

> If a manufacturer selects his own distributors, he will look at them very hard headedly in terms of how knowledgeable they are, how financially secure they are, how experienced they are, and so on. He also will strive to put together an organization that covers the territory of the country that he wants to cultivate in an even and balanced manner.
> If an organization is put together by other distributors whose primary inducement is the profit they can make from recruiting, they are likely to pay primary attention to whether the prospect can pay the investment. That would be the primary concern because that is going to be the source of their profit.
> Secondly, they will tend to recruit from among the people who[m] they have access to, which means that the proximity will be an important consideration and the consequences of this is likely to be an over-development of an organization in certain territories and a scarcity of distributors in other territories. (Westing 1210-11.)

126. The rationalization that the emphasis on recruitment was designed to establish a distribution network as quickly as possible (Mann 4802-05; Jones 4936; CX 13 B) will not withstand analysis. Whether the quota was 30,000 distributors or 40,000 distributors, this was an excessive number for the amount of retail business that was being done or that could reasonably be expected (CPF 385-87, 389-92). Although perhaps not conclusive, a comparison with Avon as a successful company in the field tends to show that there was no necessity for the number of distributors being sought by Koscot other than as a means of realizing a rapid and substantial cash intake. In 1969, Avon had 1,566 district managers to recruit and supervise its retail sales representatives. By 1971, this number had increased to 1,841 district managers, pursuant to the Avon formula of one district manager to 100,000 population (Speer 2121-22).

127. The compensation of Koscot's State directors and their assistants was "based on receipts from new contracts" (CX 164 E).

Understandably, this method of compensation provided an incentive for such officials to favor recruitment over retail. And the record demonstrates their natural reaction to such an incentive: The Illinois State director told a scheduled "business meeting" of distributors: "I don't care about retail. I am here to sell wholesale."[19] (Gittings 3286; CPF 417).

128. Despite his ostensible interest in building a cosmetics company, Turner devoted most of his time to recruitment activity and problems; he promoted officials and employees who emphasized the recruitment aspect of Koscot, to the detriment of those who tried to build up the cosmetics-selling end of the business (CPF 419-26, 431-34, 438-447). At a time when recruiting had to be halted in several States because of legal restrictions or because the so-called quota had been reached, Turner was urged to make a tour designed to encourage retail activity, but he rejected this proposal and elected to devote his time to the promotion of Dare-To-Be-Great as a substitute pyramid plan (CPF 435-37).

129. To the extent that the application of quota limitations or the institution or threat of legal action by State authorities raised questions about the continued sale of Koscot distributorships, distributors were constantly reassured that "there will always be wholesale"[20] —that Turner would create new companies in which distributorships could be sold (CPF 192-193). For example, Turner established in 1969, a corporation called Dare To Be Great, Inc. ("DTBG") which used a marketing plan similar to that of Koscot except that the "product" comprised texts and manuals presenting an attitude course. Koscot distributors were authorized to sell distributorships in DTBG. The purpose was made clear:

> Glenn Turner said they will try to stop me with Koscot but we will just go on with Dare to be Great (Palamara 2572).

Turner "decided that we could start many, many pyramid companies and we could start them faster than the Government could shut us down. And, he stated that he * * * intended to be the pyramid king of the world." (Jones 4896). Several other companies using the same type of marketing program were also established by Turner (CPF 192-216).

130. Dissension developed within Koscot, not only in its Orlando headquarters, but also in the field, between those who wanted to continue to reap the harvest of distributorship sales through "wholesaling" (see ¶ 103, supra) and those who wanted Koscot to sell cosmetics. It is not necessary for the purposes of this proceeding to detail the infighting that ensued. It is sufficient to note that in mid-1971 the "wholesalers," led by Wilder, prevailed with Turner's blessing, and "retailing" was further deemphasized (CPF 433-447, 454-61). However, Glenn Turner's "impossible dream" ended in July 1972, when Koscot petitioned for reorganization under the Federal Bankruptcy Act (RX 12). Koscot finally became a marketer of cosmetics instead of the promoter of a fraudulent scheme.

E. Liability of Individual Respondents

131. Although the previous findings (¶¶ 7-26) are sufficient to demonstrate the need for a cease-and-desist order against the individual respondents (except Delaney and Jones), brief additional findings may be desirable with respect to the order of restitution being entered against Turner, Bunting and Wilder. (Obviously, any restitution order should be directed to the corporate respondents.)

132. Turner was the alter ego of the corporate respondents and the "architect and prime mover"[21] of Koscot's marketing scheme. He bears primary responsibility for the unlawful practices herein found. Additionally, he was the primary beneficiary of the income realized from Koscot's operations, manipulating and using corporate funds as his own. (¶¶ 7-9, supra)

133. It is possible, though almost incredible, that at the outset, Turner may have been sincere in his intentions and may have believed the representations made by him and by Koscot. Although he may have been shielded, or may have shielded himself, from some of the harsh realities of what was happening to Koscot's distributors, subdistributors, and beauty advisors (Jones 4903-04, 4968-70, 4986, 4989-94, 5002-03) he is nevertheless chargeable with knowledge that the Koscot operation was based on deception and fraud. If he did not know—and the finding here is to the contrary—he should have known. Although defense counsel pleads that Koscot's operation was superior to that of Holiday Magic, the fact is that there exists a deadly parallel between the two (¶ 97, supra). Turner professed to want to establish a successful cosmetics operation, but when there had to be a choice between "retailing" of cosmetics and "wholesaling" ("head-hunting" for a profit), he opted to invest time, effort, and funds in the latter. This he did with full knowledge of the fraud and deceit involved.

134. Despite exhortations that "honesty" was necessary for success in Koscot (CX 10, p. 2; CX 88), Turner operated on the theory that "it was okay to lie as long as it was for the benefit of the person that you were lying to" (Jones 4858). Turner's idea of benefitting people was for them "to give up everything they had and go * * * deeply in debt, because he felt like if they had everything to lose they would make it" (Jones 4914).

135. The record is replete with stories of the adverse impact on the finances and the careers of those who took that advice and invested in Koscot. Many borrowed the money,[22] and others quit their jobs to work full time as Koscot distributors. In many instances, net losses were substantial, and some distributors wound up in debt even to the point of bankruptcy or in financial circumstances requiring them to sell their homes (CPF 381-83).

136. Bunting and Wilder each occupied the position of Koscot's chief operations officer for a significant period of time (¶¶ 11, 16, supra). Although Bunting's salary was less than one-third of Wilder's (CXs 307, 309, 322), he continued to reap rich financial rewards from Koscot's operations even after he resigned (¶¶ 12-15, supra). Wilder not only was high-salaried but also received a substantial loan from Koscot (¶ 17, supra). The full extent of their enrichment is not shown by this record, but enough is known to warrant a restitution order against them.

137. There is no question that Bunting and Wilder knowingly and actively directed and participated in the corporate activities. They were familiar with the nature of Koscot's marketing plan, the representations made, and the falsity of such representations. Each had operated as a Koscot distributor, and each had been engaged in field operations (primarily the sale of distributorships) as paid employees before becoming corporate officers. As corporate officers, each participated in opportunity meetings and GO-Tours. Each was aware of the failure of Koscot to deliver the goods (literally and figuratively) to its distributors. Each was actively engaged in day-to-day operations and had available to them computer print-outs showing the facts that contradicted the misrepresentations being made (CPF 538).

138. Under their leadership, high-pressure recruitment methods were intensified through the increasing use of GO-Tours; the method of product distribution was successively modified for the benefit of Koscot and to the detriment of the retail operation; and advertising was not delivered as promised. In addition, plans were made and carried out to avoid the so-called quota restrictions on the continued recruitment of distributors (CPF 539).

139. Wilder occupied a special niche. Next to Turner, he was the chief promoter of recruitment activities. He was ruthless in seeking to "get that check;" he "would do anything to get money" (Jones 4993). He and Turner were the prime movers in subordinating cosmetic sales to recruitment activities. (CPF 552-57)

140. In recommending that Julian and Mann be excepted from the restitution order, complaint counsel state:

> "These two individuals occupied lesser positions of authority in the direction and implementation of the Koscot marketing plan and received no large financial rewards as a result of their position[s] as officers" of Koscot and Turner Enterprises (CB, p. 62).

The undersigned concurs. Despite the identity of some of the corporate positions held by Bunting, Wilder, Julian, and Mann, the record supports a finding that Bunting and Wilder were more dominant figures and played more significant roles in the operations of the corporate respondents. Moreover, the efforts of Mann and Julian to convert Koscot into a legitimate seller of cosmetics may have been among the factors that led complaint counsel to recommend that these respondents be omitted from that part of the order requiring restitution. Finally, Mann's uncontradicted testimony was that, despite a good income from Koscot, he was now "broke" and without hidden assets (¶ 22, supra).

III. Restraints of Trade

A. Price Fixing and Other Restrictive Practices

141. In addition to its deceptive nature, the Koscot marketing plan also involved unlawful restraints of trade and unlawful price discriminations. As to these matters, the undersigned finds as follows:

142. Koscot distributors entered into contracts with Koscot whereby they agreed to abide by certain published rules and regulations, including provisions that the distributors would sell only at Koscot's suggested retail prices. These agreements, as reinforced by various written and oral representations made by Koscot, constituted contracts, agreements, combinations, and understandings to fix prices. (CPF 482-87) It is so well established that such fixing of prices is illegal per se[23] that the customary case citations are omitted (but see CB, pp. 21-22).

143. Through other provisions in its rules and regulations which were similarly agreed to by Koscot distributors, Koscot established and maintained contracts, agreements, combinations and understandings which (1) provided for exclusive dealing in that a distributor might purchase merchandise only from Koscot or from his sponsor; (2) limited the customers or categories of customers to whom distributors might sell Koscot products; and (3) required Koscot's approval for consignment selling. As a means of enforcing these provisions, Koscot required distributors to maintain a record of customers and to make it available to Koscot (CPF 482-83, 488-93; CB, pp. 23-26).

[23] Although respondents did not rely on any exemption provided by so-called Fair Trade laws in certain States, the order provides recognition for any such exemptions.

144. On the authority of Holiday Magic, Inc., (slip opinion, pp. 32-35 [supra, at pp. 1052-1055]), it is found that these restrictions are unreasonable and anti-competitive.[24] Restraints on the right of a distributor to resell products he has purchased are illegal per se, United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 382 (1967).

B. Price Discrimination

145. The facts as to the price discrimination charge (complaint, Count III) may be briefly stated.

(a) Koscot discriminated in price between competing purchasers of its products. To distributors Koscot sold at 65 percent off the retail price, while to supervisors or subdistributors (hereinafter "subdistributors") it sold at 55 percent off retail price.[25] (¶ 36, supra) Since both distributors and subdistributors sold to beauty advisors at 40 percent off the retail price, the distributor's gross margin on such sales was 25 percent, while that of a subdistributor on such sales was 15 percent. On direct sales to consumers, distributors enjoyed a gross margin 10 percentage points above that of subdistributors.

(b) The products involved were of like grade and quality.

(c) Distributors and subdistributors performed the same function in the sale and distribution of Koscot products. Both classes of customers purchased directly from Koscot and resold to consumers, either directly or through beauty advisors.

(d) There was competition between distributors and subdistributors, not only in direct sales to consumers, but also in the recruitment of beauty advisors and in sales to beauty advisors.

(e) There is evidence of actual or potential injury to competition as a result of the discriminations. Irrespective of such evidence, however, the magnitude of the discrimination was such as to warrant an inference that the effect may be to substantially lessen competition.

(f) There was no showing by Koscot that the price discriminations were justified on any of the grounds specified by the applicable statute (CPF 494-508).

146. Accordingly, such discriminations in price were in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended.

[24] Unlike the respondents in Holiday Magic, respondents here have not sought to offer any business justification for these restrictions.

[25] The fact that during part of the relevant time period, these discounts were actually reduced by virtue of the imposition of a 5 percent bookkeeping fee applicable to both classes of customers is immaterial (CPF 503-505).

CONCLUSIONS

1. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of all the respondents except Terrell Jones.

2. The complaint states a cause of action, and this proceeding is in the public interest.

3. The Koscot program was organized and operated in such a manner that the realization of profit by any participant was predicated upon the exploitation of others, most of whom had virtually no chance of receiving a return on their investment and all of whom had been induced to participate by inherent misrepresentations as to potential earnings. Therefore, the Koscot marketing plan was false, misleading, and deceptive, and its use by respondents constituted an unfair and deceptive act and practice and an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

4. In the course of promoting, selling, and offering for sale distributorships, respondents made and caused to be made various statements and representations which were false, misleading, and deceptive, and which respondents knew to be false, misleading, and deceptive. Many persons, in reliance upon such statements and representations, purchased respondents' distributorships, together with cosmetics and related products, and suffered substantial injury thereby. Therefore, the acts and practices of respondents constituted false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. In addition, such acts and practices by respondents constituted fraud.

5. The use by respondents of such false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, and practices, as herein found, has had the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements and representations were true and into the investment of substantial sums of money to participate in respondents' marketing program and the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products by reason of such erroneous and mistaken belief.

6. Such acts and practices of the respondents, as herein found, were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

7. The failure of the corporate respondents, Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc., and Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and the individual respondents, Glenn W. Turner, Ben Bunting, and Hobart Wilder to refund to persons who acted in reliance upon the statements and misrepresentations, as herein found, all monies paid to Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., by such persons was and is inherently and unconscionably unfair and deceptive. The retention of funds obtained pursuant to the unlawful and fraudulent acts and practices disclosed by this record constitutes a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

8. The acts, practices, and methods of competition engaged in, followed, pursued, or adopted by respondents, and the combinations, conspiracies, agreements, or common understandings entered into or reached between and among the respondents and others not parties hereto were unfair methods of competition and were to the prejudice of the public because of their dangerous tendency toward, and the actual practice of, fixing, maintaining, or otherwise controlling the prices at which Koscot's products were resold, in both the wholesale and retail markets, and fixing, maintaining, or otherwise controlling the various fees, bonuses, rebates, or overrides required to be paid by one distributor or class of distributors to another distributor or class of distributors. Such acts, practices, and methods of competition constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade and an unfair method of competition in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

9. The acts, practices, and methods of competition engaged in, followed, pursued, or adopted by respondents, and the combinations, conspiracies, agreements, or common understandings entered into or reached between and among the respondents and their distributors constituted unfair methods of competition in that they resulted in, or had a dangerous tendency, toward restricting the customers to whom Koscot's distributors might resell their products; restricting the source of supply from which distributors might purchase their products; and restricting their distributors to reselling their products through specified channels. Such acts, practices, and methods of competition constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade and an unfair method of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

10. The effect of the price discriminations found herein has been and may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the line of commerce in which the favored purchaser is engaged or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition between the favored and nonfavored customers or with the customers of either of them. Such discriminations constituted violations of the provisions of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended.

11. It is in the public interest to issue a cease and desist order against the respondents Glenn W. Turner, Ben Bunting, Hobart Wilder, Malcolm Julian, and Raleigh P. Mann, respectively, in their individual capacities, as well as against the corporate respondents, Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc.

12. It is in the public interest to issue an order of restitution against the corporate respondents, Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., and Glenn W. Turner Enterprises, Inc., and against respondents Glenn W. Turner, Ben Bunting, and Hobart Wilder.

13. The complaint must be dismissed as to Terrell Jones for want of jurisdiction and as to Michael Delaney for failure of proof.

Rationale of the Order

Introduction

Although respondents do not concede that they engaged in "pyramiding" or other "fraudulent practices" (RB, p. 8), they do not challenge, for the most part, the proposed findings of complaint counsel, and they also do not object to the entry of the proposed order except for that part dealing with restitution. They do, however, take exception to the description of the Koscot operation as "inherently deceptive and fraudulent" (RB, p. 1) and seek to overcome the cited evidence underlying complaint counsel's proposed findings in that regard.

Thus, the only controverted issues are (1) whether an order of restitution should be issued against the corporate respondents and three of the individual respondents (Turner, Bunting, and Wilder) and (2) whether an order of any kind should be issued against respondent Raleigh P. Mann. The restitution issue may be further subdivided into issues of law and fact as follows: (1) whether the Federal Trade Commission is empowered to issue such an order and (2) whether, assuming such power, the facts and circumstances disclosed by this record warrant the issuance of a restitution order. As reflected in the conclusions, supra, all these questions have been answered in the affirmative.

In this state of the record, these remains only the necessity to articulate the basis for such rulings. However, there is no occasion for any lengthy discussion respecting either the basic violations found or the controlling law, except as they may relate to restitution. The findings of fact essentially speak for themselves, and there is no need to rehash them here.

Before dealing with the restitution issue, it may be desirable to comment briefly on the other sections of the order.

The order contained in this initial decision is essentially adapted from that proposed by complaint counsel. Some changes were made, primarily of an editorial nature. It should be noted that the order differs in many respects from the notice order contained in the complaint, although reflecting the substance and intent thereof. It appears that complaint counsel revised the notice order so as to conform, where applicable, to the order entered in the Holiday Magic case, supra. Almost without exception, the corresponding order provisions herein are either identical or substantially similar to the Holiday Magic provisions.

Although Paragraph Twelve of the complaint challenged respondents' merchandising program as "in the nature of a lottery" and thus an unfair practice in violation of Section 5, complaint counsel have not proposed any findings or conclusions with respect to this allegation, and it is being dismissed pursuant to the Commission's rulings in the Holiday Magic case, supra, at 14 [p. 1039], and in Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc., [supra, (slip opinion, pp. 17-21 [supra, at pp. 153-155]).

Restitution Provisions

Respondents have presented a three-pronged objection to the entry of any order of restitution:

First, they challenge the authority of the Commission to enter such an order, relying on the case of Heater v. FTC, 503 F.2d 321 (9th Cir. 1974);

Second, assuming arguendo that the Commission has such authority, they contend that complaint counsel have failed to prove fraud or any other factual basis to support a restitution order; and

Third, they deny that there has been a sufficient showing of the retention by these respondents, particularly the individual respondents, of any fraudulently obtained funds or any funds that are properly the subject of a restitution order.

These questions will be considered seriatim.

It should be noted first, however, that additionally, respondents offered several affirmative defenses against restitution: (1) That the illegal practices have been discontinued; (2) that the corporate respondents have either ceased to exist or have become inactive; (3) that the individual respondents have severed their relationship with the corporate respondents; and (4) that the issue of restitution in this proceeding has become moot by virtue of actions in progress in other forums. These defenses will be considered after the basic questions stated above are disposed of.

At this level the question of the Commission's authority to issue a restitution order must be answered in the affirmative. The Commission has ruled that it has such authority: Holiday Magic, Inc., (slip opinion, p. 23 [supra, at p. 1046]); Universal Credit Acceptance Corp., 82 F.T.C.

570 (1973), rev'd in part sub nom Heater v. F.T.C. (refund provisions set aside), 503 F.2d 321 (9th Cir. 1974); Curtis Publishing Co., 78 F.T.C. 1472 (1971); cf. Windsor Distributing Co., 77 F.T.C. 204, 222-23 (1969), aff'd, 437 F.2d 443, 444 (3rd Cir. 1971).

In ordering restitution in Holiday Magic, supra, the Commission said it was "fully aware of the decision by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals declaring that it may not order restitution of retained monies obtained as a result of violations of the FTC Act occurring prior to the entry of a cease-and-desist order." However, "[w]ith all due respect for the court," the Commission expressed its belief that the Heater decision is "incorrect" and announced its intention to seek Supreme Court review (slip opinion, p. 23, n. 11 [p. 1046]). Subsequently, the Commission determined not to seek Supreme Court review of the Heater decision and, in recognition of the pendency of the Holiday Magic appeal in the Ninth Circuit, reopened the Holiday Magic case and vacated the restitution order. In so doing, the Commission stated that "this determination should not be construed to signify a change in the view of the Commission regarding the correctness of the Heater decision" (order reopening proceeding and modifying final order (Jan. 21, 1975), p. 2 [85 F.T.C. at 89]).

Since the Commission has maintained its position that it has restitution authority despite the Heater case, the undersigned considers himself bound by this determination.

Accordingly, on the basis that the Commission does have such authority, the undersigned has determined to enter the restitution order proposed by complaint counsel. However, it should be noted that it is possible that, like Holiday Magic, these respondents may seek review of such an order in the Ninth Circuit. Whether this circumstance calls for a disposition of the restitution issue in this case similar to that ordered in Holiday Magic is for the Commission to determine.

In any event, and in recognition that the Commission might want to utilize in this case the restitution provisions of the recently approved amendments to the Federal Trade Commission Act, the undersigned has made findings relevant to the issue of restitution and has considered the opposing contentions of counsel with respect thereto. In that connection, it should be noted that although the notice order* in the complaint contained no restitution provisions, the Commission was careful to reserve its right to enter such an order if the record so warranted. It stated (complaint, p. 16):

> If * * * the Commission should conclude from record facts developed in any adjudicative proceeding in this matter that the proposed order provisions may be inadequate to protect the consuming public and respondents' competitors, the Commis> sion may order such other relief as it finds necessary or appropriate, including, but not limited to, an order of restitution for the losses suffered by past and present participants.

* Notice order not reported herein.

Moreover, Count IV of the complaint alleged as follows:

> * * * [R]espondents' multi-level-merchandising program is organized and operated in a manner that results in the recruitment of many participants who have virtually no chance to recover their investments of substantial sums of money in respondents' program and who have been induced to participate by misrepresentations as to potential earnings. Respondents have received the said sums and have failed to offer to refund and refused to refund such money to participants that were unable to recover their investment.
> The use by the respondents of the aforesaid program and their continued retention of the said sums, as aforesaid, is an unfair act and practice and an act of unfair competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

On the basis of this record, and the Holiday Magic decision, supra, the undersigned has concluded that the allegations of Count IV have been established and that an order of restitution should be issued. The facts here meet the standards for restitution established in Holiday Magic and the other cases cited supra.

As to the substantiality of the evidence supporting the findings, respondents contend that the testimony of 28 "victim" witnesses[26] "should have the impact of a fly in a hurricane when one considers that 30,000 people invested in Koscot" (RB, pp. 14-15). This contention must be discounted in light of the fact that the number of so-called victim witnesses was limited by the administrative law judge in response to respondents' motion urging that additional witnesses would be merely cumulative (Tr. 2918-52). In a battle of metaphors, complaint counsel argue that the consumer testimony should be regarded "as the tip of an iceberg rather than as 'a fly in a hurricane' " (CRB, p. 39).

Relying on a dictum in the Heater case suggesting that salaries and loans from a corporation were not properly subject to a restitutionary order, respondents argue that restitution is inappropriate here as to the three individual respondents (Turner, Wilder, and Bunting) because the evidence indicates that they received nothing other than salaries and loans from the corporate respondents.

The undersigned agrees with complaint counsel that on the basis of the evidence now in this record, and in light of the refusal of Turner, Wilder, and Bunting to testify, the burden has shifted to the individual respondents to show that they did not receive or that they do not now retain funds or other assets from the corporate respondents.

As the record stands, it has been proved that the corporate respondents received funds from the victims of an illegal and fraudulent scheme; that a significant portion of such funds are no longer in the possession of the corporate respondents; and that the individual respondents were in such a position of control as to permit them to withdraw funds or other assets from the corporate respondents. In this state of the record, the burden of proof is properly shifted to the individual respondents to show that they did not obtain or do not now possess any fruits of the illegal activities engaged in by the corporate and individual respondents. The facts with regard to this issue lie peculiarly within the knowledge of each individual respondent, and it is well established that in these circumstances, the burden of proof may be properly shifted.

[26] Counsel for both sides have overstated the number of consumer witnesses. Complaint counsel referred to 39 distributors or former distributors of Koscot (CPF, p. 2), and respondents' counsel rounded this figure to 40 (RB, p. 14). Actually, there were 28 such witnesses.

The evidence shows that from August 1967 until July 1972, Koscot retained more than $44 million from the initial fees paid by distributors who enrolled in its marketing program, over and above any recruiting fees remitted to the participants (p. 31, supra, n. 14a [p. 1142, herein]); that as of July 1972, Koscot's total assets were only $22.5 million and by July 1973 had been further diminished to only $11.7 million (¶ 6[27]); that Turner Enterprises received millions of dollars directly from Koscot during this period (¶¶ 4-5); and that Turner, Bunting, and Wilder were each in control of those corporate respondents and in a position to withdraw funds from them during a significant portion of this period (¶¶ 7-16).

On June 28, 1974, respondents filed a series of motions designed to settle this case on the basis of a consent order as to all issues except that of restitution; and, as to the question of restitution, to provide a factual record on the question of the existence of assets in the hands of respondents available for any restitution that might be ordered (motion to recess proceedings, etc., and motion for an order withdrawing this case from the adjudication process).

Thereafter, in a conference on July 8, 1974, defense counsel proffered to produce as witnesses on the question of assets respondents Turner, Wilder, Bunting, and others (Tr. 4252, 4280-81).

The administrative law judge then entered an order on July 10, 1974 providing, among other things, that "following the completion of the case-in-chief in support of the complaint, defense hearings shall be held for the purpose of determining respondents' assets available for restitution * * *." See also notice of hearing filed on Aug. 1, 1974.

However, on Aug. 21, 1974, in Orlando, Fla., defense counsel announced that, with the exception of Delaney, none of the respondents or other individuals previously listed would testify on the subject matter of respondents' assets (Tr. 4818-27). At that time, defense counsel made the following statement:

[27] Paragraph numbers refer to the findings of fact, supra.

> * * * [W]e recognize that since we were the ones that initiated having these hearings, if we don't come forward now, then that rests the matter on assets. We don't have another day to try to prove it. We recognize that, and I've explained it to the Respondents and they understand. And so, it's now or never. We understand that. (Tr. 4825-26; see also Tr. 4525-38 and Tr. 5062-65)

As to respondents' affirmative defenses, their brief summarizes them this way:

> There has been no substantial public harm done by these respondents since the filing of the FTC complaint and any public harm which may have [preceded] the instant complaint has been provided for [by] the class action stipulated settlement and the Chapter 11 proceedings (RB, p. 12).

However, this defense will not withstand scrutiny.

The fact that the record contains no evidence that these respondents have engaged since mid-1972 in any of the practices challenged by the complaint (RPF 1-6) does not negate the need for an order to cease and desist or for an order of restitution. It is well settled that discontinuance of an unlawful practice does not preclude the entry of an order against its resumption, particularly when, as here, the discontinuance was after issuance of the complaint. In any event, the burden was on respondents to show affirmative discontinuance, and this burden they have not met. Respondents have cited no record evidence in support of their claim that they discontinued the challenged practices about June 1972 or shortly thereafter, and the undersigned is aware of none.

For example, respondents state that "no distributorship has been sold by Koscot since mid-1972" (RPF 8), but the sole record citation (Delaney Tr. 880) fails to support this claim. Moreover, it was not until August 1974 that the referee in bankruptcy specifically prohibited Koscot from selling any franchises or distributorships (RB, Appendix II). As to the contention that there is no evidence that Turner Enterprises is even in existence (RPF 8; see also RPF 2), Turner Enterprises was a signatory to a stipulation of settlement in a class action suit (RB, Appendix I). And, although Turner resigned from Turner Enterprises in March 1972 (RPF 3; CX 292), he stayed on as a consultant. Moreover, Turner signed the stipulation as president of Turner Enterprises and also on behalf of Koscot.

Having established that violations occurred, complaint counsel is not required to show them continuing after the issuance of the complaint. Moreover, it is fairly apparent that any such discontinuance that may have occurred was not necessarily voluntary. Whatever the facts may be as to discontinuance, this record demonstrates the necessity for an order designed to prevent as fully as possible any likelihood that respondents will resume the activities complained of.

The collateral litigation that, according to respondents, obviates the need for a restitutionary order in this case is as follows:

1. Proceedings for an arrangement under Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy Act filed by Koscot on June 3, 1973, in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida (No. 73-179-Orl-P). See RXs 12 and 13.
2. A Stipulation of Settlement proffered on Oct. 7, 1974, in the consolidated class action proceeding Glenn W. Turner Enterprises Litigation, MDL Docket No. 109, in the United States District Court for Pennsylvania (No. Misc. 5670) (see Appendix I attached to respondents' brief).
3. A criminal proceeding against Koscot and others, pending in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida (Criminal No. 73-71), which resulted in a mistrial (jury unable to agree on a verdict) on May 30, 1974, and which is now scheduled for a new trial.

The reference to the criminal proceeding may be summarily dismissed as irrelevant to the issue of restitution.

As for the stipulation of settlement and the bankruptcy proceeding, both are still in a pending status and thus offer no assurance that they will achieve to any degree the purpose of the proposed restitution order.

Moreover, neither proceeding appears to satisfy the Commission's standards for omission of a restitution order in a case of this kind. In rejecting a pretrial offer of settlement that would have involved the entry of the notice order in the complaint but that would have precluded any provision for restitution, the Commission, in language still applicable to respondents' present arguments, stated:

> The proposed settlements in the pending litigation do not purport to require all of the respondents to disburse to their customers all funds retained by them as a result of alleged violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Until there is a clear showing that respondents have accomplished disbursement of all such funds, it is premature at this time to determine that no provision for restitution should be included in any Commission order. (82 F.T.C. 1464, 1466 (1973))

Additional language in that same opinion also effectively refutes respondents' present contentions. The Commission pointed out:

> The violation for which restitution in some instances is an appropriate corrective action occurs when the seller's retention of its customers' money or property is an unfair trade practice, in and of itself, in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. [citations omitted] If the private parties involved agree to an approved settlement, they will be bound by its terms, but this does not bar a restitution provision in a cease and > desist order by the Commission if one is issued. An effective remedy may require complete disbursement of such funds to the victims of the unlawful practices up to the amount of their actual payments, and the possibility that this may result in some parties receiving funds in addition to amounts they have received in settlement of their claims does not prevent such restitution. The public policy expressed in the Federal Trade Commission Act is, of course, paramount. (id., at 1466-67)

Thus, there "is no conflict between the Court litigation and the proceeding before the Commission. The Court action is to vindicate private individual rights; the Commission proceeding is to enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act." (id., at 1466).

So here, once the class action suit is disposed of the Commission will have an opportunity to determine whether such disposition would provide for "effective disgorgement" by the respondents of "all unlawfully retained monies" (Holiday Magic, supra, at 26 [p. 1048]).

As matters now stand, neither the class action suit nor the bankruptcy proceeding provides for complete disbursement. Moreover, neither proceeding appears to contemplate any definitive determination as to assets held by the respondents proposed to be covered by a restitution order. The proposal is for a maximum payment of $3 million to distributor-claimants (RX 17 A; RB, Appendix I, pp. 8-9). This amount is to be contrasted with some $44 million in enrollment fees unlawfully received and retained by respondents (p. 31, supra, n. 14a).

The pending plan of settlement in the bankruptcy proceeding does not make moot the question of restitution in this proceeding. First, the plan of arrangement may or may not be approved, and, second, the Commission's restitution claim may be excepted from discharge even if the plan of arrangement is confirmed.[28] Until these two questions are resolved, it cannot be said that the bankruptcy proceeding is a barrier to any order of restitution by the Commission.

Complaint counsel have advanced other arguments designed to refute respondents' contention, but these need not be explored at this time.

The principal question relating to restitution is whether there remain reachable funds in the hands of the respondents to whom the restitution order is proposed to be directed. Among other things, the Internal Revenue Service has tax liens of $5.7 million against Turner Enterprises and Koscot and $928,980 against Turner (RB p. 12, n. 2; Appendix I, p. 4). These, of course, are priority claims. Nevertheless, further inquiry appears to be appropriate before any determination is made as to the availability of funds for restitution.

[28] Acting on a motion by complaint counsel that was certified by the administrative law judge, the Commission, on Jan. 7, 1975, entered an order to its General Counsel to "take such action as is necessary and appropriate for the protection of the public interest in any restitutionary claim or any other claim for consumer redress which may arise" out of this proceeding. In entering the order, the Commission noted the report in complaint counsel's motion that respondent Koscot "is in bankruptcy proceedings wherein a settlement is pending which could foreclose any claim in restitution which might arise out of this action" and held that such a foreclosure "would be contrary to the public interest."

Respecting the restitution provisions of the order (Section V), the administrative law judge has adopted the proposals of complaint counsel, even though he has some reservations regarding the practicability of administering such proposals. However, he has not undertaken to tailor an alternative procedure for the following reasons: (1) the plan proposed by complaint counsel, as representatives of the Bureau of Consumer Protection, which presumably will be involved in enforcing the order, is entitled to due deference in what is almost a matter of first impression; and (2) the mechanics of the refund plan may be academic because (a) the order may be subject to review in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, a circumstance that led the Commission to withdraw the restitution order in Holiday Magic, supra, in view of that court's ruling that the Commission lacked power to order restitution, and because (b) the Commission may elect, in the light of such circumstance, or for other reasons, to avail itself of the provisions of the Magnuson-Moss Warranty-Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act, Pub. Law 93-637, approved Jan. 4, 1975, § 206(a)(b), 88 Stat. 2201-02, 15 U.S.C. § 57 b. Moreover, developments in collateral litigation described supra may inject factors requiring alteration of the refund plan.

In view of the somewhat nebulous status of restitution as applied to this proceeding, the undersigned gave consideration to omitting any detailed provisions with respect thereto while making findings and conclusions dealing with the subject matter. However, he concluded that, whatever deficiencies there may be in the present restitution provisions, they at least provide a basis for appeal by the respondents and for appropriate consideration by the Commission.

On the basis of the foregoing findings and conclusions, the following order is entered:

6. Misrepresenting the reasonably necessary and anticipated costs of doing business for prospective distributors, dealers, sales personnel, or franchisees.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION BY DIXON, Commissioner

Complaint in this matter was issued on May 24, 1972, charging respondents with numerous violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45) and Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 13(a)) in connection with their operation of a multilevel marketing program involving the sale of cosmetics and cosmetics distributorships. Hearings were held, not without interruption, before Administrative Law Judge Donald Moore, who issued his initial decision on Mar. 20, 1975. The law judge recommended entry of a lengthy order prohibiting numerous unfair and deceptive practices and requiring Koscot and individual respondents Turner, Wilder, and Bunting to make restitution to purchasers of distributorships.

Both sides have appealed. There appears to be little disagreement among them as to the form which the Commission's final order should take, although much disagreement as to the reasons for this result. Respondents have not disputed the findings of fact of the administrative law judge, except in conclusory terms, and we shall adopt them as those of the Commission. Respondents have also raised no objections to those parts of the order which enjoin future conduct,[1] reserving their attack for the requirement of restitution. Complaint counsel have suggested that the Commission withdraw order provisions relating to restitution, and reserve the option to consider use of the provisions of Section 19 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 57b) to obtain consumer redress at a later date. Complaint counsel also suggest certain minor modifications in the order, and urge the Commission to elaborate on the rationale of the administrative law judge in holding respondents' use of a multilevel pyramid type marketing plan to be inherently deceptive and unfair.

Background

Respondents operated a multilevel marketing plan which individuals might enter at one of several levels. At the lowest level, that of "beauty advisor," one could purchase cosmetics at a 40 percent discount for resale to consumers. "Supervisors" received a 55 percent discount and appointed and supplied beauty advisors, while "distributors" received a 65 percent discount and sold to those below them (I.D. 36).[2] The big money, however, derived not from the sale of cosmetics to consumers, but from the act of recruiting other participants into the marketing program. Distributors were required to pay Koscot an amount ranging up to $5000 for initial inventory and the right to recruit others. A distributor who recruited another would receive $2650 of the recruit's $5000 payment. Supervisors paid $2000 for their position, of which a distributor who recruited the supervisor received $700. If one supervisor recruited another, $500 of the $700 commission would go to the recruiting supervisor, and $200 to the distributor who had recruited the recruiting supervisor (I.D. 37). Variations on this scheme are set forth in the initial decision and incorporated findings (I.D. 38). In general, respondents' plan extracted large sums of money from individual participants by offering the promise that they could recoup these sums and more by inducing others to make similar payments (I.D. 40).

[1] In briefing the question of relief before the administrative law judge, respondents raised no objections to the non-restitutionary relief proposed by complaint counsel, which the law judge adopted. In their appeal brief before the Commission respondents indicated certain objections to the order language. At oral argument, however, counsel for respondents indicated that his reservations about the order language had been resolved (Transcript of Oral Argument, pp. 3-4, Oct. 2, 1975).

To some degree, and particularly at the lowest level, individuals were also induced to participate by the prospect of making money via the sale of cosmetics to consumers. The record indicates, however, that respondents' devotion to this facet of their business frequently fell short of what one would expect from an organization seriously committed to the retailing of cosmetics (I.D. 76-98). Implementation of the Koscot marketing plan was attended by a wide variety of specific misrepresentations and high pressure sales tactics, chronicled by the law judge at I.D. 54-119. The record also reveals a staggering human toll—money borrowed, jobs quit, homes mortgaged, and even personal bankruptcy for some who dared to be great (Tr. 2249, 2343, 2345-46, 2460, 2491, 2483-84, 2491, 2564, 2737, 2769, 3027-28, 3286-87, 3312, 3352-53, 3373, 3480-81, 3485, 3503-04, 3555-57, 3571, 3626-27, 3668-69, 3754-55, 3759-60, 3872, 3893, 3896, 4065).

Illegality of Entrepreneurial Chain Marketing System

Awash amidst evidence of deception and overreaching, the administrative law judge had no difficulty concluding that respondents' practices violated Section 5. He based his conclusions on the actual deception which was proven to have occurred, and on the inherent capacity of respondents' multilevel marketing plan to deceive (I.D. p. 51 [p. 1157, herein]). On appeal, complaint counsel urge that the Commission enlarge the reasoning upon which the administrative law judge based his finding that respondents' plan was inherently unlawful. Complaint counsel proposed adoption of an alternative finding of law to the effect that:

> Respondents' marketing plan contemplates upon the payment of consideration, participants would thereby acquire the right to engage in two income-producing activities, one of which contemplated the sale of similar rights to others for which substantial compensation would be paid, while the other contemplated the sale of products or services. Since implicit in the holding out of such rights is the representation that substantial rewards would be gained therefrom, and since the operation of such plan due to its very structure precludes the realization of such rewards to most of those who invest therein, such plan is inherently deceptive. Furthermore, such plan is contrary to established public policy in that it is generally considered to be unfair and unlawful and is by its very nature immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, and exploitative. Therefore, such plan was and is inherently unfair and the operation of the Koscot marketing plan by respondents, having caused substantial injury to the participants therein as well as to other members of the public, constitutes an unfair and deceptive act and practice and an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The Commission has previously condemned so-called "entrepreneurial chains" as possessing an intolerable capacity to mislead. Holiday Magic, Inc., Docket No. 8834, slip op. pp. 11-14 [84 F.T.C. 748 at pp. 1036-1039] (Oct. 15, 1974); Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc., Docket No. 8872, slip op. pp. 8-12 [84 F.T.C. 95, at pp. 145-149] (July 23, 1974), rev'd in part 518 F.2d 33(2d Cir. 1975). Such schemes are characterized by the payment by participants of money to the company in return for which they receive (1) the right to sell a product and (2) the right to receive in return for recruiting other participants into the program rewards which are unrelated to sale of the product to ultimate users. In general such recruitment is facilitated by promising all participants the same "lucrative" rights to recruit.

As is apparent, the presence of this second element, recruitment with rewards unrelated to product sales, is nothing more than an elaborate chain letter device in which individuals who pay a valuable consideration with the expectation of recouping it to some degree via recruitment are bound to be disappointed. Cf. Twentieth Century Co. v. Quilling, 130 Wis. 318, 110 N.W. 173, 176 (1907). Indeed, even where rewards are based upon sales to consumers, a scheme which represents indiscriminately to all comers that they can recoup their investments by virtue of the product sales of their recruits must end up disappointing those at the bottom who can find no recruits capable of making retail sales.[3]

Complaint counsel argue, in a keen analysis, that the right to sell product in an entrepreneurial chain is also likely to prove worthless for many participants, by virtue of the very nature of the plan as opposed to any particular dishonest machinations of its perpetrators. That is so, argue counsel, because the mere presence of a lucrative right to sell franchises will encourage both a company and its distributors to pursue that side of the business, to the neglect or exclusion of retail selling. The short-term result may be high recruiting profits for the company and select distributors, but the ultimate outcome will be neglect of market development, earnings misrepresentations, and insufficient sales for the insupportably large number of distributors whose recruitment the system encourages. Certainly the facts of this case and of Holiday Magic, supra, as well as expert testimony in the record (Tr. 1195 ff 1691 ff), bear out complaint counsel's contentions. At the very least we would conclude that a company which offers its distributors substantial rewards for recruiting other distributors, and charges them substantial amounts for this right, creates overwhelming barriers to the development of a sound retail distribution network and resultant meaningful retail sales opportunities for participants.

[3] The presence of a quota for distributors is not likely to eliminate the inherently deceptive nature of an

What compels the categorical condemnation of entrepreneurial chains under Section 5 is, however, the inevitably deceptive representation (conveyed by their mere existence) that any individual can recoup his or her investment by means of inducing others to invest. That these schemes so often do not allow recovery of investments by means of retail sales either merely points up that there is very little positive value to be lost by not allowing such schemes to get started in the first place.

A discussion of "inherent" illegality and capacity to deceive may seem pointless given the more than 4000 pages of transcript detailing the actual deception and injury in which the Koscot plan resulted. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is regrettably clear that responsible authorities, including this Commission, have acted far too slowly to protect consumers from the manipulations of respondents and others like them. As this is written the corporate respondent, Koscot, is in Chapter XI reorganization proceedings, while the individual respondents plead poverty. The administrative law judge estimated that $44 million was taken from consumers (I.D. p. 59 [p. 1163, herein]), and no more than a fraction of that is presently accounted for. Whether entrepreneurial chain, unless realistic quotas are imposed by market area rather than by arbitrary geographical unit. In this case, for example, it appears that while statewide quotas were announced and occasionally enforced, this did not prevent saturation of local markets within States (with most of the State's quota being exhausted within an area too small to accommodate so many distributors). In addition, there are strong disincentives for recruiters to disclose honestly the existence of a quota and the extent to which it is being approached, since this will alert prospective recruits to the imminent disappearance of further opportunities for profiting by recruitment and render them less likely to participate.

more than a small fraction of the consumer loss will ever be recovered is open to serious doubt. These particular individual respondents may not, under the watchful eyes of federal authorities, repeat their misdeeds, but once has clearly been too much.

We think that failure to act more promptly can be traced to the previous inability of relevant authorities to obtain summary relief against the practices involved. The necessity to prove that a marketing plan, manifestly deceptive on its face, has in fact resulted in injury to numerous consumers, is a lengthy process. Only where the law condemns the mere institution of such a plan, without the necessity to demonstrate its consequences, is meaningful relief likely to be obtained. In the years since Koscot's heyday, many States have enacted laws which categorically proscribe entrepreneurial chain methods of selling. Similarly, the Commission has held that the Federal Trade Commission Act forbids such tactics, and has announced that it will henceforth not hesitate to seek recently-authorized injunctive relief should it seem warranted, Holiday Magic, Inc., supra, page 14 [84 F.T.C. 748, at 1038]. The viability of a Federal remedy, however, will depend, if not upon congressional enactment, then upon the willingness of courts to recognize the serious potential hazards of entrepreneurial chains and to permit summary excision of their inherently deceptive elements, without the time-consuming necessity to show occurrence of the very injury which justice should prevent. To require too large an evidentiary burden to condemn these schemes can only ensure that future generations of self-made commercial messiahs will dare to be great and dare anyone to stop them.

Restitution and Consumer Redress

Both sides have recommended that the Commission delete those portions of the administrative law judge's order requiring respondents to make restitution. Counsel for respondents argues that the Commission lacks authority to include a provision requiring restitution in an order to cease and desist. Complaint counsel argue that while the Commission does have such authority, it should rely instead upon its power to obtain redress for consumers pursuant to §206 of the Magnuson-Moss-Warranty—Federal Trade Commission Improvements Act of 1975 (adding Section 19 of the Federal Trade Commission Act).

We agree with complaint counsel that under the circumstances of this case any further efforts by the Commission to obtain compensation for consumers should be made pursuant to the provisions of Section 19 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. We have no doubt that the statutory prerequisites for consumer redress have been made out here. Respondents were apprised in the notice order of the complaint that recompense for consumers would be sought. And succeeding adjudication has revealed that practices which respondents knew or should have known to be fraudulent or dishonest led to consumers' loss of substantial amounts of money.

As matters now stand, the respondent Koscot is in an arrangement proceeding, pursuant to Chapter XI of the Bankruptcy Act. Whether any further restitutionary action by the Commission as to Koscot will be possible or desirable remains in doubt. Vacation of the administrative law judge's proposed order regarding restitution will remove that as a source of contention in the arrangement proceedings. The Commission's action is, however, taken without prejudice to the institution of such action against corporate respondents as may in the future seem appropriate pursuant to Section 19 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

With respect to individual respondents Turner, Wilder, and Bunting, there have been intimations from their counsel at various points in these proceedings that pursuit of restitution is a futile gesture because they are in dire financial straits. Respondents have, however, previously refused to provide a verified accounting of their assets, claiming that to do so would abridge their Fifth Amendment rights because of simultaneously pending criminal proceedings. It appears, however, that these proceedings have now ended as to respondents. Therefore, upon the conclusion of this adjudication, the Commission will endeavor to ascertain the financial status of these individuals in order to determine whether Section 19 proceedings as to them would serve a purpose. We can hardly quarrel with respondents' claim that the Commission should not beat a dead horse, but in view of the enormity of the abuses in this case, the Commission has a solemn duty to assure itself that the analogy is a valid one.

Miscellaneous

Complaint counsel urge that Paragraph I(2) of the law judge's proposed order be reformulated so as to prevent in all cases the use of bounty-seeking "headhunters," individuals who would receive compensation based upon the number of others they could induce to participate in respondents' sales program. As now formulated, the law judge's order would permit respondents to enlist certain individuals as headhunters, provided they were not required to pay a valuable consideration for that right. The revised order would still permit payment of compensation to headhunters provided it was based upon actually consummated retail sales by recruits.

Respondents have not objected to this change and we believe it is warranted under the circumstances. As complaint counsel point out, while the order prevents respondents from requiring an initial payment for participation in a plan, it does not prevent participants from making initial inventory purchases if they so desire. Thus there remain incentives for indiscriminate recruitment by headhunters, and incentives for headhunters in any program to ignore other requirements of the order designed to ensure that recruitment is undertaken honestly. By requiring that compensation for recruitment be based in all cases upon retail sales by those recruited, the order provides a readily monitored means to ensure that recruitment of distributors is based on market demand, which is the goal of any legitimate business enterprise.[4]

Complaint counsel have also urged the Commission to supplement the administrative law judge's conclusions of law with respect to the Robinson-Patman charges in the complaint. Counsel's proposals are hereby adopted.[5]

On its own motion the Commission has broadened those portions of the order relating to Section 5 violations to proscribe covered conduct "affecting" commerce, inasmuch as the Commission's authority has been broadened in that respect. We have placed the Robinson-Patman prohibitions of the law judge's order in a separate section (V) applicable only to activities "in commerce." Provisions of the law judge's Section V concerning restitution have been deleted, along with corresponding provisions in the definitions section and compliance paragraph (IX). Finally the Commission has modified the wording of paragraph I(1) to conform to the language used in Holiday Magic.

An appropriate order is appended.

FINAL ORDER

ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR EXTRAORDINARY REVIEW AND APPLICATION FOR STAY OF TIME TO ANSWER

Respondents have petitioned for "extraordinary review" of the administrative law judge's Oct. 24, 1975, order denying respondents' motion for a more definite statement of those allegations in the complaint with respect to which the Commission may subsequently bring an action for consumer redress pursuant to Section 19 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Following denial of the motion for a more definite statement, respondents filed an application for a determination by the administrative law judge allowing an interlocutory appeal, which the law judge denied on Nov. 3, 1975.

We have considered respondents' petition and have found nothing therein which would warrant departing from the procedural requirements of Section 3.23 of the Commission's Rules of Practice or directing a certification of the matter pursuant to Section 3.22(a). Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid petition for extraordinary review be, and it hereby is, denied.

It is further ordered, That respondents' application for a stay of the time to answer the complaint be, and it hereby is, denied.

ORDER EXTENDING TIME FOR COMPLIANCE WITH COMMISSION ORDER

On Oct. 6, 1975, respondent Harbor Banana Distributors, Inc., (hereinafter "Harbor") filed with the Secretary of the Commission a document entitled: "Harbor's Petition To Reopen the Order of the Federal Trade Commission Served on January 28, 1975." This petition sought a six-month extension of time from July 28, 1975, to Jan. 28, 1976, within which to comply with the order of the Commission that Harbor divest the acquired assets of Charles C. McCann Co. and Tradewinds Produce, Inc. Harbor was required to divest the subject assets by July 28, 1975, pursuant to Paragraph II of the Commission's modified order, which issued on Jan. 3, 1975 [85 F.T.C. 7].

A petition for reopening and modification pursuant to Section 3.72(b)(2) of the Commission's rules is not an appropriate procedure to apply to the Commission for an extension of time within which to comply with a Commission order. Rather, respondent should have sought an extension of time pursuant to Section 4.3(b), and should have made application prior to June 28, 1975, when the time previously granted expired. The Commission notes, however, that respondent's application for an extension of time is supported by a substantial showing of good faith efforts to comply with the Commission's order and is endorsed by the Bureau of Competition. In these circumstances, the Commission has determined to grant the requested extension. Therefore,

It is ordered, That respondent, Harbor Banana Distributors, Inc., may have until Jan. 28, 1976, to comply with the order of the Commission entered on Jan. 3, 1975, requiring that said respondent divest the acquired assets of Charles C. McCann Co. and Tradewinds Produce, Inc., and other relief.

ORDER REOPENING AND MODIFYING ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

Respondent, by letter dated Sept. 12, 1975, which will be treated as a petition to reopen this proceeding, has requested that the requirement that it file compliance reports at 30-day intervals for Paragraphs II E and II F, contained in the order to cease and desist issued Mar. 26, 1973 [82 F.T.C. 1097], be modified so as to require semiannual reports on Dec. 15, 1975, and on June 15, 1976, and each calendar year thereafter.

ORDER DENYING APPLICATION BY COMPLAINT COUNSEL FOR REVIEW OF THE SUBSTITUTE ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE'S ORDERS AND DISMISSING PETITION FOR STAY

This matter is before the Commission upon an uncertified application for review.

On Oct. 22, 1975, Administrative Law Judge Joseph P. Dufresne[1] denied complaint counsel's motion that he reconsider and amend his order of Oct. 14, 1975, setting a schedule for pretrial briefing and trial in this matter. The law judge's order, setting Jan. 26, 1976 as the date for the commencement of hearings on complaint counsel's case, was issued pursuant to the Commission's orders of Sept. 16, 1975, and Sept. 23, 1975, requiring that the law judge, after consultation with the parties, promptly establish a schedule for trial and certify to the Commission a status report on this matter.

The law judge has also declined to make a determination that his rulings are appropriate for interlocutory review under Section 3.23(b) of the rules of practice.

Complaint counsel have now applied for review of the law judge's orders of Oct. 14, 1975, and Oct. 22, 1975. They contend that the judge's failure to determine that this matter is appropriate for review under Section 3.23(b) was a clear abuse of discretion and that the rulings setting a briefing and trial schedule were likewise abuses of discretion.

Complaint counsel ask that the scheduling of this matter be "returned to the discretion of Judge Hinkes to set a schedule consistent with the record, the needs of the parties, and the interests of the public in a proper resolution of this important matter. If the Commission decides that it will itself set the schedule, complaint counsel recommend a trial date of Apr. 5, 1976, as originally proposed by the substitute judge and accepted by all parties."

* For additional appearances see p. 650, herein.

[1] Judge Dufresne was designated to substitute for Harry R. Hinkes, the law judge to whom this matter was assigned, who was required to be absent from the Commission for personal reasons.

We cannot conclude, from the record before us, that Judge Dufresne abused his discretion in making any of the determinations challenged by complaint counsel. However, the law judge retains discretion to modify the trial schedule for good cause. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid application for review be, and it hereby is, denied;

It is further ordered, That the petition by complaint counsel for stay of any action by the Commission on Judge Dufresne's report and orders of Oct. 14, 1975, be, and it hereby is, dismissed as moot.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Lustine Chevrolet, Inc., a corporation, and Phillip Lustine and Burton Lustine, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Lustine Chevrolet, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business located at 5710 Baltimore Ave., in Hyattsville, Md.

Respondents Phillip Lustine and Burton Lustine are individuals and officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including those hereinafter set forth. Their business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

The respondents cooperate and act together in carrying out the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, and sale to the public of new and used motor vehicles and in the servicing and repair thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, their said motor vehicles to be sold to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, including the State of Maryland, and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said motor vehicles in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Also in the course and conduct of their business, respondents have caused, and now cause, customers' notes, contracts, payments, checks, credit reports, title registrations, correspondence and other documents relating to payment of the purchase price for respondents' motor vehicles to be transmitted by various means, including but not limited to, the United States mails, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their motor vehicles, the respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation, and by other means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. Typical and illustrative of the statements and representations in said advertisements, published in November of 1970, disseminated as aforesaid, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

SAVE $400 to $1200 ON EVERY CAR IN OUR INVENTORY OF UNSOLD '70 MODELS!

SPECIAL PURCHASE LAST OF THE 5-YEAR WARRANTY CARS AT 400 BELOW ORIGINAL COST

1970 MALIBU 2-DOOR HARDTOP AIR COND. AUTO. PWR. ST. & DISC. BR., RADIO, WWT, WHEEL COVERS, TINTED GLASS, VINYL TOP, GREEN AMERICA'S LARGEST SPECIAL PURCHASE DEALER * * *.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, the respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the motor vehicles described or referred to in said advertisements are new;

2. That Lustine Chevrolet, Inc. is America's largest special purchase dealer.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The motor vehicles described or referred to in said advertisements, in many instances, are not new. To the contrary, they have been driven substantially in excess of the limited use necessary in moving or road testing a new vehicle prior to its delivery to the ultimate purchaser.

2. Lustine Chevrolet, Inc. is not America's largest special purchase dealer.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five, hereof, were, and are, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their said motor vehicles, respondents, directly or through their representatives and employees, have engaged in the deceptive act and practice of representing to customers that lease buy-back motor vehicles purchased from various metropolitan Washington, D.C. area motor vehicle leasing operations were demonstrator motor vehicles; by such representations, respondents misled and deceived purchasers as to the actual prior use of said lease buy-back motor vehicles.

Therefore, respondents' statements and representations, and their failure to reveal in their advertisements and during their sales representations, the material facts as to the nature and extent of such previous use of said motor vehicles, are unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their aforesaid business, respondents have engaged in the following acts and practices in connection with the sale of their said motor vehicles:

1. A $35 dealer handling and service charge is added to the price of respondents' used motor vehicles, the first indication that such a charge is being made, in many instances, occurs at the time the buyer receives a copy of the sales invoice and the conditional sales contract. The purchaser, in many said instances, believes that the motor vehicle will be delivered in satisfactory condition and appearance without the imposition of additional charges. The dealer handling and service charge becomes an undisclosed cost that should have been made known prior to the consummation of the sale.

2. Respondents have repaired or repainted, or have caused to be repaired or repainted, damaged cars, said repairs or repainting hide damage that may adversely affect a vehicle's performance and life expectancy. Respondents have failed to disclose to prospective purchasers and purchasers of respondents' motor vehicles that said damage has been hidden by repairs or repainting.

Therefore, respondents' failure to disclose such material facts, prior to the time of sale was, and is, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and are now, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale, service and repair of new and used motor vehicles of the same general kind and nature as that sold, serviced and repaired by respondents.

PAR. 10. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and the failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' motor vehicles and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief. Respondents' aforesaid acts and practices unfairly cause the purchasing public to assume debts and obligations and to make payments of money which they might otherwise not have incurred.

PAR. 11. The acts and practices of the respondents, as herein alleged, were, and are, all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having issued a complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereof with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The Commission having duly determined upon motion submitted by complaint counsel and respondents that, in the circumstances presented, the public interest would be served by a withdrawal of the matter from adjudication for the purpose of negotiating a settlement by the entry of a consent order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in the complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedures described in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Lustine Chevrolet, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business located at 5710 Baltimore Ave., Hyattsville, Md.

Respondents Phillip Lustine and Burton Lustine are officers of said corporation. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and their principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Lustine Chevrolet, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns and its officers, and Phillip Lustine and Burton Lustine, individually and as officers of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution, service and repair of new and used motor vehicles, or any other products or services, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, do forthwith cease and desist from:

2. Offering for sale or selling any vehicles of the current or previous model year, which has been used in any manner, other than the limited use referred to in Paragraph 1., above, without orally disclosing, prior to any sales presentation, the nature and extent of such previous use of said vehicle.

3. Advertising any vehicle of the current or the previous model year which has been used in any manner, other than the limited use referred to in Paragraph 1., above, without clearly and conspicuously disclosing in any and all advertising thereof the nature of such previous use of said vehicle.

4. Displaying, offering for sale or selling any vehicle of the current or the previous model year which has been used in any manner, other than the limited use referred to in Paragraph 1., above, without clearly and conspicuously disclosing by decal or sticker affixed to the inside of the side window containing the manufacturer's suggested retail price or "Monroney sticker," or if space is not available thereon, in close proximity thereto, so as to be clearly visible, the nature of such previous use of said vehicle. Said decal or sticker shall also contain the following statement: "FOR EXACT MILEAGE, SEE ODOMETER."

5. Offering for sale or selling any motor vehicle of the current or the previous model year which has been used and which respondents have reason to believe has been damaged to the extent that it may adversely affect said motor vehicle's performance and life expectancy and the repair and repainting of said motor vehicle may hide said damage, without:

(a) Disclosing, both orally and in writing, the manner in which the motor vehicle has been damaged and the nature of the damage sustained by the vehicle; and

(b) clearly and conspicuously disclosing by decal or sticker attached thereto, as required by Paragraph 4., above, that the motor vehicle has been damaged.

6. Misrepresenting, orally or in writing, directly or by implication, the nature or extent of previous use or condition of any vehicle displayed, offered for sale or sold.

7. Failing to disclose, both orally and in writing, prior to the signing of the completed retail order for a used motor vehicle, and in any and all advertising of such vehicles, the precise amount of handling and service charges which will be added to the cost of respondents' used motor vehicles.

8. Representing, orally or in writing, directly or by implication, that respondent Lustine Chevrolet, Inc. is America's largest special purchase dealer, or using words of similar import, unless it does occupy such purchasing position, at the time aforesaid representation is made; misrepresenting, in any manner, the size, status, sales or purchasing position of respondents' dealership.

It is further ordered:

(a) That respondents shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions;

(b) That respondents deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel engaged in the offering for sale, or sale, of any motor vehicle, and in the consummation of any extension of consumer credit or in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising, and that respondents secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person;

(c) That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order;

(d) That respondents post in a prominent place in each salesroom or other area wherein respondents sell motor vehicles or other products or services, a copy of this cease and desist order, with the notice that any customer or prospective customer may receive a copy on demand;

(e) That the individual respondents named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of their present business or employment and of their affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondents' current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which they are engaged as well as a description of their duties and responsibilities; and

(f) That the respondents herein shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

1. National Talent Associates, Inc. has received information that a person may possess the necessary personal or physical characteristics or other qualifications suitable for success in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries.

3. Respondents, when requested, provide persons who contact them with the source from which the information referred to in National Talent Associates' sales solicitation letters was obtained or the nature of such information.

5. National Talent Associates' salesmen, agents or representatives are qualified by training or experience to select and judge the suitability of persons as models, actors, actresses or entertainers in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries.

6. Persons who have been contacted by National Talent Associates, Inc. have been specially selected on the basis that they may have the necessary personal or physical characteristics or other qualifications suitable for success in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries.

7. A major portion of National Talent Associates' income is derived from its personal management contracts and its ability to place persons under contract with the leading advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment agencies.

8. Persons are selected and offered contracts by National Talent Associates, Inc. solely on the basis that they may possess the personal or physical characteristics or other qualifications suitable for success in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries.

9. A person's chances for selection by Monica Stuart or the William Schuller Agency, Inc. will be greatly increased by entering into a contract with National Talent Associates, Inc.

10. Access to Monica Stuart or to the William Schuller Agency, Inc. is available solely to persons who contract with National Talent Associates, Inc.

11. Monica Stuart or the William Schuller Agency, Inc. review photographs of only those persons who have contracted with National Talent Associates, Inc.

12. National Talent Associates, Inc. arranges for professional photographs to be taken of each person placed under its contract by an independent photographic studio.

13. Persons who contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. receive one black and white 8 x 10 inch photograph of their choice, annually for a five-year period, without any obligation to purchase additional photographs at an added cost.

14. Natural color photographs of persons who contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. are submitted annually, for a five-year period, to Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc. for her consideration and review.

15. National Talent Associates, Inc. photographs other persons in a family, in addition to the person whose name appears on its contract, solely for the purpose of submitting said photographs to Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc. for her evaluation of their potential for the commercial advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment industries.

16. The remuneration received by Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc., in connection with her consideration and review of photographs submitted to her by National Talent Associates, Inc., is derived solely from a percentage of the earnings of persons selected by her and placed under contract by the William Schuller Agency, Inc.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. In the vast majority of instances, National Talent Associates, Inc. has not received information that a person may possess the necessary personal or physical characteristics or other qualifications suitable for success in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries. In the vast majority of instances, respondents' information consists solely of a person's birth date, the name and address of the person's parents, or other similar information obtained from commercial mailing lists, newspaper birth announcements, hospital birth records, or other sources.

2. Referrals from past purchasers of National Talent Associates' photographs and services are not a significant source of information about persons who may possess the necessary personal or physical characteristics or other qualifications suitable for success in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries. Any such referrals from past purchasers are rare and, when made, are actively solicited by representatives of respondent National Talent Associates, Inc.

3. Respondents, when requested, do not provide persons who contact them with the source from which the information referred to in National Talent Associates' sales solicitation letters was obtained or the nature of such information. Persons who request the source from which information about them was obtained, or the nature of such information, are routinely told that such information is confidential and cannot be divulged.

4. National Talent Associates, Inc. does not have the business experience, knowledge or expertise needed to select the most qualified persons to be employed as models, actors, actresses or entertainers in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries. Approximately 98 percent to 99 percent, (i.e., 98 to 99) out of 100 persons, selected and placed under contract by National Talent Associates, Inc., are thereafter rejected by Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc. and are not signed to any agency contract.

5. National Talent Associates' salesmen, agents or representatives are not qualified by training or experience to select and judge the suitability of persons as models, actors, actresses or entertainers in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries. Such salesmen, agents or representatives are recruited from all walks of life and are not experienced, trained or qualified talent scouts in the selection of models, actors, actresses or entertainers but are sales employees who earn a commission for each contract they sell.

6. Persons who have been contacted by National Talent Associates, Inc. have not been specially selected on the basis that they may have the necessary personal or physical characteristics or other qualifications suitable for success in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries. Persons who are contacted by National Talent Associates, Inc. have been arbitrarily selected from commercial mailing lists, newspaper birth announcements, hospital birth records or from other similar sources and have not been observed by any talent scout, theatrical agency, advertising or modeling agency. The vast majority of persons placed under contracts by National Talent Associates, Inc. have little or no chance for obtaining paid employment as models, actors, actresses or entertainers in the commercial advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment industries.

7. A major portion of National Talent Associates' income is not derived from its personal management contracts and its ability to place persons under contract with the leading advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment agencies. Its income is derived primarily from the monies it receives from persons with whom contracts are signed as set forth under Paragraph Four of the complaint.

8. Persons are not selected and offered contracts by National Talent Associates, Inc. only on the basis that they may possess the personal or physical characteristics or other qualifications suitable for success in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries. The ability and willingness of parents to pay the initial contract fee plus a photographer's service charge each year for the five-year period, to National Talent Associates, Inc., as set forth on their standard contract form, appearing under Paragraph Four of this complaint, is a crucial and central element in the acceptance of any person.

9. A person's chances for selection by Monica Stuart or the William Schuller Agency, Inc. will not be greatly increased by entering into a contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. Approximately 98 percent to 99 percent (i.e., 98 to 99) out of 100 persons whose photographs are submitted to Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc. by National Talent Associates, Inc., after payment of monies to National Talent Associates, Inc. under the terms of its contract, are rejected by Miss Stuart by means of a standard form letter of rejection in which no specified reason for such rejection is provided.

10. Access to Monica Stuart or to the William Schuller Agency, Inc.

is not available solely to persons who contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. Any person may gain access to Monica Stuart or to the William Schuller Agency, Inc., through other sources.

11. Monica Stuart or the William Schuller Agency, Inc. do not review photographs of only those persons who have contracted with National Talent Associates, Inc. Any person may mail either a snapshot or a professional portrait to Monica Stuart or to the William Schuller Agency, Inc. for her or their consideration and evaluation of the person's potential for the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries without entering into a contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. for this purpose.

12. National Talent Associates, Inc. does not arrange for professional photographs to be taken of each person placed under its contract by an independent photographic studio. Individual respondents Sanford Storm and Jerome P. Ashfield each own approximately a one-third interest in Baratta Photo Studios to which persons are routinely sent by National Talent Associates, Inc. to have their photographs taken.

13. Persons who contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. do not receive one black and white 8 x 10 inch photograph of their choice, annually for a five-year period, without any obligation to purchase additional photographs at an added cost. Persons are required to travel to Baratta Photo Studios to select the 8 x 10 inch black and white photograph referred to on National Talent Associates' contract, or are solicited at their homes by salesmen from Baratta Photo Studios whose main interest is in selling additional photographs to persons at an added cost.

14. Natural color photographs of persons who contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. are not submitted annually, for a five-year period, to Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc. for her consideration and review.

15. National Talent Associates, Inc. does not photograph other persons in a family, in addition to the person whose name appears on its contract, solely for the purpose of submitting said photographs to Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc. for her evaluation of their potential for the commercial advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment industries.

16. The remuneration received by Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc., in connection with her consideration and review of photographs submitted to her by National Talent Associates, Inc., is not derived solely from a percentage of the earnings of persons selected by her and placed under contract by the William Schuller Agency, Inc. Miss Stuart receives a monetary fee from National Talent Associates, Inc. for each series of photographs she reviews prior to the signing of any contract with the William Schuller Agency, Inc.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents and their representatives have made oral representations for the purpose of inducing persons to enter into written contracts with them. Such oral representations are made on the telephone to persons responding to respondents' initial sales solicitation letter and in personal interviews conducted by respondents' salesmen and representatives in the homes of prospective purchasers. Through such oral statements and representations, made by respondents or their representatives, agents or salesmen, respondents have, directly or indirectly, stated or implied that:

1. Persons placed under contract by National Talent Associates, Inc. can reasonably anticipate significant or substantial earnings from paid employment in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries as models, actors, actresses or entertainers.

2. In a significant number of instances, money sufficient to provide for a college education has been earned by persons placed under contract by National Talent Associates, Inc.

3. The chances or opportunities of persons for selection by Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, or of being placed under contract by said agency, are appreciably enhanced by their placement under a contract by National Talent Associates, Inc.

4. A person's chances for selection as a model, actor, actress or entertainer in the commercial advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment industries, are greatly enhanced because he or she is Black, Oriental, has red hair, freckles, or because of his or her size, age, or some other specific racial or personal characteristic.

5. Respondents have received confidential information about the person or persons being interviewed by representatives of National Talent Associates, Inc. which cannot be divulged.

6. Access to Monica Stuart or to the William Schuller Agency, Inc. can be obtained only by entering into a contract with National Talent Associates, Inc.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact:

1. Persons placed under contract by National Talent Associates, Inc. cannot reasonably anticipate significant or substantial earnings from paid employment in the commercial advertising, talent, modeling or entertainment industries, as models, actors, actresses or entertainers. In the vast majority of instances, persons placed under contract by National Talent Associates, Inc. are thereafter rejected as unsuitable for employment as models, actors, actresses or entertainers of Monica

Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, and thus have no opportunity of earning any money.

2. In no significant number of instances has money sufficient to provide for a college education been earned by persons placed under contract by National Talent Associates, Inc. Few if any, persons discovered and placed under a contract by National Talent Associates, Inc. have earned money sufficient to provide for a college education.

3. The chances or opportunities of persons for selection by Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, or of being placed under contract by said agency, are not appreciably enhanced by their placement under a contract by National Talent Associates, Inc. In the vast majority of instances, persons placed under a contract by National Talent Associates, Inc. are not offered a contract by either Monica Stuart or by the William Schuller Agency, Inc.

4. A person's chances for selection as a model, actor, actress or entertainer in the commercial advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment industries are not greatly enhanced because he or she is Black, Oriental, has red hair, freckles or because of his or her size, age or some other specific racial or personal characteristic. The importance of such racial or personal characteristics are exaggerated by representatives, agents or salesmen of National Talent Associates, Inc. in an effort to obtain the signatures of persons on its contract and collect the contract fee.

5. In the vast majority of instances, respondents have not received confidential information about the person or persons being interviewed by representatives of National Talent Associates, Inc. which cannot be divulged.

6. Access to Monica Stuart or to the William Schuller Agency, Inc. can be obtained, not only by entering into a contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. Such access is available to persons through other sources.

PAR. 9. In the further course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, the representatives, agents or salesmen of National Talent Associates, Inc., during their sales solicitations at the homes of potential purchasers, have made and are now making numerous false, misleading and deceptive statements concerning the qualifications of persons being interviewed and their chances for success as models, actors, actresses or entertainers in the commercial advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment industries, in an effort to induce such persons to enter into contracts with National Talent Associates, Inc.

During the course of said solicitations, said representatives, agents or salesmen insist that persons being interviewed sign National Talent Associates' contract, set forth herein under Paragraph Four, at the time of the solicitation and write a check in payment therefor, or else forfeit their opportunity for consideration and possible selection by Monica Stuart of the William Schuller Agency, Inc.

No time is permitted for thought, consideration, evaluation or discussion of said contract and, in numerous instances, persons signing said contract under such sales pressure have changed their minds immediately after the termination of said visit or on the following day. Respondents, in numerous such instances, have failed or refused to cancel the contract or refund the money.

Such sales techniques, based upon false, misleading, deceptive, unethical, oppressive and exploitative high pressure tactics, take advantage of the desire of persons to achieve personal and financial success, cause substantial injury to consumers and constituted, and now constitute, unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 10. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents have failed to disclose to potential purchasers of their photographs or services the following material facts:

a) That any person may submit his or her photograph directly to Monica Stuart, or to any other consultant of the William Schuller Agency, Inc., without entering into any contract or agreement with National Talent Associates, Inc.

b) That, in addition to the agency fee of 10 percent of the client's earnings paid to the William Schuller Agency, Inc., as stated on National Talent Associates' standard contract form, set forth herein under Paragraph Four, Monica Stuart personally receives an additional monetary fee from National Talent Associate, Inc.

c) That the principals of National Talent Associates, Inc. own a financial interest in the photographic studios to which persons are routinely referred by respondents to have their photographs taken.

d) The recent number and percentage of persons under contract to National Talent Associates, Inc. who were able to obtain contracts with the William Schuller Agency, Inc. and paid employment in the commercial advertising, modeling, talent or entertainment industries.

e) The gross annual earnings from employment as a model, actor, actress or entertainer of all persons placed under the contract set forth in Paragraph Four by respondent National Talent Associates, Inc.

Knowledge of such facts would be of extreme importance to potential purchasers in their evaluation of the nature and value of the photographs or services offered by respondent National Talent Associates, Inc. under its contract. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose material facts, which if known to potential purchasers, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to enter into a contract to purchase said photographs or services. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive, unethical, oppressive and exploitative, cause substantial injury to consumers, and constituted and now constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 11. Respondents have cooperated and acted together in the false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices set forth under Paragraphs Four through Ten of this complaint. Such joint or concerted activities constitute a scheme designed to obtain the signatures of persons to a contract with National Talent Associates, Inc. for the mutual financial benefit of the respondents.

The use by respondents separately or collectively, whether directly or indirectly, or by permission or acquiescence, of the false, misleading, deceptive or unfair sales solicitation methods, both written and oral, and their failure to disclose relevant and material facts to potential purchasers of their photographs or services, has had, and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such written and oral statements and representations were and are true and complete, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' photographs or services.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents as herein alleged are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

ORDER DENYING INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL

This matter is before us upon complaint counsel's application under Section 3.23(a)(1) of the rules of practice for review of an order by the administrative law judge which requires that certain interview reports be disclosed to respondents as "Jencks statements."

Complaint counsel do not argue on this appeal that the interview reports are not, in fact, "Jencks statements" but, instead, contend that the law judge made no finding that the materials to be disclosed were "substantially verbatim" accounts of oral statements made by prospective witnesses. See L.G. Balfour Co., 69 F.T.C. 1118, 1123 (1966).

The Commission has ruled that respondents are "entitled to inspect * * * any written report or portions thereof which reflect in substantially verbatim form any oral statement given by the witness to [the] attorney or investigator but any summaries of such statements made by the attorney or investigator should not be produced." Inter-State Builders, Inc., 69 F.T.C. 1152, 1165 (1966).[1] Variances such as "grammatical and syntactical changes, rearrangement into chronological order, or omissions or additions of information immaterial for impeachment purposes will not prevent a transcription from being substantially verbatim." Id. at 1156.

After reviewing the documents in camera, the administrative law judge ruled that "in most instances the interviewers were trying to report as accurately and as completely as possible the conversation with each prospective witness, even though inconsequential stylistic or punctuation changes may have been made in the actual transcription." The law judge further ruled that "minor sections" of some reports which contain analytical comment or the subjective impressions of the interviewer need not be produced. Memorandum and Order Respecting Jencks Statements, Nov. 12, 1975, p.2. We read this as a determination that the portions of the reports to be produced are "substantially verbatim." However, in the event that our interpretation of the law judge's order is incorrect, we would expect that he would modify the order to limit production to "substantially verbatim" transcriptions. Accordingly,

[1] Production need only be made after the witness has testified on direct examination. In the present case, however, the parties have agreed that, if production is ordered, the reports are to be disclosed forthwith.

It is ordered, That the aforesaid appeal be, and it hereby is, denied.

Chairman Engman, with Commissioner Nye joining, stated "Whatever verbal formula the Administrative Law Judge used in determining that interview reports should be turned over to opposing counsel is not of sufficient importance to warrant Commission review. I dissent insofar as the above order suggests we should review his ruling."

IN THE MATTER OF

CARGILL, INCORPORATED

ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT AND SEC. 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket 9005. Complaint, Jan. 21, 1975—Order, Dec. 2, 1975

Order dismissing complaint issued against a Minneapolis, Minn., well-diversified, closely-held corporation challenging its acquisition of stock in Missouri Portland Cement Company Inc. Respondent divested its interest in Missouri Portland, Aug. 28, 1975.

Appearances

For the Commission: Joseph S. Brownman, Theodore M. Jones, Jr. and Laurence O. Masson.

For the respondent: Gordon Spivack, Lord, Day & Lord, New York City.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §41, et seq.) and the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §12, et seq.) and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Cargill, Incorporated, a corporation, more particularly described and referred to herein as respondent, has violated the provisions of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45) and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18) and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges as follows:

DEFINITIONS

PARAGRAPH 1. For the purposes of this complaint the following definitions shall apply:

a. "Portland cement" includes Type I through V as specified by the American Society for Testing Materials. Neither masonary nor white cement is included.

b. The St. Louis marketing area consists of the counties of Franklin, Jefferson, St. Charles and St. Louis in the State of Missouri; and the counties of Madison, St. Clair, Clinton and Monroe in the State of Illinois.

c. The Kansas City marketing area consists of the counties of Cass, Clay, Jackson, Platte and Ray in the State of Missouri; and the counties of Johnson and Wyandotte in the State of Kansas.

d. The Memphis marketing area consists of the counties of Shelby and Tipton in the State of Tennessee; the county of Crittenden in the State of Arkansas; and the county of De Soto in the State of Mississippi.

e. The Omaha marketing area consists of the counties of Douglas and Sarpy in the State of Nebraska; and the county of Pottawattamie in the State of Iowa.

f. The Mississippi Valley area consists of those areas capable of being serviced by cement plants or distribution terminals located on the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries.

II

CARGILL, INCORPORATED

PAR. 2. Respondent Cargill, Incorporated is a closely held corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware with its home office and principal place of business located at the Cargill Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

PAR. 3. For the fiscal year ending May 31, 1973, respondent had net sales of approximately $5.3 billion and a net income of approximately $107.8 million. Respondent's net worth as of May 31, 1973, was approximately $352.4 million.

PAR. 4. Among other activities, respondent engages in grain trading, vegetable oil processing, animal feeds production, corn wet-milling, rock salt mining, copra and flax trading, chemical production, poultry processing, ore and metal trading, insurance underwriting; and the international trading of salt, flour and molasses.

PAR. 5. In 1932 respondent formed Cargo Carriers, Inc., a subsidiary corporation, to operate river barges and tow boats for the transportation of bulk commodities on inland waterways. At the present time Cargo Carriers, Inc., owns and operates numerous barges capable of transporting bulk commodities on inland waterways. Respondent also owns several ocean-going ships capable of transporting bulk commodities across sea trading routes. With little or no modification to existing vessels, respondent's barges and ocean-going ships are capable of being used to transport portland cement and materials necessary for the manufacture of portland cement.

PAR. 6. In carrying out its grain trading business, respondent owns and/or operates an extensive network of grain elevators throughout the United States. Many of respondent's elevators are located adjacent to navigable inland waterways, thereby providing respondent with the capability of receiving bulk goods and commodities from barges and loading bulk goods and commodities onto barges for shipment through inland waterways. With some modification to existing facilities, respondent's grain elevators are capable of serving as storage and/or sales points for portland cement.

PAR. 7. At all times relevant herein, respondent has been a corporation engaged in the purchase or sale of products in interstate commerce and is engaged in substantial "commerce" as that term is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

III

MISSOURI PORTLAND CEMENT COMPANY, INC.

PAR. 8. The Missouri Portland Cement Company (hereinafter referred to as "Missouri Portland") is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its home office and principal place of business located in St. Louis, Mo.

PAR. 9. Missouri Portland is now and for many years has been engaged in the production and sale of portland cement. For the year ending Dec. 31, 1973, Missouri Portland's total sales were approximately $51,000,000 of which sales of portland cement were approximately $44,000,000. As of Dec. 31, 1973, the book value of Missouri Portland's stock was approximately $45,532,611; and total assets were approximately $64,521,272. Missouri Portland presently has over 1,450,000 shares of outstanding common stock, traded on the New York Stock Exchange.

PAR. 10. Missouri Portland produces portland cement at each of three plants located in Independence, Mo.; St. Louis, Mo. and Joppa, Ill. The company distributes and sells portland cement from eight warehouse terminal points located in Memphis, Tenn.; Decatur, Ala.; Nashville, Tenn.; Owensboro, Ky.; Louisville, Ky.; Omaha, Neb.; Peoria, Ill. and Chicago, Ill. Each of the eight warehouse terminals is located at a navigable river in order that cement may be shipped in bulk form by barge carrier. The portland cement is stored at each of the warehouse terminals in silos, or storage elevators, for future delivery to customers in these and other areas.

PAR. 11. The production and sale of portland cement in the metropolitan marketing areas of St. Louis, Kansas City, Memphis and Omaha is highly concentrated, and Missouri Portland enjoys a substantial or dominant share of portland cement sales in each of these areas.

PAR. 12. At all times relevant herein, Missouri Portland has been engaged in the purchase or sale of products in interstate commerce and is engaged in substantial "commerce" and the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

THE ACQUISITION

PAR. 13. On or about Dec. 19, 1973, respondent filed an "Invitation for Tenders" with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission and publicly advertised its offer to buy all of the outstanding shares of Missouri Portland common stock at a price of $30 per share. At the time, Missouri Portland stock was selling for approximately $24 per share on the New York Stock Exchange.

PAR. 14. The cash required of respondent to purchase all of the outstanding common stock of Missouri Portland is estimated to be about $43,500,000. As of approximately Apr. 30, 1974, respondent had acquired about 18 percent of the outstanding common stock of Missouri Portland.

NATURE OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

PAR. 15. Portland cement is a material which in the presence of water binds "coarse aggregate," such as crushed stone or gravel, and "fine aggregate," such as sand, into concrete, Portland cement is essential for the manufacture of ready mix concrete, prestressed concrete products and concrete block.

PAR. 16. The portland cement industry in the United States overall is substantial. In 1972, approximately 50 companies operating 170 plants shipped approximately 83 million tons to consumers. This cement is valued at approximately $1.6 billion.

PAR. 17. Portland cement manufacturers sell their portland cement to consumers such as ready mixed concrete companies, prestressed concrete products manufacturers, concrete block producers, contractors and building materials dealers. Approximately 60 percent of all portland cement is shipped to firms engaged in the production and sale of ready mixed concrete, although in heavily populated areas, the percentage is often higher.

PAR. 18. In a substantial number of significant marketing areas, the production and sale of portland cement is highly concentrated. In the St. Louis, Kansas City, Memphis, and Omaha areas, in each of which Missouri Portland does business, the four largest firms account for approximately 80 percent or more of portland cement sales.

PAR. 19. More than 50 percent of the portland cement industry's plant capacity is owned by multi-plant companies, and the 10 largest producers of portland cement account for approximately 50 percent of the total cement production in the United States.

PAR. 20. Since 1950, approximately 34 portland cement manufacturing companies have been acquired. These acquisitions involved approximately 45 individual portland cement plants with a total capacity of nearly 100 million barrels, or approximately 20 million tons. This amount equalled 30 percent of the total industry capacity in 1950 and 20 percent of the total industry capacity by 1965. The various acquisitions have caused the number of portland cement companies in the U.S. to decline, thereby contributing to increased concentration. Since 1950, the 20 largest portland cement companies' share of portland cement manufacturing capacity in the United States increased from approximately 73 percent to 83 percent.

VI

EFFECTS OF THE ACQUISITION

PAR. 21. The effect of respondent's acquisition of a substantial amount of the stock of Missouri Portland, may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of portland cement in the St. Louis, Kansas City, Memphis and Omaha areas; in the Mississippi Valley area, and in the Nation as a whole, for each of the following reasons, among others:

a. Respondent will have been eliminated as a substantial potential entrant in the business of the manufacture, sale and distribution of portland cement.

b. The entry of any other potential competitors in the business of the manufacture, sale and distribution of portland cement will or may be prevented, delayed or inhibited.

PAR. 22. The acquisition by respondent corporation of Missouri Portland stock constitutes a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18) and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45).

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT

This matter is before us upon the administrative law judge's certification of respondent's motion to dismiss the complaint in view of respondent's divestiture of its interest in the Missouri Portland Cement Company, Inc. (Missouri Portland), on Aug. 28, 1975.

Upon consideration of the matter, the Commission has determined that further proceedings challenging respondent's acquisition of stock in Missouri Portland would not be in the public interest. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the complaint in this matter be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Commissioner Dixon not participating, and Commissioner Hanford dissenting.

UNION CARBIDE CORPORATION

MODIFIED ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket C-2557. Decision, Oct. 4, 1974—Modifying Order, Dec. 2, 1975

Order modifying an earlier order dated Oct. 4, 1974, 84 F.T.C. 591, 40 F.R. 6477, by eliminating order Paragraphs I.B., II.B., II.C., VII, VIII, IX, and XIII, and including a proviso that primarily institutional advertising will not require the "STOP" clause. This is to provide for a uniformity of treatment among competitors against whom the F.T.C. proceeded simultaneously issuing complaints involving the same practices. The modified order affords respondent the benefits of the terms of the consent order afforded to FMC Corporation in Docket 8961, 86 F.T.C. 897, 40 F.R. 53552, but which leaves intact those provisions which are peculiar to the facts of the Union Carbide complaint.

For the Commission: Joan Z. Bernstein.

For the respondent: Kirkland, Ellis & Rowe, Wash., D.C. and Richard H. Gregory, Jr., New York City.

ORDER REOPENING AND MODIFYING CEASE AND DESIST ORDER

Upon consideration of respondent's petition to reopen and modify the cease and desist order entered by consent against respondent in this matter on Oct. 4, 1974 [84 F.T.C. 591], to afford respondent the benefits of the terms of the consent order afforded to FMC Corporation in Dkt. 8961 [86 F.T.C. 897], and the Acting Director of the Bureau of Consumer Protection having recommended that the requested modifications be granted, and the Commission having concluded on the basis of the foregoing that the petition should be granted.

It is ordered, That this matter be reopened and the following modified final order be substituted and issued in lieu of the order entered herein on Oct. 4, 1974:

MODIFIED FINAL ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent, Union Carbide Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of any insecticide product with precautionary labeling which contains any active insecticidal ingredient(s) presently marketed by respondent or currently being field tested by respondent and which is intended for use by custom applicators and commercial growers to protect animals or food, forage, field or fiber crops by virtue of the capacity of its active ingredient(s) to kill insects (sometimes referred to hereinafter as "such products"), do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing, directly or by implication, by print or broadcast advertising, by other promotional material, or by sales representatives' oral statements, that such products are absolutely or unqualifiedly safe, nontoxic or free of hazard for any use registered under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, as amended (hereinafter FIFRA) or any other approved use based upon evidence filed in connection with registration under FIFRA.

II

With respect to representations not covered by the provisions of Section I of this order; It is ordered, That Union Carbide Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of such products, do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing, directly or by implication, by print or broadcast advertising, by other promotional material, or by sales representatives' oral statements, that such products are absolutely safe, nontoxic or free of hazard to human beings, warmblooded animals, birds, fish, beneficial insects, or the environment.

III

It is further ordered, That respondent, Union Carbide Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of such products do forthwith cease and desist from making any representations, directly or by implication, or omitting any representations, by print or broadcast advertising or by other promotional material, which contradict, are inconsistent with, or detract from the effectiveness of any warning, caution or direction for use required to be set forth on the label of such product. Provided, That if any representations, directly or by implication, made by respondent, or the omission of representations by respondent, are in accord with the provisions of sections I, II and IV of this order, they shall be considered as being in compliance with this section of the order.

IV

It is further ordered, That respondent, Union Carbide Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of such products do forthwith cease and desist from disseminating or causing the dissemination of:

VII

It is further ordered, That should the Federal Trade Commission promulgate a trade regulation rule or industry guide governing the advertising or promotion of products subject to this order, then any pertinent less comprehensive or less restrictive provisions of such rule or guide shall automatically replace any comparable provisions set forth herein which are effective on the date that such rule or guide becomes effective.

VIII

It is further ordered, That the respondent forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions engaged in the manufacture, sale, advertising, promotion or distribution of products subject to this order, and to all present and future employees of respondent responsible for the advertising, promotion, distribution or sale of such products.

XI

It is further ordered, That this order shall become effective upon service.

ORDER REOPENING AND MODIFYING CEASE AND DESIST ORDER

Upon consideration of respondent's petition to reopen and modify the cease and desist order entered by consent against respondent in this matter on Oct. 4, 1974 [84 F.T.C. 605], to afford respondent the benefits of the terms of the consent order afforded to FMC Corporation in Dkt. 8961 [86 F.T.C. 897], but leaving intact those provisions which are peculiar to the facts of the Hercules complaint, and the Acting Director of the Bureau of Consumer Protection having recommended that the requested modifications be granted, and the Commission having concluded on the basis of the foregoing that the petition should be granted,

It is ordered, That this matter be reopened and the following modified final order be substituted and issued in lieu of the order entered herein on Oct. 4, 1974:

MODIFIED FINAL ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent, Hercules Incorporated, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or distribution of any insecticide product with precautionary labeling which contains any active insecticidal ingredient(s) presently marketed by respondent or currently being field tested by respondent and which is intended for use by custom applicators and commercial growers to protect animals or food, forage, field or fiber crops by virtue of the capacity of its active ingredient(s) to kill insects (sometimes referred to hereinafter as "such products"), do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing, directly or by implication, by print or broadcast advertising, by other promotional material, or by sales representatives' oral statements, that such products are absolutely or unqualifiedly safe, nontoxic or free of hazard for any use registered under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, as amended (hereinafter FIFRA) or any other approved use based upon evidence filed in connection with registration under FIFRA.

Provided however, That for purposes of enforcing Paragraph I.A. of this order any advertisement, statement, claim or representation that such products may be employed for a crop or plant use registered under FIFRA or any other approved use based upon evidence filed in connection with registration under FIFRA shall not be deemed a violation of this order; Provided, further, That this exception shall be effective only until such time as a trade regulation rule covering the advertising and promotion of such products subject to this order and containing terms at least as onerous as Paragraph I.A. of this order becomes final and effective.

II

With respect to representations not covered by the provisions of Section I. of this order; It is ordered, That Hercules Incorporated, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of such products, do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing, directly or by implication, by print or broadcast advertising, by other promotional material, or by sales representatives' oral statements, that such products are absolutely safe, nontoxic or free of hazard to human beings, warm-blooded animals, birds, fish, beneficial insects, or the environment.

B. Representing, directly or by implication, by print or broadcast advertising or by other promotional material, that Toxaphene insecticide, or any product containing Toxaphene insecticide:

(1) is "soft;" or

(2) is "nonpersistent," "nonmobile" and/or will "not magnify biologically;" Provided, however, That the use of such terms shall not be prohibited if:

(a) accompanied by statements, which clearly and conspicuously and in close conjunction with such terms, fully and accurately explain such terms and the specific context within which such terms are used, and that context reflects normal circumstances or conditions in which the product could be expected to be used; and

(b) accompanied by statements which set forth all relevant and material adverse effects on the environment known to result from the uses of such product which are suggested claims for the product; and

(c) statements concerning such terms are substantiated by competent scientific tests or other objective material which provide a reasonable basis for the representations made, and the substantiation materials are either (i) available for public inspection, or (ii) otherwise available to the Federal Trade Commission to determine compliance with this order; and

(d) statements concerning such terms include no conclusory representations, either directly or indirectly or by implication, suggesting that the product is unqualifiedly safe, nontoxic or free of hazard.

III

It is further ordered, That respondent, Hercules Incorporated, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale or distribution of such products do forthwith cease and desist from disseminating or causing the dissemination of:

C. Any broadcast advertisement not more than 30 seconds in length which contains for any such products any use or efficacy claim or any environmental or safety claim unless it clearly and conspicuously includes the following statement:

ALL PESTICIDES CAN BE HARMFUL. READ THE LABEL. USE AS DIRECTED.

Provided, That in television advertisements not more than 10 seconds in length for any such products which contain no direct representations concerning product safety, the requirements of the term "clearly and conspicuously" shall in all cases be met by including the above statement in the video portion of the advertisement.

Provided however, That for purposes of enforcing Paragraph III of this order any advertisement, statement, claim or representation that such products may be employed for a crop or plant use registered under FIFRA, or any other approved use based upon evidence filed in connection with registration under FIFRA shall not be deemed sufficient to require the disclosure of any statement otherwise required under the provisions of Paragraph III; Provided further, That this exception shall be limited to advertisements which promote the respondent's corporate image and which only incidentally promote the sale or distribution of such products.

It is further ordered, That the provisions of this order shall apply to all advertising (or advertising claims) prepared by respondent, whether or not such advertising is placed or paid for by respondent alone, or by respondent in conjunction with another under a cooperative advertising plan, or otherwise; Provided, however, That Sections I, II, and III of this order shall not apply to any advertising prepared by the customers of respondent, whether or not respondent makes payment in whole or in part for such advertising under any cooperative advertising plan, or otherwise. Nothing in this Section IV shall be construed to extend any provision of this order beyond the specific terms thereof.

Respondent shall, nevertheless, condition all future payments to customers of insecticide products covered by this order, made in connection with any cooperative advertising plan in which respondent participates, upon said customer's certification to respondent that they have complied with the standards set forth in Section III of this order.

Nothing in this order shall be construed to apply to scientific articles published in recognized scientific or agricultural journals or government publications, or reprints thereof, or representations (other than print advertising or other promotional material) before public or governmental forums such as public hearings, scientific meetings, or to governmental agencies, agents, or employees responsible for the regulation, testing, or dissemination of information concerning pesticide products covered by this order.

VI

It is further ordered, That nothing in this order shall prohibit the dissemination of product labels (as defined by Section 2(p)(1) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, as amended), or reproductions thereof.

VII

It is further ordered, That should the Federal Trade Commission promulgate a trade regulation rule or industry guide governing the advertising or promotion of products subject to this order, then any pertinent less comprehensive or less restrictive provisions of such rule or guide shall automatically replace any comparable provisions set forth herein which are effective on the date that such rule or guide becomes final and effective.

VIII

It is further ordered, That the respondent forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions engaged in the manufacture, sale, advertising, promotion or distribution of products subject to this order, and to all present and future employees of respondent responsible for the advertising, promotion, distribution or sale of such products, and to all parties participating in respondent's cooperative advertising programs for such products; Provided however, That distribution by respondent of the order issued in this matter on Oct. 4, 1974 shall be considered as if such distribution had been made under this Section VIII and respondent shall not be required to make distribution of this order to persons to whom such previous order has been distributed.

IX

It is further ordered, That the respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale, resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other changes in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

X

It is further ordered, That the compliance report heretofore filed by respondent shall be considered by the Commission as if it had been filed under this order.

XI

It is further ordered, That this order shall become effective upon service.

The Acquisition

22. On or about July 25, 1973, BOC and Airco entered into an agreement pursuant to which they agreed to exchange confidential data regarding their respective businesses. The agreement also provided that neither company would make any offer for a period of five years to acquire any securities of the other without the prior approval of the other company's board of directors. On or about Dec. 10, 1973, BOC Financial made a tender offer on behalf of BOC to purchase three to four million common shares of Airco. BOC Financial subsequently accepted four million of the Airco's common shares which were tendered to it.

IX

Trade and Commerce

23. The value of industry shipments of industrial gas in the United States was approximately $700 million in 1972. Very high levels of concentration have prevailed in the industrial gas industry the last two decades. The four and eight largest firms during the year 1972 accounted for more than 70 percent and 90 percent respectively of the total industry shipment of industrial gases. Airco, the second largest producer, had sales of over $120 million in 1972. Entry barriers into the industrial gas industry are high. During the period from 1958 to date, several acquisitions were made in the industry, and the number of significant full-line producers diminished considerably. During the period from 1950 to 1972, sales of industrial gas more than tripled. The only significant entrant within the last ten years was the largest of the few large international industrial gas corporations.

24. Sales of inhalation anesthetic equipment in the United States were over $25 million in 1972. The four and eight largest firms during the year 1972 accounted for more than 70 percent and 85 percent respectively of total sales. Airco was the largest producer with over 35 percent of the United States market. BOC, through its United States subsidiaries, Fraser Sweatman and Harris Lake, was the third largest producer with over 8 percent of the market. The barriers to entry are high. The number of significant manufacturers with a substantial line of equipment has diminished considerably over the past ten years. BOC, through its recent acquisitions of Fraser Sweatman and Harris Lake, is the only significant recent entry.

25. Sales of inhalation therapy equipment were over $75 million in 1972. The four and eight leading firms accounted for over 50 percent and 65 percent respectively of sales. Airco was the second largest factor in the market in 1972. BOC was an actual competitor through sales of its Harris Lake subsidiary. Barriers to entry in the industry are high. The number of significant manufacturers with a substantial line of equipment has diminished considerably in the last ten years. Airco sales in this market were approximately $10.5 million.

26. Sales of medical pipeline systems in the United States were approximately $13.5 million in 1972. There were only five companies in the market. Airco is the leading company in the market with 51.5 percent of national sales. Entry barriers into the industry are high. The number of significant manufacturers with a substantial line of equipment has diminished considerably over the past ten years. There has been no recent significant new entrant.

Effects of the Acquisition

27. The effect of the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, distribution or sale of industrial gases, inhalation anesthetic equipment, inhalation therapy equipment, and medical gas pipeline systems or any submarkets of the above markets throughout the United States, or sections thereof, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18); and the effect of the agreements by which Airco and BOC undertook to eliminate the potential and actual competition between BOC and Airco may be to unreasonably restrain trade, and to hinder or have a dangerous tendency to hinder competition unduly, thereby constituting an unfair act and practice in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, (15 U.S.C. §45). These effects may occur in the following among other ways:

(a) Substantial potential competition through internal expansion or toehold acquisition, and substantial actual competition between BOC and Airco may be eliminated;

(b) The restraining influence of BOC as an actual or potential competitor may be eliminated;

(c) The competitive benefits of internal expansion and innovation by BOC may be eliminated;

(d) Already high barriers to entry of new competition may be heightened and increased;

(e) Members of the purchasing public and the ultimate consumer may be denied the benefits of free and open competition;

(f) BOC, a leading international competitor in electrical welding equipment, and gas welding and cutting equipment may be eliminated as a potential entrant into the concentrated United States electrical welding and gas welding and cutting markets by virtue of the acquisition of a large industrial gas company with presently existing substantial lines of electrical welding and gas welding and cutting equipment;

(g) Substantial competition between BOC and other companies for sale of products to Airco may be eliminated;

(h) Airco, a leading competitor may become further enhanced;

(i) Competitors of Airco may become competitively disadvantaged; and

(j) The effect of the stock acquisition may be to entrench or increase already high levels of concentration by encouraging tendencies for combination and merger by actual and potential competitors.

XI

Violations

28. The acquisition of four million shares of Airco stock by BOC and appertaining agreements between Airco and BOC, as alleged above, constitute violations of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18) and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45).

For the respondents: Jay H. Topkis, Lewis A. Kaplan, and Moses Silverman, Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, New York City for The British Oxygen Company Limited. *George J. Wade, R. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Respondents The British Oxygen Company Limited (hereinafter "BOC"), BOC Financial Corporation, BOC Holdings Limited, and British Oxygen Investments Limited (hereinafter collectively "BOC" or "BOC respondents") are charged with violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. § 18); and BOC respondents and respondent Airco, Incorporated (hereinafter "Airco") are further charged with violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45) through the acquisition by BOC Financial Corporation of four million shares (35 percent) of the stock of Airco for $80 million by means of a public tender offer. The Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint on Feb. 26, 1974, approximately two months after the said acquisition occurred.

The complaint alleges that the effect of the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC respondents may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, distribution or sale of industrial gases, inhalation anesthetic equipment, inhalation therapy equipment, and medical gas pipeline systems or any submarkets of the above markets throughout the United States, or sections thereof in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18); and the effect of the agreements by which Airco and BOC respondents undertook to eliminate the potential and actual competition between BOC and Airco may be to unreasonably restrain trade, and to hinder or have a dangerous tendency to hinder competition unduly, thereby constituting an unfair act or practice in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45). These effects may occur, the complaint alleges, in the following among other ways:

(a) Substantial potential competition through internal expansion or toehold acquisition, and substantial actual competition between BOC and Airco may be eliminated;

(b) The restraining influence of BOC as an actual or potential competitor may be eliminated;

(c) The competitive benefits of internal expansion and innovation by BOC may be eliminated;

(d) Already high barriers to entry of new competition may be heightened and increased;

(e) Members of the purchasing public and the ultimate consumer may be denied the benefits of free and open competition;

(f) BOC, a leading international competitor in electrical welding equipment, and gas welding and cutting equipment may be eliminated as a potential entrant into the concentrated United States electrical welding and gas welding and cutting markets by virtue of the acquisition of a large industrial gas company with presently existing substantial lines of electrical welding and gas welding and cutting equipment;

(g) Substantial competition between BOC and other companies for sale of products to Airco may be eliminated;

(h) Airco, a leading competitor may become further enhanced;

(i) Competitors or Airco may become competitively disadvantaged; and

(j) The effect of the stock acquisition may be to entrench or increase already high levels of concentration by encouraging tendencies for combination and merger by actual and potential competitors.

On the day this proceeding was commenced, the Federal Trade Commission applied to the United States District Court for the District of Delaware for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction requiring BOC to maintain Airco as a separate company and restraining it from, among other things, voting its Airco stock, having BOC personnel serve on the Airco board of directors, increasing or decreasing its holdings of Airco stock, and exchanging trade secrets and similar material with Airco pending the disposition of the administrative complaint.

On Feb. 28, 1974, the Court issued a temporary restraining order and thereafter, on Mar. 8, 1974, a preliminary injunction requiring BOC to maintain Airco as a separate company and restraining it from, among other things, exchanging trade secrets with Airco on the condition that the Commission expedite the administrative proceeding and file a report at least every ninety (90) days with respect to the status of the matter. The District Court did allow, however, BOC to vote its Airco shares and four representatives from BOC to be seated on Airco's board of directors. Federal Trade Commission v. British Oxygen Co., 1974 CCH Trade Cas. ¶ 75,003 (D. Del. 1974) [9 S&D 887].

Answers were filed by Airco on Mar. 12, 1974, and by BOC respondents on Mar. 14, 1974, admitting in part and denying in part the various allegations of the complaint. On May 24, 1974, BOC respondents filed an amended answer, admitting in part and denying in part the various allegations of the complaint.

On Mar. 12, 1974, BOC respondents moved for a fixed and expedited schedule for the administrative proceeding, which motion was certified to the Commission by the administrative law judge. By order of Apr. 2, 1974, the Commission denied the motion insofar as it sought a fixed schedule, but ordered that the proceeding be expedited (Order Denying Motion for Fixed Schedule, Apr. 2, 1974).

Prehearing conferences were held in Washington, D.C., on Mar. 12, Mar. 28, Apr. 17, and Apr. 25, 1974. At the prehearing conference held on Apr. 25, 1974, complaint counsel informed the administrative law judge and respondents that they would not offer any proof with respect to the violations alleged in the complaint relating to medical pipeline systems and electrical and gas welding and cutting equipment (PHC. Tr. 134-35).

Discovery motions were subsequently filed by complaint counsel and BOC respondents. Proposed exhibit lists, copies of proposed exhibits, and witness lists were exchanged by the parties before the hearings began. Complaint counsel, on Mar. 15, 1974, filed a statement of issues.

BOC respondents, on Mar. 19, 1974, moved for the issuance of a subpoena directed to the Commission calling for the production of certain documents obtained by the Commission staff during the course of an investigation of the industrial gases industry in the United States, for use in the preparation and defense of this matter. On Apr. 23, 1974, the administrative law judge granted this motion in part. Complaint counsel and several third parties sought interlocutory review of this order by the Commission. Following the conclusion of substantially all of complaint counsel's case-in-chief, the Commission granted the applications for review and upheld the administrative law judge's determination (Order Granting Applications for Review, May 29, 1974). Production of the documents ordered to be made available to respondents began on June 10, 1974, and was completed on June 18, 1974.

Presentation of the case-in-chief began in Washington, D.C., on May 6, 1974, and concluded on May 23, 1974, subject to the right of complaint counsel to offer certain documents into evidence. Presentation of BOC respondents' defense began in New York, N.Y., on June 5, 1974, and concluded in Washington, D.C., on June 18, 1974. Airco presented its defense in Washington, D.C., on June 18, 1974. Rebuttal was presented by complaint counsel in Washington, D.C., on June 27, 1974. The hearings were terminated on June 27, 1974, subject to the right of complaint counsel to offer into evidence certain documents subpoenaed from Stanford Research Institute.

At the hearing on June 27, 1974, the administrative law judge set July 26, 1974 for filing of proposed findings by the parties, and Aug. 5, 1974 for the filing of replies thereto. Pursuant to respondents' request, the administrative law judge issued an order on July 25, 1974, extending the time for filing proposed findings to and including Aug. 2, 1974, and for replies thereto to and including Aug. 12, 1974. Following the receipt of further documents in evidence, on Aug. 2, 1974, the administrative law judge closed the record for the reception of evidence. Proposed findings and confidential proposed findings were filed by complaint counsel on Aug. 2, 1974; proposed findings and proposed findings containing in camera material were filed by BOC respondents on Aug. 7, 1974. On Aug. 8, 1974, the administrative law judge extended the time for filing reply briefs to and including Aug. 22, 1974. On Aug. 22, 1974, complaint counsel filed a reply brief and confidential reply brief. On Aug. 22, 1974, BOC respondents filed their reply brief and a reply brief containing in camera material. Airco's proposed findings and brief were filed on Aug. 5, 1974.

Complaint counsel called a total of twenty (20) witnesses, and respondents eight (8) witnesses. Over five hundred (500) exhibits were received in evidence during the trial.

This proceeding is before the undersigned upon the complaint, answers, testimony and other evidence, proposed findings of fact and conclusions and briefs filed by complaint counsel and by counsel for respondents. These submissions by the parties have been given careful consideration and, to the extent not adopted by this decision in the form proposed or in substance, are rejected as not supported by the record or as immaterial. Any motions not heretofore or herein specifically ruled upon, either directly or by the necessary effect of the conclusions in this decision, are hereby denied. The findings of fact made herein are based on a review of the entire record and upon a consideration of the demeanor of the witnesses who gave testimony in this proceeding.

For the convenience of the Commission and the parties, the findings of fact made hereinafter include references to the principal supporting evidentiary items in the record. Such references are intended to serve as convenient guides to the testimony and exhibits supporting the findings of fact, but do not necessarily represent complete summaries of the evidence considered in arriving at such findings.

Airco had approximately 43,000 stockholders with 11.4 million shares outstanding in June 1973, with its largest shareholder holding approximately 345,000 shares, or approximately 3 percent of the outstanding common stock (Dillon 2585-86).

22. Over the years prior to 1973, BOC and Airco had had a number of commercial contacts, including the joint venture during 1967-1971 for the manufacture and sale of air separation plants in the United States. As a result of these contacts, various members of the senior managements of BOC and Airco became acquainted with one another (Finding of Fact No. 5; Dillon 2585; Giordano 1933; Laister 2537; Smith 1721).

23. One of BOC's managing directors, Peter Laister, learned in June 1973 of rumors relating to an impending tender offer for Airco stock from a group of investment bankers who made a call on Mr. Laister (Laister 2541). Shortly thereafter, Mr. Laister discussed Airco's vulnerability to such a bid with a vice president of Airco during a social occasion (Smith 1721; Laister 2542-43). Mr. Laister also informed Mr. Leslie Smith, BOC's chairman, of the rumors concerning Airco. BOC immediately implemented a study of the possibility of BOC's acquiring Airco (Laister 2542, 2544-46; in camera exhibits: CX 72A-N, 73A-J, 74A-B, 75A-K, 76A-U, 77A-B, 78A-D).

24. The Airco vice president reported to Airco officials the conversation he had had with Mr. Laister of BOC wherein it was suggested by Mr. Laister that BOC and Airco have some closer association. Airco determined to "sort out what the real interest was" (Giordano 2033). Thereafter, on June 30, 1973, Richard Giordano, president of Airco, met with Mr. Smith, chairman of BOC, in London and proposed an amalgamation between BOC and Airco (Giordano 1995-97). At that time, Mr. Giordano was not aware that BOC was already considering making a bid for Airco (Giordano 1997).

25. As a result of the June 30, 1973 meeting, Mr. Giordano and Mr. Smith agreed to form a working party of senior executives of both companies to study the possibility of an amalgamation between BOC and Airco (Smith 1723-24; Giordano 1972; Laister 2546-47; CX 78-A, in camera). The parties also agreed for an exchange of confidential information between the two companies regarding their respective businesses, such as sales, profits and capital investments (Giordano 1972-73; Laister 2546-47; CX 88A-C, CX 301A-Q, in camera; RAX 83). Subsequently, on July 25, 1973, BOC and Airco entered into a written agreement which provided for an exchange of confidential information. The agreement also provided that neither company would make any offer for a period of 5 years to acquire any securities of the other without the prior approval of the other company's board of directors. It was also agreed that the information exchanged would not be disclosed to third parties (CX 99A-D; Giordano 1972-73).

26. Confidential information was exchanged by BOC and Airco representatives at a meeting in New York on July 26 and 27, 1973 (BOC and Airco Admissions, Par. 64, filed Apr. 10, 1974 and Apr. 12, 1974; Smith 1723-24; Giordano 1973-77; Laister 2546-47; in camera exhibits:

CX 93A-I; CX 96A-J; CX 301A-Q; RAX 83A-U). After the meeting, BOC and Airco continued to explore the possibility of an amalgamation between the two companies and held subsequent discussions in September and October (Laister 2549-50; in camera exhibits: CX 95A-E; CX 97A-D; CX 98A-C).

27. On Nov. 2, 1973, the chairman of Curtiss-Wright Corporation informed Airco's senior officers that his company was prepared to make a tender offer for 2 million Airco shares at a price 25 percent over the then market price, or approximately $16-$17 per share (Dillon 2588, 2611). Airco's executives responded that the Airco board of directors would have to consider the Curtiss-Wright proposal and consult their advisers before making a substantive response to the Curtiss-Wright statement (Dillon 2589). Airco also immediately contacted BOC about the Curtiss-Wright proposal and sent Mr. Giordano to London to confer with BOC officials (Dillon 2592).

28. Airco commenced a brief study of Curtiss-Wright (Dillon 2589-90), and invited Curtiss-Wright to make a presentation to the Airco board of directors about the proposed tender offer. At the time of the board meeting, it had been concluded that the Curtiss-Wright proposal would be opposed (Dillon 2592-94). Airco had also concluded that a successful Curtiss-Wright offer would effectively preclude any closer association with any other company, including BOC (Dillon 2599). Airco's chairman informed Curtiss-Wright's chairman of the decision by the Airco board and the latter responded that Curtiss-Wright would not make the offer under those circumstances (Dillon 2595; Laister 2551). Airco and BOC thereafter returned to a study of a closer association between the two companies (Smith 1725; Dillon 2595-96). Working parties were set up to examine the various forms of closer association (Dillon 2595-96), and it was anticipated that additional meetings would take place after the first of the year, 1974 (Dillon 2596).

29. On Dec. 3, 1973, Curtiss-Wright made a public tender offer for 2.4 million shares of Airco's common stock at $18 per share (Dillon 2594-98, 2601; CX 125Z-14). Airco notified BOC of the Curtiss-Wright offer (Laister 2551; Dillon 2597). Airco opposed the Curtiss-Wright tender offer (Dillon 2596-97) and recommended that Airco's shareholders not accept it (Dillon 2606; Giordano 2013-14). On Dec. 4, 1973, Airco sent a letter to its shareholders urging them to reject the Curtiss-Wright offer and asking them to wait to consider possible alternatives to that offer (CX 125Z-9).

30. BOC and Airco entered into a memorandum agreement dated Dec. 10, 1973, in which Airco consented to BOC making an offer for up to 4 million Airco shares. The agreement further provided for reciprocal representation by BOC and Airco on each other's board of directors. Additionally, the agreement provided that Airco would have first right to purchase or to designate a purchaser for any Airco shares purchased by BOC should BOC subsequently decide to sell (CX 108A-C; Dillon 2599-2601). Also, on Dec. 10, 1973, BOC announced a tender offer through its subsidiary, BOC Financial Corporation, to purchase up to 4 million common shares of Airco at a price of $20 a share (CX 125A-Z-31). Airco consented to BOC's offer, provided BOC access to Airco's shareholder list, and had its transfer agent at BOC's expense mail BOC's offer to Airco's shareholders (Giordano 2014-15; Dillon 2601-02). Further, Airco's board of directors sent letters to Airco's shareholders informing them that Airco's board had consented to BOC's offer and that a closer association of Airco and BOC would be beneficial to both companies (CX 125Z-9).

31. At the expiration of BOC's tender offer on Dec. 21, 1973, over 6 million shares had been tendered, of which BOC Financial Corporation subsequently purchased 4 million on a pro rata basis (CX 125Z-10, CX 293C; complaint and BOC and Airco Answers, Par. 22; RAX 7, p. 2). The cost to BOC of purchasing 4 million shares of Airco was $80 million plus estimated expenses of $2.8 million (CX 293C). The 4 million Airco shares represented approximately 35.3 percent of Airco's outstanding common stock and gave BOC effective working control over Airco (CX 170B). Subsequently, Airco's board of directors was enlarged from 12 to 16 directors to provide for four representatives of BOC. In return, BOC invited Airco's chairman and its president to join BOC's board of directors (CX 293E; CX 171C-D; Giordano 2015-17; RAX 7, pp. 2-3). On Feb. 26, 1974, the Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint challenging this acquisition (complaint).

III. Industrial Gases

A. Relevant Product Market

32. The complaint alleges that one of the effects of the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, distribution or sale of industrial gases, or any submarkets thereof throughout the United States, or any section thereof (complaint, Par. 27). "Industrial gases" are defined in the complaint as "gases in compressed, liquid and solid form including acetylene, carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, argon, helium, hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen, nitrous oxide, other medical gases, rare gases, and mixtures and combinations thereof." (complaint, Par. 1(a)). "Rare gases" include xenon and krypton (Giordano 1910-11; Baker 364). "Medical gases" include nitrous oxide, cyclopropane and oxygen (Kimerling 854-56); Giordano 1900; Loveman 603-10).

33. The term "fuel gases," used by witnesses in this proceeding, refers to gases which are burned in order to provide heat (Kridl 2137, 2143; Flamm 286; Cunningham 934). "Fuel gases" include both gases that are specifically mentioned in the definition of industrial gases contained in the complaint and gases that are not. Among the fuel gases are acetylene (Flamm 286; Loveman 611-12; Smith 1997-98; Giordano 2003), propane (Flamm 286; Cunningham 934), propylene (Flamm 286; Giordano 1912-13; Perkins 780-81, 798), MAPP (Flamm 286; Cunningham 935; Giordano 2004; Loveman 497-99; Perkins 798), Oxy-MAPP (Giordano 1897), Apache (Heckel 740-41; Cunningham 935), acetogen (Heckel 740-41), and thermogen (ibid.).

34. "Atmospheric gases," a term used throughout this proceeding, are gases generated commercially by the liquifcation and fractional distillation of air: oxygen, nitrogen and argon, and the rare gases—xenon and krypton (Baker 364). Atmospheric gases are produced in air separation plants and constitute the most substantial segment of the industrial gases market; for example, such gases account for 75-80 percent of the dollar sales by Union Carbide (Linde) and Air Products, 70 percent of dollar sales by Liquid Air, Inc., 65 percent of value of shipments by Chemetron, and 50 percent of the value of shipments by Airco (Flamm 240; Baker 368-70; Dempster 515-16; Cunningham 923; Giordano 1981-82). The above companies are generally acknowledged to be among the largest firms in the industrial gases industry.

35. Complaint counsel have conceded that the various industrial gases are "not substitutable in most cases" (Thurman 278). Rather, each gas is almost invariably used for its unique chemical properties which make them highly desirable for specific purposes. Other products are not readily substitutable for industrial gases (Flamm 276, 279-85; 349-50; Baker 370-72; Kridl 2142). The principal use of oxygen is in the manufacture of steel (Flamm 279-80). Oxygen is used also in the manufacture of glass (Flamm 281), chemicals (CX 232W-Z; Baker 440; Kridl 2164), aluminum (Giordano 1909-10), in welding and cutting (ibid.), and for medical purposes (Flamm 276). The principal characteristics of nitrogen are its chemical inertness and its refrigeration capabilities (Flamm 274). A major use of nitrogen is in the manufacture of ammonia (Kridl 2162-63). Nitrogen is also used extensively for blanketing in order to exclude oxygen and thereby prevent explosions (Giordano 1910). Its principal purchasers are oil companies, chemical companies and electronics companies (Giordano 1910). Nitrogen is used also as a refrigerant for food freezing and in-transit preservation of food (Flamm 281-83). Argon is an inert chemical element; its principal use is in stainless steel welding (Giordano 1910; Kridl 2157). Xenon is an inert chemical element used in electronic applications and sold in very small quantities (Giordano 1910-11). Krypton is an inert chemical element sold in very small quantities (ibid.). Helium is an inert chemical element. It is used in gas shielding processes to exclude the atmosphere, in leak detection, in research, and in balloons (Giordano 1911). Hydrogen is a combustible gas used in a variety of applications including annealing of steel, hydrogenation of foods, as a rocket propellant and in the manufacture of ammonia (Giordano 1911; Kridl 2133). Carbon dioxide is used primarily in the beverage industry for the carbonation of soft drinks. It is used also as a refrigerant in the food industry and as a shielding gas in certain welding applications (Giordano 1911-12). Carbon dioxide and nitrogen are not normally interchangeable in food freezing and refrigeration applications (Flamm 281-83). Acetylene is of unique utility in welding and cutting (Kridl 2168). Nitrous oxide is used by the medical and dental professions as an analgesic or anesthetic (Giordano 1900). Cyclopropane is a human anesthetic (Giordano 1900). MAPP is used primarily for cutting metal. The equipment used for that purpose differs from acetylene cutting equipment (Giordano 1912). Propylene is a fuel gas similar to MAPP. The cutting equipment used with propylene is the same or similar to equipment used with MAPP (Giordano 1913). Propane has two principal uses: heating, including cutting, and the synthesis of propylene (Giordano 1912-13; Kridl 2137). The principal use of butane is in the chemical industry (Kridl 2138). Apache, acetogen and thermogen are fuel gases used for their heating properties (Heckel 740-41).

36. The Bureau of the Census classifies the production and marketing of industrial gases as a separate and distinct line of commerce under Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) 2813 (CX 296A-F, CX 312A-K). The industrial gases industry has been classified by Census as a separate economic entity since at least 1945 (CX 340A-B, CX 341A-B). The United States industrial gases industry has been defined by Census from at least 1945 through the present as those establishments primarily engaged in manufacturing gases for sale in compressed, liquid and solid forms (CX 340A-B, CX 336A-B, CX 338A-B; CX 339A-B, CX 296A). The gases classified by Census as industrial gases are acetylene, carbon dioxide, argon, helium, hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen, nitrous oxide, other elemental gases, and compressed and liquified gases (CX 299D, CX 300A-D, CX 312C-D). The same group of gases have been classified as industrial gases by Census since at least 1954 (CX 337A-C).

37. Firms engaged in the production and marketing of industrial gases recognize the industrial gases industry as a separate and distinct line of business (Flamm 210-11, 213-14; Baker 363-64; Dempster 513; Loveman 577; Muller 648, 650; Heckel 730; Perkins 780; Kimerling 854; Cunningham 917). Industry executives who testified in this proceeding identified as their competitors companies who produce and distribute industrial gases and each invariably named the same companies as being engaged in this line of business (Flamm 223-24; Baker 364-65; Dempster 516-17; Loveman 578-79; Heckel 732-33; Kimerling 857; Cunningham 918).

38. The industrial gases industry is represented by two trade associations, the Compressed Gas Association (CGA) and the International Oxygen Manufacturers Association (IOMA) (Flamm 230-31; Baker 394-95; Loveman 581; Hines 757-58; 764; Perkins 789; Kimerling 858-59; Cunningham 924). The purpose of the associations is to provide for exchange of information and ideas and keep their members abreast of developments in the industrial gases industry (Flamm 230-31; Baker 395; Hines 758; Kimerling 860). Only producers of industrial gases qualify for membership in IOMA (Hines 758, 763-64).

39. There is common industry recognition that the atmospheric gases—oxygen, nitrogen, argon, xenon and krypton—are industrial gases and are marketed by industry members. Industry witnesses who testified in this proceeding also identified hydrogen, helium, carbon dioxide and acetylene as industrial gases and as being marketed by their companies (Flamm 213, 270; Baker 364, 427; Dempster 514-15; Loveman 577; Muller 648; Heckel 730; Perkins 780; Kimerling 854; Cunningham 917). There is no unanimity of view as to gases such as carbon monoxide, nitrous oxide, and the various fuel gases other than acetylene, which is clearly recognized by the industry as an industrial gas (Flamm 215, 218, 270, 275; Baker 372, 426-27; Dempster 514, 555; Loveman 597-98; Perkins 780, 798; Kimerling 854). Fuel gases such as propane, butane, and propylene are not classified by the Bureau of the Census as industrial gases and are specifically excluded from SIC 2813 (CX 312A, CX 312 n. 10). These fuel gases are hydrocarbon products and are part of the petroleum industry (Baker 426; Perkins 798; Cunningham 933-34). The small amount of these gases sold by members of the industrial gases industry are used in metal cutting, which is one of the uses of acetylene. Such gases are not, however, used for welding, which is a major use of acetylene (Giordano 1912; Kridl 2138-39). These latter gases and mixtures thereof, are specialty gases, and are sold by some companies and not others. However, such gases constitute a very small and insignificant percentage of total industry sales (Flamm 214, 218, 270, 275; Dempster 514-15, 569; Loveman 612; Heckel 750; Kimerling 854-55; Cunningham 934; Smith 1891; Giordano 1984).

40. Industrial gases companies in the U.S. market a broad range of industrial gases although they may not produce all of them (Flamm 213-15; Baker 363, 372-73; Heckel 730; Kimerling 855; Cunningham 917, 923-24). The principal industrial gases companies market essentially the same products (Baker 373). As one industry witness stated, the industrial gases business consists basically of the heavy investment in air separation gases and such others of a "package of gases" as can be marketed profitably (Dempster 555; Flamm 213-15; Baker 363, 372-73; Heckel 730; Kimerling 855; Cunningham 917, 923-24). Both BOC and Airco market a wide range of industrial gases (Smith 1797-99; Giordano 1904-05, 1913-14). Industrial gases companies market industrial gases that they do not produce in order to provide their direct customers and their dealers a synergistic or total marketing package (Flamm 215-16; Cunningham 923). It is necessary for industrial gases companies to market a full or broad line of gases in order to compete effectively (Flamm 215-16; Baker 373-74; Heckel 730; Kimerling 855). Customers of industrial gases companies prefer to purchase their total gases requirements from a single supplier (Baker 374; Heckel 730-31; Smith 1800). While some industries may use certain industrial gases more than others, most industries generally use a wide range of industrial gases (Baker 431-32; Dempster 569).

41. The production, transportation and marketing of industrial gases require substantial, complex and specialized technical knowledge and expertise (Flamm 233-37; 351; Baker 383-86; Dempster 526-27; Kimerling 872-73). The atmospheric gases—oxygen, nitrogen, argon, krypton and xenon—are produced commercially by the cryogenic liquifaction and fractional distillation of air. Air consists of about 78 percent nitrogen, 21 percent oxygen, and 1 percent argon and traces of other elements, including krypton and xenon (CX 335Z). It is cooled to approximately -300° F, at which point it is a liquid, and the elements are separated by virtue of their different boiling points (Kridl 2132-33, 2139; Flamm 264-66; Baker 368). Air separation plants necessarily produce oxygen and nitrogen as co-products, although in many instances only one product is marketed while the other will be vented (Kridl 2159-61). These plants can be designed so as to derive argon, krypton and xenon in addition (Dempster 515; Kridl 2165). Regardless of the purpose for which it is used, all oxygen is identical and is produced in similar plants (Baker 372; Loveman 603; Cunningham 954; Kuehn 1145). Gases produced in air separation plants accounted for over 63 percent of the total value of all industrial gases shipments by primary manufacturers in the United States in 1972 as reported by the Bureau of the Census (CX 312C-D). The science of cryogenics or low temperature is also used in the production of other industrial gases such as helium and hydrogen (Flamm 271-72, 275). Other industrial gases such as hydrogen and carbon monoxide are also produced together in the same plants (Baker 425). Operation of cryogenic facilities for the production of industrial gases requires highly specialized knowledge and can be quite hazardous to the people concerned as well as surrounding communities (Baker 384).

42. The industrial gases industry has two marketing aspects: tonnage and merchant. Tonnage refers to the supply to customers whose demand at a particular location is sufficient to justify the construction of a plant at or near the customer's facility which is devoted entirely or primarily to providing that customer with gaseous product delivered through a pipeline (Flamm 317-19; 329; Giordano 1914-15, 1917-18). Typical tonnage users include Ford Motor Company, U.S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, Armco Steel, Republic Steel, Allied Chemical, McLough Steel and National Steel (Giordano 1917; Baker 442-43; Perkins 802-03; Flamm 290-96). Merchant refers to other sales of gases, which take place in much smaller quantities and in which the gas is transported to the customer by truck or rail (Giordano 1985-86). The merchant side of the business is also composed of two segments: bulk liquid and cylinders. Bulk liquid refers to gases shipped in relatively large quantities in liquid form (Giordano 1914-15; Flamm 318-19). In cylinder distribution, the gas is distributed in gaseous form under high pressures in small metal cylinders (Giordano 1926). The only gases which are produced and sold in the United States on a tonnage basis are oxygen, nitrogen and hydrogen (Giordano 1918). Gases distributed as bulk liquid include oxygen, nitrogen, argon, hydrogen, carbon dioxide and helium (Giordano 1927-28). All of the gases are sold in cylinders.

43. Gases that are manufactured as liquids for economics of distribution are transported in bulk form in tank cars or trucks. Bulk liquid gases are used either as liquids or are converted by vaporization and used as gases (Flamm 317-19; Giordano 1913-16, 1927-28). Plants used to supply gases to customers either in liquid form or as gas in cylinders are referred to as merchant plants. It is common, however, for onsite tonnage plants to have merchant capacity, i.e., incremental to that required to supply onsite users, and used to supply other customers (Flamm 317-19; Giordano 1913-14, 1917-18, 1927-28; Baker 2740-41). The marketing of bulk liquid gases and cylinder gases requires special skills and equipment designed to withstand extreme temperatures. The products are shipped over highways in conformance with rather strict Federal regulations and delivered to especially designed containers where it is stored and released to meet individual customer needs. All of this equipment is very specialized and used almost exclusively within the industrial gases industry (Baker 384; Kridl 2137). Industrial gases are also marketed through a network of independent distributors (Flamm 218-19, 300, 344-45; Baker 428, 2757; Dempster 574; Loveman 578; Cunningham 923).

44. The cluster of products and services offered by industrial gases companies, the common technology and specialized equipment utilized in the production, distribution and marketing of industrial gases by the industry, the identity of marketing methods and customers, the recognition and identification by the industry members of only other industrial gases producers and sellers as their competitors, trade associations which recognize only industry members, and the reporting system utilized by federal agencies over a long period of time all clearly establish the industrial gases industry as a relevant line of commerce for analyzing the effects of the challenged acquisition (Findings of Fact 32-43).

B. Relevant Geographic Market

45. The three largest industrial gases companies in the United States—Linde, Air Products, and Airco, all produce and market industrial gases throughout the United States (Flamm 231; Baker 395-96; Giordano 1922, 1938, 2005-06; Airco Admissions, Pars. 8, 9, filed Apr. 10, 1974). Airco bids for both tonnage and merchant accounts nationwide (Giordano 1922). Chemetron, Inc., another major producer, markets industrial gases throughout virtually all the United States (Cunningham 920). The smaller companies which sell industrial gases in tonnage quantities do not sell nationwide. Big 3 sells only in the Southern part of the country (Flamm 321). Liquid Air sells no significant amount in the Northeast and Midwest (Dempster 544). Burdett of Cleveland sells primarily in the Midwest (Loveman 580). The other smaller companies are even more localized; i.e., Northern Gases (Milwaukee and Wisconsin), and Alabama Oxygen (Alabama, parts of Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee)(Heckel 731; Kimerling 856-57).

46. The cost of distributing merchant quantities of industrial gases is substantial and this high distribution cost limits the distance to which most industrial gases can be shipped economically. Oxygen and nitrogen are usually not shipped more than 100 to 300 miles (Flamm 316-17; Baker 448-49; Kimerling 882-83; Giordano 1928, 2019-20; Kridl 2180). Argon can be shipped somewhat longer distances (Flamm 320-21; Giordano 1928), but carbon dioxide is normally shipped shorter distances (Giordano 1928; see Flamm 338). Hydrogen can be marketed within 200 to 600 miles of the producing plant (Kimerling 882-83; Giordano 2007). Helium, since it is not commercially available in many parts of the world, is shipped much greater distances than are other industrial gases (Giordano 1928). The major producers are able to market merchant gas nationwide because they have numerous producing plants located throughout the United States; i.e., Linde has 70 to 100 plants, Air Products has a substantial number of plants, and Airco has at least 51 plants (Flamm 231; Baker 2740; RAX 7).

47. BOC was interested in becoming a nationwide competitor in the U.S. industrial gases market. According to BOC's Chairman, BOC would need more than 5 percent of the national market in order to become a viable competitor; and that had BOC acquired a small company, BOC would have been interested in expanding it into a national company (Smith 1837). The scope of Airco's operations throughout the United States was one of the primary reasons BOC chose to acquire a stock interest in Airco; it gave BOC national scope in one jump (Smith 1732-36).

48. Since the major industrial gases companies compete nationwide in both the tonnage and merchant segments of the industrial gases market, and since BOC's interest in the United States industrial gases market was on a nationwide basis, the relevant section of the country or geographic market in which to determine the probable competitive effects of BOC's stock acquisition of Airco with respect to the industrial gases market is the United States as a whole (Findings of Fact 45-47).

C. Market Performance and Concentration

(1) Growth and Demand

49. The United States industrial gases market is the largest industrial gases market in the world (Baker 391; Dempster 541; Smith 1728; Laister 2557). The industrial gases market in the United States is growing rapidly and many new applications for industrial gases have been developing (Flamm 245-46; Baker 391, 2718-19, 2722-23; Heckel 735; Cunningham 925-26). Industry witnesses anticipate an annual growth rate of up to 10 percent over the next 5 years (Baker 2719; Flamm 246). The U.S. market is, in fact, the most dynamic of the industrial gases markets in the world and presently provides more new business opportunities than all the other industrial gases markets in the world combined (Baker 2718).

50. Two significant new applications for industrial gases in the United States have been the development of nitrogen food freezing and the use of industrial gases in sewage treatment. The shortage of petroleum products has brought about additional new applications for industrial gases. Industrial gases are now being used in the production of synthetic natural gas or low-BTU gas that can be used for commercial purposes or in power generation. The elevated price of oil has also led to the production of gas for pipeline transmission by the combustion of coal with oxygen. Additionally, industrial gases are now being used to generate basic chemical feedstock for a number of chemical products such as fertilizers and methanol. These new applications have created demand for large tonnage plants by public utilities and by chemical companies. The scarcity of natural gas has also made economically prohibitive the use of ammonia for generating nitrogen for metallurgical processes. This has further increased demand for nitrogen produced by air separation. Another new application for industrial gases is by the steel industry. The high price of scrap metal has resulted in steel companies using liquid pig metals to produce more steel rather than melting scrap. This new technique increases the requirements of steel companies for oxygen (Baker 439-41, 2716-18, 2724-25; Heckel 735; Cunningham 925-26). The industrial gases market as of 1974 is "very buoyant," one industry witness testified (Baker 2716).

51. The new applications for industrial gases and the very high level of economic activity in the United States have led to substantial growth of the U.S. industrial gases market (Baker 2718). During the last 2 years, the volume of industrial gases shipments by Air Products, for example, has increased 50 percent for merchant gases and 25 percent for tonnage gases (Baker 2723). Further, Air Products' sales of industrial gases increased 25 percent from 1972 to 1973 (Baker 2771-72). The demand for the principal industrial gases products, particularly tonnage oxygen, has increased to such an extent that the engineering and manufacturing capacity of the U.S. industry is insufficient to meet the demand for construction of new plants (Baker 2727). Air Products has recently had to tell customers that it was unable to supply their requirements for new industrial gases plants (Baker 2760). Many of the industrial gases, particularly the air separation gases, have been in short supply in the U.S. in the last year to two years (Flamm 239-40; Baker 403-04, 437-38; Dempster 543-44, 556-57; Perkins 787; Kimerling 871-72; Cunningham 924-25). Some industrial gases are, in fact, in such short supply that Linde has had to allocate customers (Flamm 240).

(2) Pricing

52. Prices for industrial gases have also increased in the last 2 years (Baker 403, 2723; Kimerling 879; Cunningham 925). Linde increased prices 10-15 percent in April 1974, which was followed by Airco (Flamm 304). The price controls of the Cost of Living Council, however, prevented industrial gases prices from rising as significantly as they might have (Cunningham 950). Mr. Baker of Air Products testified that prices have firmed since 1970, that marginal costing and marginal pricing have disappeared and full costing and full pricing have become the standard (Baker 2723).

53. There is no price data in the record as such. BOC respondents contend that price competition in the industry is extremely rigorous, and reference is made to testimony of industry executives (Dempster 556; Baker 436-37; Flamm 305). This testimony is, however, somewhat equivocal. Mr. Flamm of Linde stated that between Linde, Air Products and Airco—"they argue their service is equal, I would say a fair amount of vigorous price competition." (Flamm 305). Further, this testimony, which is of the most general nature, must be viewed in perspective with the supply-demand situation existing during the past 2 years, and testimony that prices have firmed, marginal pricing has disappeared and full pricing has become the standard. Respondents also rely upon the observations in the Perham-Greenfield (BOC) report on the United States industrial gases market as of 1969-1970 (BOC RX 62). This report is, however, unreliable for the purpose of establishing actual price competition in the market, or the degree of price competition that actually existed. The report is not only self-serving, but it is double hearsay, consisting of what BOC officials reported industry executives told them. The report also covers the period 1969-early 1970. The supply-demand situation and industry pricing practices changed substantially from early 1970 to the end of 1973 when the challenged acquisition occurred (Findings of Fact 50-52).

54. BOC respondents placed several charts in evidence which demonstrate that actual unit value of major industrial gases has declined in recent years (BOC RX 246; BOC PF 123). Conclusions regarding prices have been drawn from data compiled by the Bureau of the Census on the total value and quantity of shipments of the various gases, f.o.b. plant, with the unit value (i.e., the ratio of total value of shipments to total quantity of shipments) used as an approximation of price. These conclusions have some validity when applied to the tonnage segment of the market because pipeline distribution is cheap and distribution expense is not a significant cost element. In the merchant segment of the market the conclusions are meaningless because distribution costs are a significant factor in pricing, and the f.o.b. plant values utilized by BOC do not take into account such expenses. Further, declining unit value has little significance in establishing that the marketplace is highly competitive. The basic pattern in the industry has been an increase in volume purchased by individual customers and a trend toward pipeline delivery. Thus, the increasing use of tonnage oxygen with low delivery costs has had an averaging-down effect on the unit value of shipments. Economics of scale in production and delivery has also effected lower unit costs (Baker 2745-46).

(3) Structural Features

55. BOC respondents also contend that there are structural features of the industry which assure price competition and prevent oliogopolistic pricing practices. These features are backward integration by tonnage users, the high fixed costs in the industry, concentration and economic power on the buyers' side, and product homogeneity (BOC PF 130, et seq.). There has been some vertical integration by large users of industrial gases into producing their own requirements of certain gases. The record, however, does not reflect any trend towards vertical integration, nor does it show any significant existing threat that customers will back integrate. The probable pricing effect of the threat of back integration is speculative; no direct evidence of effect has been presented. Back integration is not practical for all industrial gases. The record does not establish the percentage of potential customers which have vertically integrated. Further, the potential for integration is confined to tonnage customers; it has no effect on the merchant market. The record does establish that potential customers which might seek to back integrate must look, in large measure, to industrial gases companies to construct a plant (Smith 1669). In periods of shortage, such as existed in the market in 1973-1974, industrial gases companies were over-committed and were refusing requests to construct plants (Baker 2727). Thus, the threat of back integration is minimal. Back integration by large buyers is present in many industries and there is no showing that the effect of such possibility on pricing in the industrial gases industry is more significant or as significant as in other industries. In fact, the record does contain evidence that back integration has had little effect on pricing. Air Products, a major industry factor, normally makes a profit on tonnage gases (Baker 2741). Industry witnesses testified that companies that have back integrated normally sell any surplus production to an industrial gases company for distribution to the general market (Baker 2744; Flamm 345). Further, the companies that have to some extent back integrated, are not looked upon as possible entrants into the industrial gases industry (Baker 443, 2743-44).

56. A significant feature of the industrial gases industry is the fact that fixed costs are quite high in relation to the total cost of producing atmospheric gases. The largest elements of cost are depreciation on the physical plant and power cost. Because of this, BOC respondents argue that as a matter of economic theory, there should be extreme price competition in the industry, citing F. Scherer, Industrial Market

Structure and Economic Performance, 192-198 (1970). As complaint counsel point out (CCRB, p. 28), according to Dr. Scherer, as a matter of economic theory there should be price competition in high fixed cost industries during periods of oversupply and overcapacity, but in actual practice firms in high fixed cost industries avoid price competition. As explained by Mr. Scherer:

> Recognizing the temptations confronting them, firms in high fixed cost industries seem to exercise extraordinary restraint in their pricing actions, and when tacit restraint fails, they have an unusually high propensity to scurry into formal collusive agreements. (Id. at 195).

In recent periods, there has been a very tight supply situation in industrial gases. Thus, the economic theory relied upon by BOC respondents can be given little weight in establishing extreme price competition.

57. For reasons already stated, BOC respondents' other two arguments, economic power of the buyers and product homogeneity, afford little proof of extreme price competition. A substantial part of the industrial gas market—the merchant market—is composed of small purchasers. Even the large purchasers of certain gases purchase other gases in small quantities. Thus, the economic power of the buyers is lessened by other market factors. The effect of product homogeneity on pricing is tempered by an emphasis on service competition (Flamm 305). There is some indication that instead of extreme price competition, the dominant firms in the industrial gases market engage in interdependent and parallel behavior. At a private meeting on Sept. 6, 1973, Airco's Chairman, George Dillon, told Mr. Smith, BOC's Chairman, that the U.S. industrial gases market had stabilized, and "the three main competitors no longer encroach on each others' area of domination." (CX 95D). Therefore, the evidence of record does not support a finding of extreme price competition.

(4) Profitability

58. BOC respondents contend that the industrial gases industry has not been profitable in comparison to other manufacturing and chemical industries (BOC PF 151, et seq.). BOC's reliance is based upon consolidated returns of industrial gases companies which are engaged in many lines of business (BOC RX 254). Consolidated returns of corporations engaged in several lines of commerce shed little light on the profitability of individual segments of their business. RAX 7, Airco's 1973 annual report, shows that in 1973, industrial gases, cryogenic, welding and cutting equipment accounted for 44.9 percent of sales and 52.7 percent of earnings; in 1972, these divisions accounted for 48.7 percent of sales and 60.8 percent of earnings. Thus, this segment of Airco's business was more profitable than the other segments. BOC respondents also claim, on the basis of Dr. Andrew Kridl's testimony, that the industrial gases operations of the diversified companies are less profitable than their other operations (Kridl 2196-98). Dr. Kridl's testimony, however, is diametrically opposed by the Stanford Research Institute study in which Dr. Kridl participated. The S.R.I. study concludes that the industrial gases portion of the operations of these diversified companies is more profitable than the other activities of the companies (CX 345J, in camera; see CX 345C, in camera). The S.R.I. study also indicates that the U.S. industrial gases market is more profitable than industrial gases markets in Western Europe (CX 345I, in camera; see also 345M, in camera). Thus, the record evidence on profitability is equivocal at best. No hard evidence on rate of return on industrial gases was placed in the record. BOC's attempt to utilize information in the Commission's investigative files on rates of return produced summaries of doubtful probative value (BOC RX 254; Topkis 2693). The record is clear, however, that no industrial gases company has abandoned the market, or any segment of the market because of low profitability. In fact, the major companies are expanding capacity rapidly (Flamm 289, 322-23; Baker 438, Dempster 558; Giordano 1962-63, 1991-92).

(5) Concentration

59. Firms that produce and sell industrial gases are required by law to report to the Bureau of the Census the quantity and net selling value, f.o.b. plant, of the industrial gases produced and shipped by them (CX 299A-D; CX 300A-D; CX 298A-D). The Bureau of the Census publishes annual reports entitled "Current Industrial Reports" of the yearly shipments of industrial gases by manufacturers classified in the industrial gases industry, SIC 2813 (CX 312A-K).

60. The Bureau of the Census also publishes a "Census of Manufacture" report which sets forth for every fifth year the value and quantity of industrial gases shipments by all manufacturers (CX 296A-F). The manufacturers not classified under SIC 2813 that produce industrial gases are those companies which produce industrial gases as other than their primary product at a given establishment; generally such gases are produced for their own use. These companies occasionally have surplus gases which they generally wholesale to industrial gases companies on a spot basis (Flamm 345, 354-55; Baker 2743-44). These companies do not market industrial gases on the open market and are not considered by industrial gases companies to be part of the industrial gases industry (Flamm 345-46; Kimerling 885; Cunningham 952-53; Baker 2743-44). Accordingly, those companies are not part of the relevant market in this proceeding (Finding of Fact 67).

61. The total value of industrial gases shipments f.o.b. plant in the U.S. for 1972 reported to the Bureau of the Census by those firms primarily engaged in the manufacturing of industrial gases for sale was $595 million (CX 296A). The total value of industrial gases shipments f.o.b. plant in the U.S. for 1972 reported to the Bureau of the Census by all manufacturers was $649 million (CX 296A).

62. See Confidential Finding of Fact.

63. The total value of industrial gases shipments f.o.b. plant for 1972 reported to the Bureau of the Census by the four largest U.S. producers and marketers of industrial gases was $414 million. The total value of industrial gases shipments reported by the four largest producers and marketers of industrial gases accounted for 69.6 percent of the total value of industrial gases shipments for 1972 by all primary manufacturers of industrial gases and 63.8 percent of the total value of industrial gases shipments for 1972 by all manufacturers (Confidential Finding of Fact 62).

64. The eight largest producers and marketers of industrial gases in the United States in 1972 were Linde, Air Products, Airco, Chemetron Corporation, Liquid Air, Inc., Big Three Industries, Liquid Carbonics Corporation, and Burdett Oxygen Company of Cleveland (Flamm 227-29; Baker 366-67; Heckel 746; Hines 757; Kimerling 864; Cunningham 921-22). The total value of industrial gases shipments f.o.b. plant for 1972 reported to the Bureau of the Census by the eight largest producers and marketers of industrial gases in the United States was $514 million, as adjusted on a pro forma basis to include the acquisitions of Liquid Air (Confidential Finding of Fact 62). The total value of industrial gases shipments reported by the eight companies accounted for 86.5 percent of the total value of industrial gases shipments for 1972 by all primary manufacturers and 79.3 percent of the total value of industrial gases shipments for 1972 by all manufacturers (Confidential Finding of Fact 62).

65. Over the past 5 years, top four concentration in the U.S. industrial gases market has increased significantly from 67 to 70 percent while top eight concentration has increased from 84 to 86.5 percent, based on total shipments by all primary manufacturers of industrial gases.

(Confidential Finding of Fact 62)

66. The increase in concentration in the U.S. industrial gases industry, as shown above, is also demonstrated by record evidence that there has been a considerable decrease in the number of industrial gases firms in the last 15 years as a result of acquisitions and mergers. Both Air Products and Liquid Air, Inc. have made significant acquisitions of industrial gases companies during this period. Air Products acquired three industrial gases producers in 1961: Southern Oxygen Company, Delta Oxygen Company, and Hill Industrial Gas Company. At the time of their acquisitions, these three companies had sales of approximately $12 million, $3 million and $1.5 million, respectively (Baker 409-11). Canadian Liquid Air Ltd. entered the U.S. industrial gases market in 1968 by acquiring American Cryogenics, Inc. American Cryogenics, Inc. later became Liquid Air, Inc. Subsequently, Liquid Air, Inc. acquired Industrial Air Products of Oregon in 1969, Gulf Oxygen Company of Lake Charles, La., and Dye Oxygen of Phoenix, Ariz., as of 1973. At the time of its acquisition, American Cryogenics had industrial gases sales of approximately $13.5 million per year. The other companies at the time of their acquisition by Liquid Air had industrial gases sales of approximately $7.7 million, $3 million and $6 million, respectively (Dempster 511, 518-19, 528-30, 552). A number of other small companies have also gone out of existence during this period through acquisitions and mergers (Kimerling 861-62; Baker 407-08).

67. BOC contends the Census universe relied upon by complaint counsel is not a meaningful universe because the value of shipments excludes gases produced for consumption in the producing plant; the data excludes hydrocarbon gases such as propane, butane, propylene; sulphur dioxide and chlorine; and the value of helium produced in government plants (BOC PF 161-65). BOC's contentions, while

[2] Value of industry equipment figures as reported for 1967 are not strictly comparable with 1972 data. Shipments included in 1967 data but not included in 1972 data are values of all secondary products primary to other industries, values of miscellaneous receipts for contract work on materials owned by others, scrap, salable refuse, repairs, etc., and value of resales i.e., products resold in the same condition as bought (RX 72F, n. 3).

factually accurate, are without merit. The relevant market, as previously found, is the production and distribution of industrial gases by the industrial gases companies. Industrial gases produced for in-house consumption are not part of this market as such gases are not resold in the marketplace (Flamm 345). Further, the industrial gases industry does not consider such production a part of the industrial gases business (see Flamm, 294-95). Hydrocarbon gases such as propane, butane and propylene are not considered part of the industrial gases industry, but a part of the petroleum industry (see Finding of Fact 39; Baker 426). Chlorine is not considered an industrial gas (Flamm 319; Kridl 2140). The record contains little evidence of the value of helium produced in government plants; however, the government does not participate in the industrial gases industry and hence is not part of the relevant market in this proceeding.

68. The Census figures showing value of shipments of industrial gases produced by all producers is $649 million in 1972, as compared to value of shipments of industrial gases produced by plants classified in the industrial gases industry of $595 million. This difference in value of $54 million could be accounted for by production by back-integrated producers who have a surplus, or by petroleum companies and chemical companies that have a surplus of in-house industrial gases production. The record establishes that this production is primarily sold to industrial gases companies which resell in the marketplace (Flamm 272, 354-55; Giordano 1924-25). Thus, this production is marketed by industrial gases companies although not reflected in Census figures for the industrial gases industry.

69. The universe figures utilized by complaint counsel and adopted by this Initial Decision do not include industrial gases sold by industry companies but not reported to the Bureau of the Census in SIC 2813, such as propane, etc. To this extent the total universe figures are understated. However, as previously found, these gases account for an insignificant percentage of sales by industrial gases companies (see Finding of Fact 39).

70. In sum, industry concentration figures proposed by complaint counsel based on Bureau of the Census reports and heretofore found (see Findings of Fact 62-65) appear to be an accurate basis upon which to assess industry concentration and to evaluate the economic effects of the challenged acquisition of Airco by BOC.

(6) Barriers to Entry

71. There are substantial barriers to entry into the production and marketing of industrial gases in the United States. The principal barriers to entry into the U.S. industrial gases market are high capital cost, technical knowledge and expertise, and marketing capability (Flamm 233-37; Baker 383-86, 2734-35; Dempster 526-27; Kimerling 872-73; Cunningham 944).

72. The production and marketing of industrial gases in the United States is capital intensive. Substantial capital is needed for production plants. For example, the cost of a 250-ton air separation plant and related equipment is $7 or $8 million dollars (Cunningham 944). Large plants cost up to $16 million (Giordano 1939-40). There is a considerable time lapse between the decision to build and the actual construction of an industrial gases plant. The time for bringing an air separation plant on stream can be as long as two years (Flamm 235).

73. A high degree of technical expertise, particularly in the field of chemical engineering, is required to produce and transport industrial gases. The cryogenic facilities which produce atmospheric gases are operated at extremely low temperatures and can be hazardous to employees and the surrounding community if misoperated. Many industrial gases are distributed at low temperatures in bulk liquid form and must be transported in specially constructed vessels and equipment designed to withstand extreme temperatures. Additionally, there are strict federal regulations which must be adhered to in shipping industrial gases (Baker 384; Giordano 1915-16).

74. The marketing of industrial gases requires an in-depth understanding about how the gases are produced and purified and how their integrity is maintained. Marketing also requires a thorough knowledge of the physical and chemical properties of industrial gases as the gases are used in a wide range of industries and each industry has many different applications. Knowledge of the unique applications of industrial gases by customers in different industries is therefore paramount to success in the marketing of industrial gases (Baker 384-85; Dempster 527; Kimerling 872). Further, a firm needs an established reputation as a technically sound supplier of industrial gases before its products will be accepted in the marketplace. A company that is not known in the marketplace as a technically sound supplier of industrial gases cannot achieve marketing success in the U.S. market simply by employing three or four people with previous marketing experience (Flamm 351-52; Baker 2734-35; Laister 2671).

75. The necessity of technical and marketing experience and capabilities for successful entry into the U.S. industrial gases market is clearly demonstrated by the unsuccessful attempt by Standard Oil of New Jersey (now Exxon, Inc.) to enter the U.S. industrial gases market by acquiring American Cryogenics, Inc. Standard's expertise was not in the industrial gases field and American Cryogenics, Inc. at the time Standard sold it to Canadian Liquid Air was losing $4 million a year on sales of $20 million. Canadian Liquid Air did have the necessary expertise and capabilities to produce and market industrial gases and consequently turned American Cryogenics, Inc. into a profitable operation (Dempster 518-21, 526-27).

76. In contrast to the many U.S. industrial gases firms that have gone out of existence in the last 15 years, there have been only two entrants of any consequence that have come into the market during the period, both entering by acquisition. Canadian Liquid Air entered the U.S. market by acquiring American Cryogenics, and Houston Natural Gas entered by acquiring Liquid Carbonic (Baker 406; Dempster 518-19).

D. Competitive Impact of the Acquisition

(1) The Combination of BOC and Airco

77. Airco produces and markets industrial gases throughout the United States, and it is one of the largest firms in the industrial gases market in terms of value of shipments (Giordano 1922, 38; Finding of Fact 62, in camera). Airco is therefore not a toehold (Topkis 913).

78. BOC produces and markets industrial gases in a multitude of countries and is reportedly the second largest industrial gases company in the world (Flamm 262; see also Smith 1801-08). Prior to BOC's stock acquisition in Airco, BOC was the only one of the three largest industrial gases companies in the world that was not operating in the United States. The largest industrial gases company in the world prior to BOC's acquiring a stock interest in Airco was thought to be L'Air Liquide, and the third largest was Linde (Flamm 262). L'Air Liquide and Linde are already in the U.S. industrial gases market. L'Air Liquide entered in the U.S. market through its Canadian affiliate, Canadian Liquid Air, which acquired American Cryogenics, and operates in the United States as Liquid Air, Inc. (Dempster 518-19).

79. See Finding of Fact, in camera.

(2) Elimination of BOC as a Perceived Potential Entrant

80. BOC was recognized by members of the industrial gases industry in the United States as one of the few firms possessing the capital resources, technical knowledge and expertise and marketing capability required to successfully enter the U.S. industrial gases market (Flamm 237-38, 248-51; Baker 385-86; Dempster 543, 561; Muller 681; Giordano 1992). Further, BOC was recognized by Linde and Air Products, two of the largest firms in the industry, as the firm most capable of entering the U.S. industrial gases market (Flamm 250; Baker 390). Additionally, BOC was one of a few firms perceived by members of the industrial gases industry in the United States as being able to enter and likely to enter into the U.S. industrial gases market (Flamm 251-52, 335; Baker 393; Loveman 594; Muller 681-83; Kimerling 876). Linde and Air Products perceived BOC as the firm most likely to enter the U.S. industrial gases market (Flamm 251-52; Baker 393). Linde had considered BOC a potential entrant for the past two to three years (Flamm 335). Mr. Loveman of Burdett of Cleveland testified that "* * * over the next five years, I would expect that they [BOC] would [enter the U.S. market] in some connection." (Loveman 594).

81. BOC's interest in entering the U.S. industrial gases market was well known throughout the U.S. industrial gases industry. BOC participated in the manufacturing and selling of industrial gases production facilities in the United States through a joint venture with Airco from 1967 through 1971 (Finding of Fact 5; Smith 1717-19, 1810; Giordano 1948-50; Laister 2535). During 1969-1970, BOC investigated the industrial gases industry in the United States for the purpose of entering the market and while doing so contacted numerous industrial gases firms in the U.S. market (CX 232A-Z-47, in camera). Further, in every year from 1970 through 1973, BOC representatives met with firms in the U.S. industrial gases industry to consider possible acquisition of those firms by BOC (see infra, Findings of Fact 90, 93, 96-102). It was generally known throughout the industrial gases industry in the United States that BOC had contacted firms in the industry about possible acquisition (Flamm 257-58; Dempster 545-46). Industry witnesses on cross-examination testified that their pricing and marketing decisions had not been affected by the perceived potential entry of BOC (Flamm 336-37; Dempster 567-68; Kimerling 881-82; Baker 446).

82. Aside from BOC, the only other firms considered by members of the industrial gases industry in the United States as possible entrants into the U.S. market were Messer Greisheim and Linde A.G., both of Germany, and AGA of Sweden (Flamm 250; Baker 390). Messer Greisheim and Linde A.G. operate as a joint venture in entering markets outside of Germany (Baker 2747-48). Linde A.G. lacks BOC's marketing skills as it is primarily a manufacturer of industrial gases plants for sale to others. Its marketing area for industrial gases is limited to Germany, Central Europe and South Africa (Muller 719-20). Messer Greisheim does not have the technology nor marketing capabilities of BOC and does not market industrial gases to any extent outside of Germany (Muller 720-22). BOC was of the opinion that Messer Greisheim's interests lay in other directions than industrial gases (CX 76L, in camera). AGA of Sweden was perceived as having some of the prerequisites for entry; however, its resources were questionable (Smith 1760; CX 76L). Although Japanese companies have the resources and technology to enter the U.S. industrial gases market, none has ever invested in industrial gases markets outside Japan (Smith 1761).

83. None of the companies in the United States which operate industrial gases plants for their own use [vertically integrated] are considered potential entrants into the industrial gases market by members of the U.S. industrial gases industry, nor are they considered to have the expertise and capabilities needed to enter into the open market sales (Flamm 346; Baker 443-44, 2743-44; Dempster 564). None has entered the industrial gases market to date; all have sold their surplus production, if any, to industrial gases firms (see Finding of Fact 55). Thus, it is concluded that BOC was the most likely potential entrant into the U.S. industrial gases market and was so perceived by members of the industrial gases industry.

(3) Elimination of BOC as an Actual Potential Entrant

(a) BOC's Incentives for Entry Into the U.S. Market

84. The Board of Directors of BOC was convinced that it was in BOC's economic interest to further expand its international operations. On Feb. 25, 1974, in a statement to shareholders, Mr. Smith, chairman of BOC, declared that the acquisition of 4 million shares of Airco stock enabled BOC to pursue its "long-term objective." Further, Mr. Smith explained that BOC's future lies in expanding its international operations, especially in industrial gases and equipment (CX 292D, H).

85. The history of BOC demonstrates its commitment to expansion of its industrial gases operations throughout the world. BOC began as a small Scottish company toward the end of the last century. Its industrial gases operations eventually extended throughout the United Kingdom and Ireland. By 1956, BOC had expanded beyond the U.K. into the following countries: Australia, South Africa, Canada, India, Pakistan, Singapore, Malaya, Hong Kong, East Africa, Rhodesia, the Philippines, Fiji, and New Guinea (Smith 1800-03). Since 1956, BOC has expanded into Italy, Indonesia, Thailand, Bangladash, and most recently into Brazil (Smith 1806-07). On August 18, 1969, BOC's Chairman stated that it was BOC's "declared policy" to become more "truly international." (CX 36A-B; Muller 652; Smith 1723, 1822). BOC officials realized that BOC could not operate as a truly international industrial gases company without being in the U.S. industrial gases market (Smith 1728-29, 1731; Laister 2557, 2659).

86. In addition to BOC's commitment to becoming a truly international company (which would involve entry into the U.S. market), there were several other significant incentives for BOC's entry into the industrial gases market in the United States. First, the U.S. market is the largest industrial gases market in the world and also the most important and advanced market in the world (CX 36A-B; Smith 1728; Laister 2557). BOC also regarded the United States as the strongest economy in the world, and one that still enjoyed a respectable growth rate (Giordano 2000-01). Over the past two years, the growth rate in the United States for industrial gases has been substantial and this growth is projected to continue (Baker 2722-23).

87. Further, BOC desired to be "in tune" with the U.S. industrial gases market not only because of its size and opportunity for growth, but also because it is a source of substantial new technology (Smith 1728). The U.S. market presently provides more new applications for industrial gases than all the other industrial gases markets in the world combined (Baker 2718; Findings of Fact 49-51). Also BOC had determined that it was to its advantage to be in the U.S. market, as its major international competitors participate therein (Smith 1729; Laister 2658). BOC planning documents prepared in August 1969, stated that "[T]here must be competition with American-based international corporations on their home grounds, at least in certain selected businesses, if [BOC] is to be confident of survival internationally against American-based firms." (CX 38C.)

(b) BOC has the Capital Resources, Technical Knowledge and Marketing Expertise for Entry into the U.S. Industrial Gases Market

88. BOC has the necessary capital to enter the U.S. industrial gases market (Topkis 237, 874; Smith 1760). The establishment by BOC of approximately 40 subsidiaries in countries around the world attests to BOC's immense capital resources (Smith 1644-45). Sales in fiscal 1973 for the BOC group were approximately $765 million (CX 292Q). Capital employed in 1973 for the group was over $715 million (CX 272Z-3), total assets were $906,412,000 as of September 30, 1973, with current liabilities and provisions of only $272,467,000 (CX 292S).

89. BOC has the technical and marketing expertise to enter the U.S. industrial gases market and was so viewed by Airco and other industry members (Topkis 237, 874-75; Flamm 248, 249; Baker 383-85; Dempster 543; Muller 697; Smith 1760; Giordano 1950, 1992). BOC's history of entering industrial gases markets around the world clearly demonstrates BOC's marketing, organizational and managerial skills. Of the 19 countries outside the U.K. that BOC has entered for the production and marketing of industrial gases, 14 were de novo entries; 5 were entries by acquisition of small companies (Smith 1803-07). BOC has become the dominant company in many of the industrial gases markets it has entered (CX 301Z, in camera). The executive of the largest industrial gases company in the United States testified that the same marketing expertise BOC exploited in entering industrial gases markets throughout the world could be used by BOC to enter the industrial gases market in the United States (Flamm 238). Further, BOC has already had the benefit and experience of participating in the U.S. industrial gases market from 1967 to 1971 through its joint venture with Airco in the marketing of industrial gases production plants (Airco Admissions, Pars. 87, 88, filed April 10, 1974; Kimerling 876; Smith 1717-19, 1810; Giordano 1948-50; Laister 2535).

(c) BOC's Investigation of Methods of Entry Into the U.S. Industrial Gases Market

(i) Dr. Muller's Consultancy

90. BOC has actively pursued various possible means of entering into the U.S. industrial gases market since at least 1968. In April 1968, BOC entered into a consulting agreement with Dr. Albert Muller. One of the primary responsibilities of Dr. Muller was the development of promising business opportunities for BOC in the United States (CX 111A). Dr. Muller has a strong background in industrial gases (Muller 648). On behalf of BOC, Dr. Muller contacted several U.S. companies in 1968, including the Clinton Oil Company, for the purpose of a possible joint venture in helium, Will Ross, Inc., with respect to the possible acquisition of its Mathieson Special Gases Division by BOC, and Gardner Cryogenics ("Gardner") regarding possible acquisition of that company by BOC (CX 186L-N; Muller 654-55). Canox, the Canadian subsidiary of BOC, had previously considered acquiring Gardner, which is a producer and marketer of helium in the United States (CX 208Z-66). At the time of Dr. Muller's contact, BOC gave serious consideration to acquiring Gardner. Dr. Muller held several meetings with William Gardner, president of Gardner. BOC also had a study made of the possibility of acquiring Gardner (CX 15A-Z-8, CX 17).

91. In 1969, BOC adopted a policy of becoming more truly international and accordingly sought "profitable opportunities to extend its operations in the world's most important and advanced market." (CX 36A). BOC's management had decided that BOC should enter the U.S. market in its major lines of business (Muller 653, 656-57). In order that more attention could be devoted to this task, J. A. Perham, president of Canox, was directed to assume responsibility for all such activity. To permit Mr. Perham to devote the necessary time to this task, A. R. Dow was appointed executive vice president of Canox, relieving Mr. Perham of the responsibility for day-to-day operations of Canox (CX 36A-B; Muller 653, 656). Dr. Muller and Mr. Perham worked together in assessing and recommending profitable business opportunities in the United States to BOC (CX 29A). They were to devote their attention to product lines which were the same or complimentary to BOC's. They were to seek companies having sales between $1-50 million. Acquisition candidates with sales of $5-20 million were considered desirable by BOC (CX 29C-D).

92. In October 1969, Dr. Muller was told by the chairman of BOC to terminate all activities other than searching for opportunities for BOC in the U.S. industrial gases field (CX 42, CX 248A-B). In December 1969, the chairman of BOC informed Dr. Muller that BOC was going to be represented in the United States; the only questions were what, how, when and where (CX 47A).

93. As part of an overall study of the industrial gases market in the United States conducted by BOC between December 1969 and February 1970, Dr. Muller contacted several distributors of industrial gases in the United States for BOC (Muller 661-62; CX 121A).

94. In the spring of 1970, when Dr. Muller's consultancy contract expired, BOC instructed Dr. Muller to continue to forward to BOC any attractive prospects he discovered in the United States (CX 113, 114; Muller 669-70). In the summer of 1970, BOC employed Dr. Muller to assist Allan Perham in a further effort to acquire Gardner (Muller 679-80). Throughout Dr. Muller's association with BOC, BOC continually stressed its intention to enter the U.S. industrial gases market (CX 42, 47A; Muller 668).

(ii) Perham-Greenfield Study

95. By 1969, BOC had made a definite decision to enter the U.S. industrial gases market (CX 40A, CX 246). In the fall of 1969, BOC's planning group prepared a detailed study of the U.S. industrial gases market (CX 44, CX 246). In December 1969, BOC decided to investigate in depth the U.S. industrial gases market (CX 47). An extensive investigation was undertaken during which BOC contacted many U.S. industrial gases producers (CX 47, CX 232A-Z, in camera). The report on this investigation was completed in February 1970, and it was recommended that BOC not enter the U.S. industrial gases market at that time, but that this conclusion should not be considered final and that BOC should continue to look for future opportunities in that market (BOC RX 62B, in camera). After February 1970, BOC continued to have acquisition negotiations with producers in the market (Findings of Fact 96-102).

(iii) BOC's Efforts to Acquire Chemetron

96. In November 1969, Mr. Johnson of Loeb, Rhoades and Company, an investment banking firm, was told by BOC that BOC was interested in acquiring a U.S. industrial gases producer, and in particular, Chemetron (Johnson 832-33). In January 1970, BOC discussed with Chemetron the possibility of BOC acquiring a majority of Chemetron's stock (CX 223A; Johnson 833-35). Subsequently, BOC discussed with Chemetron the acquisition of a minority position in Chemetron with the later possibility of obtaining control (CX 223, 224, 225A).

(iv) BOC's Efforts to Acquire Burdett of Norristown

97. On Aug. 11, 1971, BOC discussed with Burdett Oxygen Company of Norristown (Burdett-Norristown) the acquisition of that firm and its affiliates by BOC. Also discussed at that time was the possible acquisition by BOC of National Welders, Selox, Alabama Oxygen and Gulf Oxygen (CX 250A; Perkins 792-93). Subsequently, a BOC official visited Burdett-Norristown to consider acquiring it (CX 254A, in camera). The visit by the BOC official lasted four days, during which he met all key personnel, inspected the plants and headquarters facilities and examined the books and records (CX 254A, in camera; Perkins 794-96). BOC continued to analyze Burdett-Norristown by checking out all the references Burdett-Norristown supplied to BOC (CX 254L-N, in camera; CX 255A-B, in camera). BOC subsequently informed Burdett-Norristown that although it was not then interested in acquiring the company, it had a continuing interest in the U.S. industrial gases market (CX 258).

(v) BOC's Efforts to Acquire Burdett of Cleveland

98. BOC considered Burdett Oxygen Company of Cleveland (Burdett-Cleveland) a likely acquisition candidate in 1969 (CX 40A). In 1969, BOC told Burdett-Cleveland that it would be interested if the company ever wished to dispose of its operations (CX 216). Mr. Perham and Mr. Greenfield of BOC visited Burdett-Cleveland during BOC's 1970 study of the U.S. industrial gases market and recommended that BOC watch to see if this firm would become available (CX 232D-E, in camera).

99. Early in 1970, an investment banker told BOC that 50 percent of the stock of Burdett-Cleveland could be purchased for $4-5 million. In April 1970, BOC informed the banker that it would be interested in a majority position in Burdett-Cleveland (CX 233A, CX 234). After BOC was told it was then impossible to obtain control, BOC told the banker that if the situation changed it would still be interested (CX 243). In September-October 1970, BOC told Burdett-Cleveland and its bankers that it was interested in buying Burdett's Niagara Falls, N.Y., industrial gases plant (CX 244A, CX 245).

100. On Oct. 15, 1973, BOC informed Burdett-Cleveland of its continued interest in acquiring Burdett-Cleveland (Loveman 592; see also Smith 1826). Burdett-Cleveland would not then sell out but stated it might do so within the next five years (Loveman 592). The interest expressed by BOC in Burdett-Cleveland convinced Mr. Loveman of Burdett-Cleveland that BOC would enter the U.S. industrial gases market at sometime in the future (Loveman 594).

(vi) Other Means of Entry Explored by BOC

101. Prior to the sale of Gulf Oxygen Company to Liquid Air, Inc. in 1972, a BOC representative asked John Hines of Gulf Oxygen Company if Gulf were for sale. Mr. Hines responded that it was not but that it would be available some day (Hines 759-60).

102. In 1972, BOC considered a joint venture with Chemetron to produce and market certain industrial gases, including oxygen and nitrous oxide (Keuhn 1155). BOC informed Chemetron during these discussions that it intended to enter the U.S. market for oxygen and nitrous oxide either on a "grass roots basis" or through acquisition (Keuhn 1152-53).

(d) Testimony of BOC Executives

103. The testimony of two of BOC's top executives was to the effect that BOC did not intend to enter the industrial gases market in the United States and that BOC would not have done so in the foreseeable future, but for the Airco transaction. Mr. Smith, chairman of the board of directors of BOC (Smith 1642), testified (1741-42, 1744):

> Q * * * Had you not acquired a stock interest in Airco, would BOC have entered the American, United States, gases business in any way in the foreseeable future?
> [Colloquy Omitted]
> JUDGE BARNES: You may answer, Mr. Smith. Do you recall the question?
> THE WITNESS: Yes. I cannot conceive any circumstances whatsoever that would bring BOC into the American market in the foreseeable future, barring Airco.

Similarly, Peter Laister, a director of BOC since 1969 (Laister 2528, 2533), testified (2552-53):

> Q After the Perham-Greenfield report was received and considered [February 1970] (and before the meeting) which you had with merchant bankers which you have mentioned here today [regarding Airco in June 1973], did BOC have any intention whatever to enter the U.S. gases business either on a Greenfield [greenfield] basis or by acquisition?

A There was no intention. Quite the reverse. We were quite determine[d], we decided when we had read the Perham-Greenfield report, that we would not enter on such a basis.

104. Mr. Smith testified that de novo entry would be extraordinarily costly. He estimated that it would be likely to cost $240 million and to take ten years to produce a viable national competitor, by which he meant a market share in excess of 5 percent (Smith 1835-36). He added that he could not "conceive the circumstances in which [he] would have persuaded [his] board to expend that amount of money and take that amount of time, and to have that deteriorating effect on [BOC's] return that they would have said yes." (Smith 1836-37). Entry by acquisition of a firm smaller than Airco was viewed by Mr. Smith as subject to most of the same difficulties as de novo entry.

105. These denials by BOC officials must be considered in the light of their other testimony given at the hearings. Mr. Smith testified that BOC had a stated objective of becoming a more international company (Smith 1723). In describing BOC's reasons for acquiring Airco, Mr. Smith testified that the first reason was BOC could work with Airco and:

> The second reason was that despite having had to turn our backs on the American market in the belief that there was no way in, the fact is that the American market is much the most powerful and largest in the world, and it must be of continuing interest to any company which has ambitions to act internationally.
> The third reason is that the American market, partly as a result of its size, is the source of much technology, much new development, and we have to be in tune with that.
> We have to keep pace with that.
> And there was no better way of doing it than by getting an interest in Airco.
> The international—the industrial gas business has moved in the last five, seven years to really being a well competitive situation.
> In fact, the single national economy is very rarely these days sufficient to maintain the pace of development and to get the best out of capital resources and technological resources.
> And this is why or partly why the world scene is dominated by a handful of international companies.
> Now, two of the international competitors with whom we meet at different parts in the world are American companies.
> And certainly we saw an advantage in being present in the same market in which our own international competitors are present.
> Q What two do you have in mind, sir?
>
> A Air Products and Union Carbide [Linde].
> Q All right.
> A And lastly, but I don't doubt just as important, is our belief that at the price we were paying for Airco we would get a reasonable return, and in circumstances much better than anything else we could have devised so far as American markets are concerned (Smith 1728-29).

* * * * * * *

Q There was reference in one of the documents which you identified and which was received in evidence, and indeed there was reference in your earlier testimony to BOC's ambition to be ever more international, ever more multi-national.

Did that play a role in this decision?

A Yes.

I don't believe that one can really claim to be a multi-national company without operating in the North American market. (Smith 1731).

* * * * * * *

Q What was the purpose in acquiring the stock in Airco?

A I think as a matter of fact, I have given this in my testimony yesterday, I am very happy to go through it again.

The first reason is that we have always been interested in the industrial gas market in America. While there is no virtue attached to the claim of being an international company, there are nevertheless benefits which can be obtained by being an international company, and quite clearly, those benefits are diminished if we don't have a position in North America. (Smith 1843-44).

Airco offered BOC the national [U.S.] market in "one jump" (Smith 1736).

106. Peter Laister, a BOC managing director, testified:

The next point is that we are an international company but in an international sense we were incomplete. We were not operating in America where three of our international competitors, Air Liquide, Union Carbide and Air Products, for example, operate. (Laister 2557).

* * * * * * *

A * * * There were a number of reasons why I personally thought that the tender offer was the right thing to do for BOC and for its shareholders.

First of all, it shows a return upon the investment.

Secondly, it adds to the international strength of BOC.

Thirdly, it gives us a place in the American market which we could see no other way of obtaining.

Q In the American industrial gas market?

A In the American industrial gas market.

Fourthly, it gives us the opportunity of benefiting in the longer term and with providing benefit to Airco in terms of some product or technological interchange, but that is for the future.

Lastly, it places us in the same marketplace as our major international competitors.

Q Let's discuss that. Why is that important to you, sir?

A Basically I think because if they operate in America and there is technological or other development or marketing development, then there are opportunities open to them which are not open to us. That is the first point.

Q Such as?

A Well, I don't know. You know, it is a very large marketplace. Certainly the use of liquid nitrogen for freezing has developed in America ahead of the way it has developed in Europe. Those who take part in America will obviously have that technology available to them, so it is all matter like that.

> I don't feel that we could pretend to be a fully international company in the long term if we had given no consideration to the possibilities of the American marketplace. (Laister 2658-59).

107. Although testifying that BOC could not enter the U.S. industrial gases market de novo or by toehold acquisition, Mr. Smith acknowledged that BOC has entered many industrial gases markets throughout the world on a de novo basis; in other countries, very small acquisitions served as a basis for market entry (Smith 1804-07). In Brazil, BOC is starting in the market with a tonnage plant where it does not have any merchant business (Smith 1807).

(e) BOC Documents

108. In 1969 and early 1970, Allan Perham, chairman of the board of Canox, and I. Greenfield, a member of BOC's London marketing research staff, were detailed by BOC to conduct an extensive study of the U.S. industrial gases business. The purpose of the study was two-fold:

> (i) To analyse the present and likely future situation in the American market, and to draw therefrom any lessons and experience which might have application in BOC Group. Subsequently,
> (ii) To consider whether there are any identifiable opportunities in USA which BOC might wish to exploit at some future date. (BOC RX 181-C; accord, CX 47A)

Perham and Greenfield conducted such a study of the U.S. industrial gases market, which included interviews and visits with participants in the industrial gases business in this country, collection of much data, and visits to American distributors (CX 44, CX 232). The Perham-Greenfield report was negative on entry at that time by BOC into the industrial gases business in the United States; however, the report noted that this conclusion was not final and that the situation should be subject to periodic review (BOC RX 62B).

Mr. Smith, BOC's chairman, testified (1710):

> Q Now, I would like to ask you, please, sir, following the receipt of the Perham-Greenfield report, what did you do about the US gases field afterward?
> A What we did was to continue to be very interested in what was going on in the American industrial gas market but what the Perham-Greenfield report told us was that it confirmed an existing belief which existed among all of the top management of the BOC Group was that there was no practical way of coming into the American market.

109. In July 1970, the BOC board of directors adopted priorities of investment and a budget for the development of its business through 1973. Contemporaneous BOC board minutes record these priorities and funds allocated for BOC development:

Following outline approved:

		Millions
1st:	For the UK	28.0
2nd:	For restoring BOC holdings in existing overseas subsidiaries to minimum 60%	3.1
3rd:	For expansion of existing overseas subsidiaries	5.0
4th:	For Europe	10.0
5th:	For Japan, USA and South America	3.9
		50.0 millions

(BOC RX 67A)

The funds allocated to the United States, Japan and South America included no sums for entering the industrial gases market (Smith 1714). Mr. Laister testified, however, that acquisitions are left out of planning documents when it is uncertain what acquisitions will occur in the future (Laister 2569-70). He also testified that:

> Quite obviously in any large business you can't read the future a few years out. (Laister 2621A).

(f) Feasibility of BOC's Entry

110. It was clearly feasible for BOC to enter the industrial gases market in the United States either de novo or by toehold acquisition (See Smith 1760). Further, there is no evidence which indicates the presence of any unique features in the U.S. market which would preclude entry by BOC in the same manner BOC entered many industrial gases markets around the world which has been accomplished by a de novo or "grass roots" entry, or by the acquisition of a small producer (Smith 1803-07). BOC entered the Canadian industrial gases market de novo after World War II and is now the third largest firm in that market with sales of $8 million (Smith 1759; Dow 2042; Laister 2560). BOC recently entered the Brazilian industrial gases market with a small plant (Smith 1006). The Brazilian market has a growth rate comparable to the U.S. market (Baker 2731). Other major producers have entered foreign markets successfully on a small basis. Air Products successfully entered Great Britain in 1957 as a de novo entrant. By 1973, Air Products held 25 percent of the industrial gases market in Great Britain (Baker 413-17). Air Products recently entered the Canadian market on a very small basis, having less than 1 percent of the market (Baker 2711-15).

111. Liquid Air, Inc. successfully entered the U.S. industrial gases market through the purchases of toehold firms in 1968, 1969, 1972 and 1973 (CX 335V-W; Dempster 528-30). At the time Liquid Air entered the U.S. market, it purchased American Cryogenics from Standard Oil of New Jersey. At that time, American Cryogenics was losing money at the rate of $4 million per year. Liquid Air was able to turn the company around, and with the acquisition of other small industrial gas producers, developed a substantial and profitable U.S. operation (Dempster 518-21, 526-27).

112. BOC could have entered the U.S. industrial gases market in any of several ways. It could have entered by acquiring one or several small producers of industrial gases; it could have entered by bidding on a tonnage plant; it could have added incremental capacity to the tonnage plant for sale in the merchant market; it could have entered into a joint venture as was discussed with Chemetron (see Finding of Fact 102); or it could have utilized any combination of the above. At the time BOC acquired the stock of Airco, there were and still are a number of attractive small U.S. industrial gases producers available for acquisition, including Burdett of Norristown, Northern Gases and Supply, and Alabama Oxygen (Heckel 736; Perkins 788; Kimerling 876; Baker 393, 2734-35, 2750, 2781; Flamm 260).

113. BOC argues that de novo entry would involve a very high cost (BOC PF 247-49). BOC's chairman estimated that de novo entry producing a viable operation—over 5 percent of national sales—would be likely to cost $240 million. This high cost would be coupled with uncertainty as to whether there would be a return on such an investment, and, if so, when such a return would be realized. Another obstacle to entry into the industrial gases business in the United States, according to BOC, is the need for "backup"—the supply of gas to major customers from alternative sources when the producer's supplying plant is out of service, either for scheduled maintenance or as a result of plant failure (Giordano 1931-32; CX 335Z). BOC also argues that major tonnage supply contracts in the industrial gas industry typically are for terms of 15 years (Baker 2739-40), and that it is not feasible to enter the tonnage end of the industry by soliciting existing customers of the firms in the business already.

114. None of these arguments are persuasive. BOC has entered markets around the world de novo and on a small basis. The record does not establish that it is necessary to immediately secure 5 percent of the national market. As to uncertainty as to whether there would be an adequate return, this is always a concern to any enterprise in a free competitive society. The health of the U.S. industrial gases market as of December 1973, is a strong indication that BOC could have entered the market, with an excellent chance of realizing a normal profit. There is no evidence that backup supplies are not readily available to all industry members (Loveman 585). There is no evidence that backup has caused any company to avoid any market in the world, or to avoid any contract of any kind. Backup may be a competitive obstacle, but it is not a barrier to market entry. As for long term tonnage contracts, BOC's opportunity for market entry is not limited to seeking existing customers under contract; BOC can compete for the new market demands which the record indicates existing firms were unable to satisfy.

115. BOC argues that the small companies which are in the U.S. industrial gases market are either unattractive investments or there is no showing they are available for acquisition (BOC PF 257-314). The record does establish that there are small companies in the industrial gases market and that they are available for acquisition now or would be in the future (Loveman 592; Perkins 788; Heckel 736, 746-48). The record does not establish whether they would be good investments or bad investments. Such a burden would be unrealistic. The record does establish, however, that Liquid Air entered the U.S. market by acquiring a company in 1968, that was losing $4 million per year. Liquid Air now has a profitable U.S. operation. The industrial gases market was much more attractive in 1973 than in 1968 when Liquid Air entered the market.

116. December 1973 would have been an opportune time for BOC to enter the U.S. industrial gases market either on a "grass roots" basis or through the acquisition and expansion of a small company (Baker 2734-35). BOC's apparent reason for acquiring Airco stock as its method of entry into the U.S. industrial gases market was that it undoubtedly offered BOC a substantial share of the U.S. industrial gases market at "one jump" with less risk to its investment. As a matter of fact, BOC had been considering purchasing Airco, or Airco's gases division, for several years (CX 37A, CX 40A; Laister 2540-41). It is thus concluded that BOC was an actual potential entrant into the U.S. industrial gases market as of December 1973.

IV. Inhalation Anesthetic Equipment

A. Relevant Product Market

117. The complaint alleges that one of the effects of the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, distribution or sale of inhalation anesthetic equipment, or any submarket thereof, throughout the United States or sections thereof (complaint, Par. 27). "Inhalation anesthetic equipment" (hereinafter IAE) is defined in the complaint as equipment and accessories used in the administration of gas for anesthetic purposes (complaint, Par. 1(b)). Dr. John Hedley-Whyte, an anesthesiologist, testified as complaint counsel's expert on IAE (Hedley-Whyte 1189-1294). He defined IAE as that equipment necessary and useful for the giving of inhalation anesthesia to patients (Hedley-Whyte 1196).

118. Complaint counsel issued a subpoena to the leading firms in the industry calling for sales of all IAE products (CX 316B, in camera; Kuehn 1140; Scott 1355-56; Schreiber 1060-63; Hedley-Whyte 1156-57, 1170). This subpoena listed the following products as comprising the IAE market:

(a) Anesthesia machines. The essential elements of an anesthesia machine are a cart and a cabinet which provide a framework for the other equipment, and yokes, regulators, needle valves and flow meters, vaporizers, breathing circuits (conducting tubes), masks, CO2 absorption cannisters and rebreathing reservoir bags (Cosgrove 2286-89, 2295, 2320-21).

(b) Anesthesia vaporizers. These are small metal or glass containers which convert a liquid anesthetic agent into vapor, combine it with a stream of carrier gas, which is delivered to the patient (Schreiber 1054, Cosgrove 2288).

(c) Rebreathing reservoir bags. There are two general systems used for the administration of inhalation anesthetics: rebreathing and non-rebreathing. In the former, some of the gas administered to the patient is recirculated to the patient again and again after carbon dioxide is first removed from the expired gas. In non-rebreathing systems, all the gas administered to the patient is fresh, and the patient's exhalations are not recirculated to him (Schreiber 1055; Cosgrove 2320; Hedley-Whyte 1200). The rebreathing reservoir bag collects the expired gas from a patient in a rebreathing system. These units retain the moisture in a patient's lungs and mouth (Cosgrove 2320; Schreiber 1055; Hedley-Whyte 1200).

(d) Anesthesia conducting tubes carry the gas from the anesthesia machine to the patient and may be either disposable or reusable. Typically, the reusable tubes are rubber and the disposable tubes are plastic (Cosgrove 2321; Schreiber 1055-56).

(e) Anesthesia airways are small curved tubes that are inserted into the patient's mouth in order to prevent him from biting endotracheal tubes that are inserted into the trachea (Hedley-Whyte 1202).

(f) Anesthesia face masks are used to conduct gas from the anesthesia conducting tube directly to the patient's nose and mouth (Cosgrove 2323-24; Schreiber 1056-57; Hedley-Whyte 1202-03).

(g) Connecting Y-pieces. In rebreathing systems, two conducting tubes lead from the anesthesia machine to the patient. One conducts fresh gas from the machine to the patient and the other carries the exhaled gas back to the machine. The Y-piece is a small rubber fitting that connects these two conducting tubes to the face mask (Cosgrove 2325; Schreiber 1056-57; Hedley-Whyte 1203).

(h) Adapters and fittings. Y-pieces typically have an inside diameter connection of 15 millimeters while older face masks often have 22 millimeter diameter connections. Adapters are used to connect these older type masks to the 15-millimeter Y-pieces (Schreiber 1057-58).

(i) Carbon dioxide absorption cannisters. In rebreathing systems, it is necessary to remove carbon dioxide from gas exhaled by the patient before recirculating the gas. Hence, anesthesia machines are normally equipped with a plastic and metal cannister which contains a chemical compound, called an absorbant, that absorbs carbon dioxide from the exhaled gas before it is recirculated (Schreiber 1058; Hedley-Whyte 1203-04). The absorption cannister is made from polypropylene plastic and steel castings obtained from ordinary foundries (Cosgrove 2297-98). The absorbants are manufactured by chemical companies (Kuehn 1172-74).

(j) Flow meters are used to control the flow of gas to the patient during anesthesia (Cosgrove 2293-94, 2287).

(k) Carts. Anesthesia carts are used to support drugs and equipment that may be needed in the operating room during an anesthesia procedure (Hedley-Whyte 1204).

(l) Yokes, handscrews and valves are used to maintain the anesthesia machine and attach gas cylinder to the machine (Cosgrove 2292; Schreiber 1059).

(m) Anesthesia ventilators are devices which mechanically assist and control a patient's breathing during anesthesia (Schreiber 1059; Hedley-Whyte 1205-06).

(n) Anesthesia respirometers measure the respiratory minute volume, i.e., the total volume of air breathed in one minute by a breathing patient (Schreiber 1059; Cosgrove 2328-29), and is an indication of the level of anesthesia, i.e., the level of unconsciousness of the patient (Schreiber 1059).

(o) Endotracheal tubes are long tubes inserted into the patient's trachea to keep the patient's airway free. They are connected to the anesthesia machine via the conducting tubes and conduct air or the anesthetic mixture into the patient's respiratory system (Cosgrove 2328; Hedley-Whyte 1206-07; Schreiber 1060).

Complaint counsel's subpoena specifications also included a category entitled "other." Some of the companies responding to complaint counsel's subpoena listed products not specifically mentioned in the specifications under this category. Dr. Hedley-Whyte testified that the items on complaint counsel's subpoena represented a listing of IAE products and to this listing he would add one other item-direct laryngoscopes. Direct larynogoscopes are small metal devices containing a light which permits the anesthesiologist to view the area behind the patient's tongue in order to facilitate insertion of endotracheal tubes through the voice box (Hedley-Whyte 1207-08). Any other products, according to Dr. Hedley-Whyte, would constitute an exceedingly small part of the overall IAE market (Hedley-Whyte 1197).

119. An anesthesia machine, the most significant product in the IAE market, consists essentially of a cart, cabinet, yokes, needle valves, flow meters, vaporizers, breathing circuits (conducting tubes), masks, CO2 absorbers and rebreathing reservoir bags (Cosgrove 2286-89, 2295, 2320-21). Ventilators are used in conjunction with an anesthesia machine and may be mounted directly on most anesthesia machines in use today (Cosgrove 2326; complaint counsel physical exhibit "A"-C8). Flow meters are used in both anesthesia and therapy procedures; however, anesthesia flow meters are designed specifically for the inhalation anesthesia apparatus (Porter 1309; Cosgrove 2287), and are not normally sold apart from the anesthesia machine (Cosgrove 2326). IAE products each have a very specific function, although there are a few exceptions to this generalization. Reusable and disposable endotracheal tubes are substitutable for one another, as are reusable and disposable face masks and conducting tubes, respectively. Although each product has a specific use, the anesthesia machine and attachments together provide the vehicle for administering anesthesia during surgical procedures.

120. IAE products have distinct physical characteristics which distinguish them from other types of inhalation equipment and accessories. Inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories must be semiconductive to prevent electrocution or explosions (Schreiber 1097-98; Hedley-Whyte 1201, 1205, 1229-30). Due to its necessary semiconductive property, the price of IAE is substantially higher than the price of inhalation therapy equipment and accessories. Although a few items of IAE can be substituted for items of inhalation therapy equipment and accessories in an emergency situation, the price difference between the two lines make any such substitution economically prohibitive (Hedley-Whyte 1201, 1229).

121. IAE is recognized by the medical profession and by firms in the industry as a separate and distinct product market. IAE is defined by the medical profession and by firms in the industry as those items utilized in the dispensing of anesthetic gases or the vapors of anesthetic liquids to the lungs of patients to be anesthetized, including surgical, dental, and veterinary anesthetic equipment and accessories (Schreiber 1041; Kuehn 1125; Hedley-Whyte 1196-98; Porter 1297-98). Such products have peculiar characteristics and end uses as they are the only products which are used together to directly administer anesthetic vapors.

122. The Z-79 Committee of the American National Standards Institute recognizes the IAE market as a separate and distinct market. This committee consists of the leading manufacturers of IAE, representatives of the medical professional societies in the United States and representatives of the Federal Government (Hedley-Whyte 1212-13). The Z-79 Committee is primarily concerned with the standards of design, performance and terminology of IAE (Schreiber 1081; Hedley-Whyte 1213). Standards set by the Z-79 Committee apply to surgical and dental inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories (Hedley-Whyte 1213-14).

123. Dental anesthetic equipment and accessories include nitrous oxide sedation units used in the inhalation of nitrous oxide for purposes of anesthesia. Dental anesthesia refers to the administration by inhalation of anesthesia gases whereby the patient is usually rendered unconscious. In contrast, dental analgesia refers to the administration of a local anesthetic by use of a syringe and needle and merely provides relief from pain rather than rendering the patient unconscious. Only in rare circumstances does nitrous oxide act as an analgesia rather than as an anesthesia (Hedley-Whyte 1197-98, 1246-48; Porter[3] 1298, 1306, 1331). Nitrous oxide sedation units are used for surgical procedures (Porter 1330-31). There is a cross-fertilization between the dental and medical anesthesia professional societies and a dentist may serve on the anesthesia staff of a hospital (Hedley-Whyte 1210). The level of sophistication and technology used in manufacturing dental anesthetic equipment and accessories is the same as that of surgical anesthetic equipment and accessories (Porter 1301, 1331-32).

124. Veterinary inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories are part of the overall IAE market (Schreiber 1041; Hedley-Whyte 1198). The principles involved in the manufacture and use of veterinary inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories are the same as those for human inhalation anesthetic equipment (Schreiber 1094-95, 1121-22; Hedley-Whyte 1198). Veterinary anesthesia machines and human anesthesia machines are interchangeable to a degree. Components are sometimes identical (Schreiber 1044-45). Human anesthesia machines are commonly used on animals (Schreiber 1094-95; Hedley-Whyte 1198-99). Ohio Medical Products Division of Airco (Ohio) manufactures both human and veterinary anesthesia machines (Cosgrove 2311).

[3] Porter's testimony consistently refers to "dental analgesia equipment." Porter's definition of dental analgesia equipment as apparatus used to measure and regulate the flow of oxygen and nitrous oxide to the patient through inhalation rather than intravenous means corresponds with the definition of dental anesthetic equipment and accessories used by Dr. Hedley-Whyte (1197-98, 1246-47). Therefore, Porter's reference to "dental analgesia equipment" in his testimony apparently refers to dental anesthetic equipment.

125. BOC contends that there are other products which should be included in the IAE market. These are products, the sales of which were reported by companies in response to complaint counsel's subpoena under the category "other," and products that were "mentioned" during the hearings (BOC PF 378-379). Complaint counsel have included some of these "other products in their IAE market while not including others (CCRB, Table I). The most significant differences between the parties as to what is in the IAE market is monitoring equipment, which complaint counsel have excluded (CCPF 142).

126. The medical profession does not recognize monitoring equipment as a part of IAE. Monitoring equipment gives feedback on the patient's general condition; i.e., temperature, pulse, blood pressure, heart action, but it is not used as a direct measure of the level of anesthesia (Hedley-Whyte 1250, 162; Cosgrove 2478-79). Monitoring devices are used in a limited number of surgical cases (Hedley-Whyte 1286-87). Some such devices are dangerous to use (Hedley-Whyte 1254-58). Ohio regards monitoring equipment as separate and distinct from IAE. Ohio does not manufacture monitoring equipment as it requires a different technology from that necessary for IAE. Mr. Cosgrove, executive vice president of Ohio, testified in regard to monitoring equipment:

> Judge Barnes: Why don't you make them?
> The Witness: Your honor, our technology lies in another direction. It has for years. It is a case of having to work very hard and spend large sums of money just to bring yourself up to the state of the art and that is being practiced by the other manufacturers. (Cosgrove 2364)

Different companies manufacture monitoring equipment than manufacture IAE; companies such as Hewlett-Packard and General Electric make monitoring equipment but not IAE (Hedley-Whyte 1262; Cosgrove 2363-64). The same type of monitoring equipment used inside an operating room is also used outside the operating room (Hedley-Whyte 1286; Cosgrove 2480-81); in fact, such equipment's primary usage is outside the operating room (Hedley-Whyte 1251, 1256, 1286-87). Most blood pressure monitoring in surgical procedures is by the same piece of equipment that is used in a doctor's office for routine blood pressure checks (Hedley-Whyte 1259, 1289). Because different departments will be using the same monitoring equipment, hospitals attempt to standardize on the monitoring equipment purchased (Hedley-Whyte 1263). Further, the hospital committee that purchases anesthetic equipment is separate from the committee purchasing monitoring equipment (Cosgrove 2481).

127. IAE is usually sold to the head of the anesthesia department in hospitals (Schreiber 1060), and it is only anesthesiologists and nurse anesthesiologists who work with IAE (Hedley-Whyte 1209-10). IAE products are also purchased by veterinarians and dental anesthetists.

B. Geographic Market

128. The relevant geographic market within which to assess the competitive effects of the BOC stock acquisition in Airco with respect to the IAE market is the United States as a whole. The leading manufacturers of IAE, including Airco and BOC subsidiaries Fraser Sweatman, Inc. and Harris Lake, Inc. sell such products throughout the United States (Schreiber 1061; Kuehn 1141; Scott 1355; Cosgrove 2310, 2436-37). There is no dispute as to the geographic market (BOC PF 399).

C. BOC's Operations in IAE

(1) International Operations

129. The Advanced Engineering Division of BOC, formerly the Equipment Division, manufactures and markets IAE (CX 3H, CX 10Z-8, CX 11Z-8). BOC had sold these products in the United States for at least ten years (Cosgrove 2439). During 1973, Medishield Corporation, Ltd., a subsidiary of BOC, consisted of 15 subsidiary companies selling inhalation anesthetic equipment and other medical products throughout the world (CX 292K). During 1973, Medishield Corporation, Ltd., had distributors in over 130 countries (CX 292K). BOC formed Medishield, Inc. to coordinate the activities of its North American medical interests (Smith 1784-85).

(2) Fraser Sweatman, Inc.

130. During 1972, BOC acquired Cyprane, Ltd., a United Kingdom company which manufactured anesthetic equipment, and their wholly-owned subsidiaries, Fraser Sweatman, Inc. (hereinafter FS) and Fraser Sweatman, Ltd. of Canada (CX 11L, CX 11Z-8; Smith 1781-82). As a manufacturer and as a distributor for Cyprane, Ltd., FS sold anesthetic equipment in the United States for general medical, dental and veterinary applications (CX 11Z-8). During the period fiscal year 1965 through fiscal year 1973, FS increased its U.S. sales of anesthetic equipment from $604,721 to $2,498,146 (CX 109K). In 1972, FS marketed a wide range of surgical, dental and veterinary inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories (CX 130-33, CX 135-48). FS has sold vaporizers to Ohio for the last three years (Cosgrove 2307-08).

(3) Harris Lake, Inc.

131. Harris Lake, Inc., a U.S. company (hereinafter HL), was incorporated in 1970 (CX 70A, CX 101A). During 1972, BOC owned 24 percent of the Harris Calorific Company, the parent of HL (Topkis 1153). During November 1972, HL became a manufacturer of anesthesia machines and distributor of respirometers for BOC (CX 51B, CX 94). During November 1973, BOC acquired full control of HL (CX 102D, CX 107). At the time of its acquisition, HL had approximately 3 percent of the U.S. anesthetic equipment market, although its position in Cleveland, Ohio [HL's location], was much greater (CX 101B).

D. Airco's Operations in IAE

132. Ohio is the dominant firm in the U.S. IAE market (CX 169B, in camera; CX 101B). Ohio has been recognized by the industry as the largest manufacturer, in terms of dollars, of IAE in the United States, since at least 1956 (Schreiber 1073, 1088; Kuehn 1156-57; Porter 1316; Cosgrove 2420-21). Ohio's major competitors in the U.S. IAE market in 1973 were Foregger Division of Air Products, Dupaco, and the two BOC subsidiaries, FS and HL (CX 169C, in camera; CX 101B; Schreiber 1073; Kuehn 1156-57; Porter 1316-17).

E. Concentration in the IAE Market

133. The data in the record concerning market shares of the companies in the IAE industry comes from subpoenas served by complaint counsel on 37 companies (CX 314-15, CX 316B, CX 317-31, CX 326, CX 329). The data concerning respondent companies was stipulated (CX 327, CX 330). There is no evidence as to how complaint counsel arrived at the names of the companies to be served with subpoenas. Complaint counsel's subpoena served on the companies called for net sales data by product category for all inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories including but not limited to the listing of products set forth in the subpoena specifications (CX 316B, in camera; Finding of Fact 118). A category of "other" was also provided in the subpoena. The subpoena also called for data showing all such products manufactured by each company to eliminate the possibility of double reporting of resale products (CX 316B, in camera). The listing of products on the subpoena was stated to be a substantially complete listing of IAE products (Finding of Fact 118).

134. Table I in the confidential section of this initial decision contains market share data compiled from subpoena returns and stipulations. This table is basically the same as that proposed by complaint counsel (CCRB, Table I, in camera). Table I data for BOC includes FS and HL sales as well as sales by BOC in the United States through other methods. Table I also includes one-half of BOC respirometers sold in the United States. Respirometers may be used in either inhalation anesthesia or inhalation therapy depending on the attached adaptor (Cosgrove 2493-94). BOC refused to allocate the sales of respirometers between these two markets although North American Draeger was able to do so (Schreiber 1050-52). On Table I, Narco Scientific Industries, Inc. includes Isolette, McKesson and Air Shields; Becton, Dickinson and Company includes Bard Parker; American Hospital Supply Corporation includes Pharmaseal Division; C. R. Bard, Inc. includes Med-Econ Plastics Division; and Sherwood Medical Industries, Inc. includes Aloe Medical.

135. The market share of the four largest manufacturers in the U.S. IAE market in 1972 was 64.5 percent and of the eight largest 87.9 percent (Table I, in camera).

136. The universe figure utilized in Table I is the total of all sales of IAE reported by the 37 companies which were served with subpoenas and respondents' stipulated sales. Complaint counsel did not include insignificant sales reported by the companies of items not in the IAE market. Complaint counsel also solicited testimony from industry executives as to their estimate of the total U.S. IAE market. Mr. Scott, general manager of Foregger, testified that the total IAE market was $30 million within an error range of 15 percent (Scott 1359). He listed 13 companies (Foregger, Ohio, BOC, Dupaco, North American Draeger, National Catheter, Rusch, Porter, Welch Allyn, Anesthesia Associates, Bard Parker, Narco Scientific, Bird), which he identified as accounting for 90 percent of the net U.S. sales, at the manufacturing level plus imports, of IAE (Scott 1356-59). These companies, whose sales figures are reflected on Table I, had aggregated sales of $22.4 million in 1972, which results in an estimated universe figure of $24.9 million. The aggregated sales of all the companies shown on Table I were $24.5 million, or more than 98 percent of the estimated universe. Mr. Schreiber, president of North America Draeger, estimated the total market as $25 million (Schreiber 1072). Mr. Porter, president of Porter Instrument Company, estimated the total market as $20 million (Porter 1315).

137. BOC contends that the record does not furnish any reliable data from which market shares or industry concentration can be measured (BOC PF 416-447). BOC contends that complaint counsel's subpoena was not directed to all firms manufacturing IAE, that the list of products on the subpoena was not an exhaustive list, and the subpoena specifications were ambiguous. Complaint counsel's expert witness, Dr. Hedley-Whyte, testified that the listing of IAE products on complaint counsel's subpoena was substantially complete. Also, complaint counsel's subpoena called for sales data on all IAE equipment to be broken down by product category. A category of "other" was provided to cover IAE products not specifically covered by complaint counsel's listing of products. If all the IAE items reported by companies responding to the subpoenas had been included in Table I, it would represent only an insignificant change in the data actually utilized therein. In fact, such data would only serve to increase the sales of Ohio and Foregger, two of the largest companies in the IAE market, and thus to increase industry concentration.

138. Industry witnesses identified the leading firms in the IAE market. Dr. Hedley-Whyte testified that sales of the principal items of IAE—anesthesia machines—were made by Ohio, Foregger and BOC (Hedley-Whyte 1218). Mr. Schreiber, Mr. Scott, Mr. Porter and Mr. Kuehn, executives of IAE manufacturers, all identified as IAE manufacturers, those companies which were served with subpoenas and whose sales data is shown on Table I (Schreiber 1061-63, 1073; Kuehn 1156-57, 1170; Porter 1311; Scott 1356, 1369-73). BOC estimated that Ohio had 33 percent of the IAE market and Foregger 10-15 percent (CX 101B). By contrast, respondents did not call as witnesses any IAE manufacturers other than Mr. Cosgrove of Ohio. No subpoenas were served on IAE manufacturers by respondents to secure sales data, and only the most general testimony was elicited as to other companies that might have been manufacturers or importers of IAE, what products they manufacture, and their total sales of IAE. Examples of some of this testimony is as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION

Kaplan (BOC counsel): Have you heard of a vaporizer called Takiocha?

Cosgrove (Ohio executive): Takiocha is manufactured in Brazil by a Japanese doctor and there are a few of them in the United States which I have seen in use. (Cosgrove 2309).

CROSS EXAMINATION

Nickel (Complaint Counsel): You also mentioned a Brazilian firm that you believe > imported vaporizers. Do you have any idea of the amount of their sales of vaporizers in the U.S.?

> Cosgrove: No.
> Nickel: Do you know whether they have sold any in the U.S.?
> Cosgrove: I don't know.
> Nickel: Have you seen them in hospitals?
> Cosgrove: We are talking about a vaporizer now as opposed to a machine. I have never seen a tachio machine in this country and I have never seen a vaporizer either. (Cosgrove 2426)

In another instance, Mr. Cosgrove testified as follows regarding a manufacturer of oxygen analyzers:

> Kaplan: How about Beckman Instruments?
> Cosgrove: Very possible.
> Kaplan: How about Electrodym?
> Cosgrove: I believe they do.
> Kaplan: Now—
> Judge Barnes: Mr. Cosgrove, I think you ought to be certain in these answers. If you are not certain—you just said "very possibly," and "I believe they do." That won't be helpful to me. If you know, say yes.
> Kaplan: Specifically, with respect to Electrodym, do you know?
> Cosgrove: I don't know. (Cosgrove 2343).

139. The record does reflect that there are some products which possibly should be included in the IAE market and are not reflected on Table I. For example, Air Products (Foregger) reported sales of "alarms, monitors" (CX 317E, in camera). Mr. Scott testified that these products are "oxygen alarms, low pressure alarms that are included on anesthesia machines" (Scott 1375). Thus, these products apparently should have been included in the IAE market. Another product that arguably could be included in the IAE market is CO2 absorbent material used in surgical anesthesia, although this product is a chemical and differs in this regard from other IAE products. Complaint counsel have included the CO2 cannisters in the IAE market, but not the absorbent material (Kuehn 1129-30, 113; CX 316A, in camera). The testimony reveals, however, that there are only two manufacturers of this product—Chemetron and Dewey and Almy [W. R. Grace]. Dewey and Almy is considerably larger in this product category than Chemetron. Dewey and Almy, a chemical company, manufactures the product; it is marketed through Ohio and Puritan-Bennett (Kuehn 1172-74). If oxygen alarms were included in the IAE market, it would increase industry concentration. As for CO2 absorbent material, inclusion of this product in the IAE market would not make a significant change in concentration figures (CX 329X). Further, a realistic appraisal of this product is that Ohio is a significant factor in its sales and its inclusion in the market would increase market concentration and Ohio's dominance.

140. It is concluded that market data set forth on Table I is sufficiently precise to constitute a basis for measuring concentration in the IAE market.

F. Barriers to Entry

141. Barriers to entry in the manufacture and distribution of IAE in the United States include technological expertise in manufacturing and marketing; sales and service organization; capital; brand loyalty; and, entrenchment of leading companies in this market.

142. Technological expertise, such as engineering capabilities; extensive knowledge and experience in the medical field of anesthesia; administrative expertise; and production knowledge including research and development are necessary for a new company to enter into the manufacturing of IAE (Schreiber 1077-78; Kuehn 1161; Porter 1317).

143. Capital requirements are high for a company to enter the production and distribution of IAE (Schreiber 1076; Kuehn 1161-62; Porter 1318). North American Draeger, a recent entrant into the IAE market, had technical assistance and financial backing from Draeger Werke, A.G., a German firm (Schreiber 1039).

144. A national distribution network is necessary to enter successfully the IAE market. The leading companies all distribute their inhalation anesthetic products either through dealers or by direct sales to hospitals (Schreiber 1060; Kuehn 1141; Scott 1355; Cosgrove 2369). Ohio has over 800 dealers, a number of whom do not carry products which compete with Ohio's IAE products (Cosgrove 2427-29). HL has 108 dealers (CX 101B).

145. A sales force is essential for a new company to enter successfully into this market (Schreiber 1078; Porter 1319). A sales force introduces and demonstrates products through direct sales or by working with a dealer when introducing a new product (Schreiber 1078). Ohio has approximately 73 salesmen selling IAE; HL and FS have a combined total of 10-11 such salesmen (Cosgrove 2427; Laister 2561-62). Companies with a more complete line of products have several advantages over companies with a narrower line of products. Companies with a full line have a lower cost of selling (Schreiber 1080). Only Ohio, Foregger and BOC have a broad line of IAE products (Kuehn 1170; Hedley-Whyte 1218; Table I, in camera).

146. A service force is necessary for the successful marketing of IAE (Schreiber 1078; Porter 1319-20). Service is one of the major concerns of hospitals when deciding what equipment to buy (Schreiber 1078-79; Hedley-Whyte 1219). Hospitals prefer to sign contracts for service on a regular basis (Schreiber 1079). Ohio has 75 servicemen in their medical service organization (Cosgrove 2428).

147. When a hospital purchases IAE it considers: the reliability of the selling company and its equipment; the selling company's ability to provide good service; and, how the medical profession views the design characteristics of the machine or line of equipment offered by the selling company (Hedley-Whyte 1219). Hospitals tend to train residents on the anesthesia machines they are most likely to encounter in their practice (Hedley-Whyte 1282-83). Medical practitioners tend to continue using the same type of equipment they used during their training (Smith 1792; Cosgrove 2439). The three most common anesthesia machines are manufactured by Ohio, Foregger and BOC (Hedley-Whyte 1268-70; 1282-83).

148. For a new firm to successfully enter the IAE market it is essential to develop a reputation which reflects the image of the company, the quality of the product and service (Schreiber 1079; Cosgrove 2431). At least one smaller manufacturer of IAE, Porter Instrument Company, contemplated marketing directly its own equipment and concluded that it did not have the resources, capital, and sales and service personnel to do so (Porter 1319).

149. The entrenchment of the major companies offering a broad line of equipment in the IAE market constitutes the major barrier facing a new entrant into this market. Mr. Kuehn, a former executive of Chemetron, testified:

> The main barrier would be the establishment, the firm establishment of the major companies involved in this particular product area today. (Kuehn 1162)

Dr. Hedley-Whyte testified that anesthesiologists are inherently conservative; they get used to a certain design, a history of reliability of a given machine and service provided by a given company (Hedley-Whyte 1219). This knowledge led Dr. Hedley-Whyte to advise at least two companies against entering the IAE market (Hedley-Whyte 1224-25). Ohio has been the dominant firm in IAE since at least 1956 (Schreiber 1088; Kuehn 1156-57; Porter 1316; Cosgrove 2420-21).

G. Anticompetitive Effects of Airco Acquisition in IAE Market

150. Prior to the acquisition of Airco, BOC competed with Airco for sales in the IAE market (CX 135-48; Complaint Counsel Physical Exhibit "A"; Table I, in camera). Ohio's medical products are "identical or closely parallel to those of BOC" (CX 76B, in camera). BOC's stock acquisition in Airco eliminated that competition.

151. Prior to the acquisition, Airco anticipated that FS, with the backing of BOC, would challenge Airco's position in the IAE market (CX 169C, in camera; Cosgrove 2510-11). If BOC had not acquired Airco, BOC would have expanded its IAE operations in the United States (Smith 1788; Cosgrove 2510-11). This combination of BOC and Airco eliminates any possibility of BOC challenging Airco's dominance of the IAE market.

152. The acquisition of Airco by BOC has enhanced the dominant position of Airco in the manufacture of IAE by raising Ohio's market share significantly (Table I, in camera).

153. The acquisition of Airco by BOC raised the already high barriers to entry for any firm wishing to enter the U.S. IAE market (Kuehn 1162, 1166).

V. Inhalation Therapy Equipment

A. Relevant Product Market

154. The complaint alleges that one of the effects of the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC may be substantially to lessen competition and to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, distribution or sale of inhalation therapy equipment, or any submarket thereof, throughout the United States or sections thereof (complaint, Par. 27). "Inhalation therapy equipment" (hereinafter ITE) is defined in the complaint as equipment and accessories used in the administration of gas for therapeutic purposes (complaint, Par. 1(c)). Dr. Ronald John Karpick, a physician specializing in pulmonary medicine, testified as an expert witness for complaint counsel (Karpick 1381-1432), and he defined ITE as:

> Inhalation therapy equipment would have to involve all of the machinery which is involved with administering the respiratory therapy, as I like to call it rather than inhalation therapy services. This involves everything from the simple nasal catheter for administration of oxygen straight through to the large complicated machinery needed for constant volume ventilation of patients who are otherwise unable to ventilate themselves. (Karpick 1387.)

155. Complaint counsel's subpoena (CX 316B-C), previously discussed in connection with the IAE market, also requested sales data on ITE from the same 37 companies. This subpoena called for data on all ITE, including but not limited to the following products which were separately listed on the subpoena:

(a) Ventilators and respirators. For practical purposes, the terms "ventilators" and "respirators" are synonymous (Karpick 1389). Both assist a patient in breathing by administering a gas, usually oxygen or air, to the patient under positive pressure; in effect, they force the gas into the patient's lungs (Matsch 1523-25, 1521; Karpick 1386-88).

(b) Humidifiers and nebulizers are devices which vaporize water or convert it into fine particles in order to humidify air or oxygen administered to the patient and prevent the airways from becoming dried out.

(c) Resuscitators. A resuscitator is an emergency device used for the immediate establishment of a breathing pattern in a person who has stopped breathing (Karpick 1930).

(d) Inhalation therapy delivery tubing is used for the administration of gases for therapeutic purposes (Karpick 1390; CX A, form 1764, pp. 5-6).

(e) Inhalation therapy face masks conduct gases to a patient's nose and mouth and exclude room air (Karpick 1390-91; CX A, form 1764, pp. 2-3).

(f) Inhalation therapy flow meters are used to control the rate of flow of gases to the patients (Karpick 1391; CX A, form 1766).

(g) Nasopharyngeal catheters and cannulae are used to convey gases into the patient's nose or nasal passages (Karpick 1391).

(h) Oropharyngeal airways are tubes inserted through the mouth and into the pharynx in order to conduct oxygen or compressed air into the airways and to prevent the patient's tongue from obstructing the airways (Karpick 1391).

(i) Inhalation therapy drain and condensation bottles are bottles attached to ventilators to collect excess humidity from the gas administered to the patient (Karpick 1391).

(j) Adaptors and fittings. These are self-explanatory.

(k) Yokes, hardscrews and valves were described by complaint counsel's expert as "the nuts and bolts * * * that help get all of this together." (Karpick 1392).

(l) Respirometers are used to measure the air breathed by patients (Schreiber 1059). Respirometers can be used either for inhalation anesthesia or inhalation therapy with appropriate adaptors (Cosgrove 2493-94).

(m) Bacteria filters are employed in ventilators and respirators to remove bacteria from the air or oxygen administered to the patient (Karpick 1392).

(n) Tracheotomy tubes are placed in a surgical incision into the trachea in the lower part of the neck to permit easy access to the airways for the administration of ventilation and for intratracheal suctioning. They are used primarily by patients requiring long-term assistance (Karpick 1392).

(o) Incubators are used in controlling and in assisting pediatric patients in breathing (Karpick 1392). Complaint counsel's subpoena also included a category entitled "other." Some of the companies listed products not specifically mentioned in the subpoena specifications under this category. Dr. Karpick testified that he would add oxygen tents and mist tents to the above products (Karpick 1392-93), but that otherwise the product listing was adequate (Karpick 1393). Complaint counsel have also added IPPB (intermittent positive pressure breathing devices) to the ITE market (CCPF 184). IPPB devices are machines that administer pressure to the upper airways in order to assist patients in breathing (Karpick 1423).

156. Over the years, the medical profession has begun to recognize respiratory therapy or respiratory care as a separate speciality (Karpick 1385-86, 1393-95, 1429-31; Cosgrove 2478-88). Most hospitals which provide major patient care have respiratory therapy departments (Karpick 1386). There are now respiratory therapy specialists who have specialized training and who assist physicians in administering respiratory therapy (Karpick 1393-97).

157. Professional recognition of respiratory therapy, however, is not equivalent to recognition of inhalation therapy as a separate entity. For example, complaint counsel's expert, Dr. Karpick, in explaining why these paraprofessionals had changed their titles from inhalation therapists to respiratory therapists, testified:

> [I]t became obvious to everyone that inhalation therapy was not the proper term for this group of individuals in that they were dealing more than just with inhalation of various gases and humidity, but they are really responsible for the entire respiratory function of the patient. This does involve intra-tracheal suctioning of the patient, physical therapy, physical rehabilitation; and they are getting involved in the pulmonary function laboratories now. (Karpick 1396). See also Cosgrove 2373-74; Schreiber 1089-90).

Dr. Karpick testified that respiratory therapy is related to the entire respiratory function of the patient, and that inhalation therapy is one method of administering respiratory therapy, with no medical personnel specializing in it (Karpick 1396, 1404, 1407, 1416, 1430-31). Inhalation therapy is a subsection of respiratory therapy and it deals with the inhalation of various gases and the humidification of those gases for therapeutic purposes (Karpick 1396). Inhalation therapy is a distinct method of treating respiratory deficiencies (Karpick 1407).

158. Inhalation therapy includes the modalities of oxygen, carbon dioxide and helium, as well as the use of aerosols and nebulizers to provide humidity to the airways (Karpick 1387, 1404). Complaint counsel contend that inhalation therapy does not include the administration of medications by the use of a nebulizer; the use of suctioning apparatus; the administration of physical therapy and physical rehabilitation; and the use of pulmonary function laboratories. Suction equipment is not part of the ITE market as such equipment is not used for the therapeutic administration of gas. Further, it is widely used in other areas of the hospitals and for purposes other than respiratory therapy (Karpick 1398, 1407, 1426-27). Pulmonary function equipment is a series of products which analyze the lung function to determine the impairment of the lungs or the patient's ability to properly exchange gases in the lungs (Cosgrove 2384). This type of equipment is marketed towards a specific group of physicians interested in diagnostic respiratory products and is not necessarily shown at the same meetings or advertised in the same media as ITE. Such equipment is not used for the therapeutic administration of gases and therefore is not a part of ITE (Cosgrove 2383-85). Complaint counsel's contentions that the administration of medication by use of nebulizers is not inhalation therapy is not logical. Where drugs are administered in connection with a gas, other than the ordinary atmosphere, it is considered part of inhalation therapy (Karpick 1409, 1415). Furthermore, the administration of medications by the use of nebulizers is part of respiratory therapy (Karpick 1404). Therefore, nebulizers are part of the ITE market since they are used to administer drugs by the same process as with the administration of gases. The Riker Medihalor, and similar products, are hand bulb nebulizers which deliver nebulized medication to the patient without employing an accompanying gas other than the atmosphere (Karpick 1410-13; Cosgrove 2378-79). The hand bulb nebulizers are primarily over-the-counter items (Karpick 1387), are rarely used by physicians, although occasionally prescribed for home use by patients (Karpick 1410-13). These products can be distinguished from the ITE market on this latter basis rather than for the reasons advanced by complaint counsel (CCPF 186).

159. The gases administered for inhalation therapy purposes, oxygen, carbon dioxide, helium and compressed air, differ from those used for anesthetic purposes, such as nitrous oxide (Karpick 1387, 1421). Respiratory therapy and anesthesiology are distinct and separate areas in medicine (Karpick 1430). Presently, anesthesiologists generally do not receive specialized training in respiratory therapy (Karpick 1430). There is a growing trend for pulmonary physicians to head up respiratory therapy departments separate from the anesthesiology departments (Karpick 1385, 1428-30). There is a similar trend for ITE to be purchased by the respiratory therapy department under the direction of a pulmonary physician rather than anesthesiologist (Hedley-Whyte 1271; Karpick 1429-30). The respiratory therapist is the person who actually administers inhalation therapy to a patient. Therapists work with and are under the supervision of physicians (Hedley-Whyte 1210-11; Karpick 1393-94, 1417). Respiratory therapists have minimal access to anesthetic equipment in most anesthesiology departments, even in hospitals where they are under the anesthesiology department (Hedley-Whyte 1211). Advertising of ITE is aimed at different medical personnel and toward an area of medicine separate from anesthesiology (Schreiber 1090). Respiratory therapists have their own professional journals (Karpick 1395). Accordingly, ITE is a separate product market from IAE for purposes of this proceeding.

B. Geographic Market

160. The relevant geographic market within which to assess the competitive effects of the BOC stock acquisition of Airco with respect to ITE is the United States as a whole. The leading ITE manufacturers, including Airco and BOC, sell such products throughout the United States (Fegan 1439; Matsch 1493; McWhinnie 1538; Cosgrove 2497). There is no dispute as to the geographic market (BOC PF 399).

C. BOC's Operations in ITE

(1) International Operations

161. The Advanced Engineering Division of BOC manufactures and markets ITE throughout the world including the United States (CX 3H, CX 6F, CX 10Z-8, CX 11L, CX 11Z-8). Since at least 1968, BOC has sold directly a small volume of ITE in the United States, including oxygen therapy apparatus, resuscitation equipment and Wright respirometers (CX 6F, CX 328, in camera).

162. HL, subsequently acquired in toto by BOC, was a small factor in the U.S. ITE market selling essentially the BOC Wright respirometer (Table II, in camera).

163. Since 1968, BOC has sought to expand its position in the U.S. ITE market and has considered acquiring several U.S. firms (CX 274, 276, 278). During May 1969, David Morgan, planning manager for BOC Medical Products, concluded after visiting the United States that the ITE market was the most obvious and immediately profitable area for exploitation in the United States by BOC (CX 26D). Further, Mr. Morgan concluded that HL could easily be expanded into the ITE market (CX 26D). During 1972 and subsequently, BOC actively explored expanding its operations in the ITE market in the United States and had contacts with several medical companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of inhalation therapy equipment and accessories (Kuehn 1152-53).

164. From 1972 to 1973, BOC through its representative, Mr. Fraser Sweatman, had a series of contacts with Oxequip Health Industries for the purpose of possible acquisition of Oxequip (McWhinnie 1545-55). Oxequip is a manufacturer of ITE (Table II, in camera). During this period, Oxequip was visited by several representatives of BOC, including Mr. Sweatman, A. I. Ray, and a chartered accountant (McWhinnie 1547-49, 1552). The accountant spent an entire day studying confidential financial records of Oxequip (McWhinnie 1552-53).

165. In October 1973, William C. Moeller, president of FS, communicated with Frank Fegan, president of OEM Medical, concerning possible acquisition of OEM by BOC (Fegan 1439-40). OEM is a manufacturer of ITE (Table II, in camera). As a result of this meeting, financial information concerning OEM was sent to Moeller (Fegan 1441).

Further discussions were postponed until early 1974, when Fegan was told that BOC was no longer interested in acquiring OEM (Fegan, CX 294; 144). By this time BOC had already acquired a 35 percent interest in Airco including the Ohio Medical Products Division (Finding of Fact 31).

D. Airco's Operations in ITE

166. Ohio manufactures and markets a line of ITE products, including mist tents, nebulizers and humidifiers, masks, catheters, tubes and airways, resuscitators and IPPB devices, and flow meters (CX Physical Exhibit A; Table II, in camera). Ohio was mentioned by industry witnesses as being a principal competitor in respiratory care equipment (Matsch 1494, 1530; McWhinnie 1539). Ohio has been attempting to expand its share of the ITE market (Cosgrove 2511-12; CX 169Q, in camera).

E. Concentration in the ITE Market

167. The data in the record concerning market shares of the companies in the ITE industry comes from subpoenas served by complaint counsel on 37 companies (see CX 316C, in camera). Data concerning respondent companies was stipulated (CX 326, CX 329). There is no evidence as to how complaint counsel arrived at the names of the companies to be served with subpoenas. Complaint counsel's subpoena served on the companies called for net sales data by product category for all inhalation therapy equipment and accessories including but not limited to the listing of products set forth in the subpoena specifications (CX 316C, in camera). A category of "other" was also provided in the subpoena specifications (Finding of Fact 155). The subpoena also called for data showing all products manufactured by each company to eliminate the possibility of reporting resale products (CX 316C, in camera). The list of products on the subpoena were stated to be a substantially complete listing of ITE products (Karpick 1392-93).

168. Table II in the confidential section of this Initial Decision contains market share data compiled from subpoena returns and stipulations. This table is substantially identical to that proposed by complaint counsel (CCRB, Table II, in camera). Table II data includes sales by BOC directly and through its subsidiaries FS and HL [it appears FS had no sales of ITE in 1972]. On Table II, Narco Scientific Industries, Inc. includes Isolette, McKesson and Air Shields; Becton, Dickinson and Company includes Bard Parker; Air Products and Chemicals, Inc. includes Foregger; American Hospital Supply Corporation includes Pharmaseal; Sherwood Medical Industries, Inc. includes Aloe Medical; and C. R. Bard, Inc. includes Med-Econ Plastics Division. Smith & Wesson Electronics was formerly the Stephenson Company. Table II also includes one-half of BOC respirometers sold in the United States. Respirometers may be used in either inhalation therapy or inhalation anesthesia depending on the attached adaptor (Cosgrove 2493-94).

169. The market share of the four largest manufacturers in the U.S. ITE market in 1972 was 61.4 percent and of the eight largest, 77.7 percent (Table II, in camera). The universe figure utilized in Table II is the total of all sales reported by the 37 companies which were served with subpoenas and respondents' stipulated sales. Table II does not include certain items reported by the companies, which items complaint counsel contend are not in the ITE market.

170. Complaint counsel also solicited testimony from industry witnesses as to the names of their principal competitors and their estimates of the total U.S. ITE market (Schreiber 1061-62; Scott 1356, 1369-73; Matsch 1494, 1530; McWhinnie 1539). Mr. Matsch, an official of Monahan Company, testified that his four largest competitors were Puritan-Bennett, Ohio, Bird and Air Shields (Narco); he estimated the total ITE market at $75 million (Matsch 1494, 1497). Mr. Cosgrove, Ohio's chief executive officer, also estimated the total U.S. ITE market at $75 million (2498-99). Both officials did not include certain insignificant items of ITE in their estimates.

171. BOC contends that the record does not furnish any reliable data from which market shares or industry concentration can be measured (BOC PF 451-476). BOC contends that complaint counsel's subpoena was not directed to all firms manufacturing ITE, that the list of products on the subpoena was not an exhaustive list, and the subpoena specifications were ambiguous. In this regard, complaint counsel's expert witness, Dr. Karpick, testified that the list of ITE products on complaint counsel's subpoena was substantially complete (Karpick 1393). Also complaint counsel's subpoena called for sales data on all ITE equipment to be broken down by product category. A category of "other" was provided to cover ITE products not specifically covered by complaint counsel's listing. For example, IPPB devices were not listed as a separate category on the subpoena (see BOC PF 464). However, several companies reported sales of IPPB devices, and these sales have been included in Table II.

172. Complaint counsel did not include sales data for several products which were reported pursuant to the subpoenas. These products, such as diagnostic products, compressors, emergency oxygen, monitors, are not in the ITE market. However, if all sales of such products had been included in Table II, it would not change the overall data to any significant degree. In fact, the most substantial omitted data was for such companies as Ohio, Narco, Puritan-Bennett, and Hudson Oxygen. Inclusion of this data in Table II would only serve to increase market concentration.

173. The principal products in the ITE market are ventilators, respirators, resuscitators, humidifiers and nebulizers. The leading manufacturers of these products are identified in the record (Finding of Fact 170), and their sales data appears on Table II. By contrast, respondents did not call as witnesses any manufacturers of ITE other than Mr. Cosgrove of Ohio. No subpoenas were served on ITE manufacturers by respondents to obtain sales data. Respondents have offered only the most general testimony regarding other companies that might have been manufacturers or importers of ITE, what products they manufacture, and their volume of sales of ITE.

174. Market data on the ITE market is not as clear or convincing as with the IAE market; primarily lacking is data relating to the ITE universe. However, even assuming that the total ITE market is $75 million, which is undoubtedly an exaggerated universe based on this record, four-firm concentration would be 45 percent and eight-firm concentration 57 percent. Further, Table II clearly establishes that under either criteria the market is concentrated and Ohio is one of the leading firms in the market. Accordingly, it is concluded that the market data set forth on Table II is sufficiently precise to constitute a basis for measuring concentration in the ITE market.

F. Barriers to Entry

175. A high degree of technology is necessary for a company to enter into the manufacture and distribution of ITE in the United States (Matsch 1501; McWhinnie 1540). A company would need people skilled in many disciplines including mechanics, rubber, plastics, mechanical and bio-engineering (Matsch 1501). Substantial capital requirements are necessary for a company to enter into the manufacture and distribution of ITE or to expand a product line (Matsch 1499-1500; McWhinnie 1540-41).

176. Before an ITE product can be successfully marketed, it is necessary to have a good clinical evaluation of the item demonstrating its quality and acceptance by the medical profession (Matsch 1501-02). Ohio has a good working relationship with the medical profession including people who will provide clinical evaluation of new ITE products for Ohio (Cosgrove 2410-13).

177. A distribution network is also necessary to enter the ITE market (Matsch 1501-02). The leading companies all distribute their ITE products nationwide through dealers or by direct sales (Cosgrove 2497; Scott 1355; Fegan 1439; Matsch 1493). Ohio has over 800 dealers for ITE, a number of whom do not carry products which compete with Ohio's ITE products (Cosgrove 2427-29). Highly trained, technical sales personnel are important to a company in the U.S. ITE market since they make the initial contact with the hospital's purchasing department representative (Karpick 1384; Cosgrove 2409, 2427-28). Ohio has approximately 73 salesmen handling its ITE products (Cosgrove 2427-28). A highly trained service force is necessary for the successful marketing of ITE (Matsch 1501-02). Ohio has 75 men to service their ITE (Cosgrove 2428).

178. The ability to deliver the apparatus requested, the ability to service the product and the ability to maintain the product, including replacement parts, are all major factors taken into account by the purchasing department of hospitals in buying ITE (Karpick 1385). For a new firm to successfully enter the ITE market, it is essential to develop a reputation which reflects the quality of the product and the image of the company (Matsch 1501-02; Cosgrove 2431). The same requirements for a company to enter the ITE market would also be required for a company in the market to expand its product line (McWhinnie 1541). BOC possessed the resources and expertise necessary to expand in the U.S. ITE market (Matsch 1502-03).

G. Anticompetitive Effects of Airco Acquisition in ITE Market

(1) Elimination of Competition

179. Prior to BOC's stock acquisition in Airco, BOC competed to a small extent with Airco for sales in the U.S. ITE market (CX 328, in camera; CX 150C, Z-20-21; Commission Physical Exhibit "A"-F-B, H-6; Table II, in camera). This acquisition eliminated actual competition between the two companies.

180. BOC, in 1973, had the technical and marketing expertise necessary to expand its small U.S. operations in the ITE market (Matsch 1502). BOC had the capital resources required for expansion (Topkis 1503). BOC is extensively engaged in marketing medical products in 60 countries throughout the world (Smith 1790), including ITE (Smith 1791). But for the acquisition, BOC would have expanded its manufacturing and marketing operations in the United States in its attempts to become one of the leading companies in the U.S. ITE market (Smith 1788). BOC had considered acquiring small U.S. firms engaged in the ITE market (Finding of Fact 163), and the ITE market appeared to BOC to be the most obvious and profitable area in the U.S. medical market for exploitation by BOC (Findings of Fact 163-165). The combination of BOC and Airco eliminated any possibility of increased competition between BOC and Airco.

181. The acquisition of Airco by BOC strengthened the market position of Airco in the ITE market by increasing Ohio's market share (Table II, in camera).

(2) Heightened Barriers to Entry

182. The acquisition of Airco by BOC raised the already high barriers to entry for any firm wishing to enter the U.S. ITE market or to expand its product line (Kuehn 1166; Findings of Fact 175-178).

CONCLUSIONS

I. Industrial Gases

A. The Industrial Gases Industry Comprises a Line of Commerce

It is well settled that an entire industry may constitute a line of commerce within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. United States v. Phillipsburg National Bank & Trust Co., 399 U.S. 350 (1970); United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 (1963); A.G. Spalding & Bros., Inc., 56 F.T.C. 1125 (1960), aff'd, 301 F.2d 585 (3rd Cir. 1962); United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576 (S.D.N.Y. 1958).

The United States Supreme Court held that the relevant line of commerce in which to appraise the probable competitive effects of a proposed merger in Philadelphia National Bank, supra, was > * * * the cluster of products (various kinds of credit) and services (such as checking accounts and trust administration) denoted by the term "commercial banking." * * * composes a distinct line of commerce. (374 U.S. at 356).

Commercial banking was found by the Supreme Court to be a distinct line of commerce even though the various services and products offered by commercial banks are distinguishable from each other and in some instances are also provided by financial institutions other than commercial banks. The Court emphasized that it was the cluster of products and services that commercial banks offered that as a matter of trade reality made commercial banking a distinct line of commerce. The Supreme Court later reaffirmed its holding that the commercial banking industry as a whole was a relevant line of commerce for Section 7 purposes. Phillipsburg National Bank, supra, 399 U.S. at 359-62.

The Commission has similarly held an entire industry to constitute a relevant line of commerce. A.G. Spalding & Bros., Inc., supra, 56 F.T.C. at 1160. In determining the relevant line of commerce within which to measure the impact of a merger between Spalding and Rawlings Manufacturing Company, the Commission ruled:

> Counsel supporting the complaint also contends that the athletic goods industry as a whole constitutes a line of commerce within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. We believe the record fully supports this contention. The testimony of AGMA [Athletic Goods Manufacturing Association] officials establishes that the principal products of this industry are those listed in the AGMA Census Reports. These products are manufactured and sold by Spalding and formerly had been manufactured and sold by Rawlings. They are products which are required to be used in established and well-organized athletic games. They have peculiar characteristics and end-uses for which there are no substitutes; they are distinct from the products of other industries; and are sold in a recognized market with its own competitive standards. See United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corporation, 168 F. Supp. 576 (1958). Moreover, the athletic goods industry is recognized by its members and by its trade association as a separate and distinct industry. It is our opinion, therefore, that the industry itself is a relevant market within which to measure the impact of the merger (56 F.T.C. at 1160).

On appeal, Spalding argued that a line of commerce may consist of only competitive indistinguishable products and therefore various athletic products such as baseballs, baseball gloves and mitts, footballs, and basketballs could not constitute a market. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals rejected Spalding's argument and held that the Commission, for the reasons set forth in its opinion, had "properly determined that the athletic goods industry as a whole is a relevant market within which to measure the impact of the merger." A.G. Spalding & Bros., Inc., 301 F.2d at 606.

In United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., supra, the District Court for the Southern District of New York held that the sum of all products of the iron and steel industry constituted a line of commerce within the meaning of Section 7. The basis for the District Court's conclusion was as follows:

> The products of the iron and steel industry as a group are generally standardized, are not subject to the vagaries of style appeal, and have peculiar characteristics and uses for which there are no effective substitutes. The manufacture of such products requires special know-how and experience, huge capital investment and a trained labor force. The products of the iron and steel industry are generally distinct one from the other and as a group distinct from the products of other industries. They are sold in a recognized market with its own competitive standards. The iron and steel industry is commonly recognized by its members as well as the community at large as a separate industry. It has its own trade association, treating the industry as separate and distinct. In the light of these facts the conclusion is warranted that the sum of all the products of the iron and steel industry constitute a line of commerce. Since Bethlehem and Youngstown both produce and sell the principal products of the iron and steel industry, it is an appropriate line of commerce for analyzing the effect of this merger. (168 F. Supp. at 593-94).

The evidence of record in this present proceeding clearly establishes that the industrial gases industry as a whole constitutes a relevant line of commerce within which to measure the impact of BOC's stock acquisition in Airco. The industrial gases industry is recognized by its members and two trade associations as a separate and distinct industry. Industrial gases companies only recognize other industrial gases companies as their competitors. The Bureau of the Census has classified the production and marketing of industrial gases as a separate economic entity since at least 1945. Further, the Bureau of the Census and members of the industry generally define the same group of gases as industrial gases. Industrial gases companies generally market the same group of gases, although some companies market insignificant volumes of gases not marketed by others. Both Airco and BOC market a wide range of industrial gases. Further, customers for industrial gases can look only to industrial gases companies for their needs.

There is also a commonality of technical expertise and capabilities involved in the production, transportation and marketing of the various industrial gases. Unique production and marketing facilities are utilized. Further, industrial gases have unique characteristics and end-uses, and, accordingly, are distinct from and do not compete with the products of other industries.

Respondents argue that only products which are completely interchangeable may constitute a relevant line of commerce, and that industrial gases are generally not substitutable for each other (BOC PF* 214-228). Respondents' position is based upon the Supreme Court's statement in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 (1962), that

> The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. (Footnote omitted.)

The Supreme Court clearly did not intend to preclude an economically significant group of noninterchangeable products from being defined as a relevant line of commerce. In Philadelphia National Bank, supra, and Phillipsburg National Bank, supra, both decided after Brown Shoe, the Supreme Court held that the cluster of products and services offered by commercial banks constituted a relevant line of commerce. The products and services of commercial banks such as personal loans, checking accounts, estate and trust planning, and safety deposit boxes are clearly not interchangeable.

Moreover, the Supreme Court has made it abundantly clear that "* * * submarkets are not a basis for the disregard of a broader line of commerce that has economic significance." Phillipsburg National Bank, supra, 399 U.S. at 360. In the present case, it would be inappropriate to divide industrial gases into submarkets for the purpose of assessing the competitive impact of BOC's stock acquisition in Airco. Both BOC and Airco market a wide range of industrial gases and there is no evidence in the record which suggests that BOC intended to enter the U.S. industrial gases market with less than a broad line of industrial gases. There is no evidence of record that any industrial gases company markets only a single industrial gas; all companies market a broad line of industrial gases. Industrial gases customers normally use a wide range of industrial gases. Further, the evidence of record firmly establishes that the industrial gases market is "sufficiently inclusive to be meaningful in terms of trade realities." Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. FTC, 296 F.2d 800, 811 (9th Cir. 1961).

B. Industrial Gases Geographic Market

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, prohibits an acquisition if its effect may be substantially to lessen competition in any line of commerce in "any section of the country." The United States Supreme Court has recently reiterated the proper test for determining the relevant "section of the country" within which to measure the competitive impact of an acquisition:

> Without exception the Court has treated "section of the country" and "relevant geographic market" as identical, and it has defined the latter concept as the area in which the goods or services at issue are marketed to a significant degree by the acquired firm. (United States v. Marine Bancorporation, Inc., 42 U.S.L.W. 5210, 5215 (June 26, 1974)).

Airco, the acquired firm in the present case, produces and markets industrial gases throughout the United States. Further, Airco bids for both tonnage and merchant accounts nationwide. BOC, the acquiring firm, was interested in participating in the United States market on a national basis. The nationwide scope of Airco's industrial gases operation was one of the primary reasons for BOC acquiring stock in Airco.

Therefore, considering the area where Airco operates as well as the area where BOC intended to enter, the nation as a whole is the geographic market within which the effect of BOC's acquisition should be measured. Further, the other large U.S. industrial gases companies produce and market industrial gases throughout the United States and, like Airco, bid for new accounts nationwide. Accordingly, BOC's acquisition of stock interest in Airco will affect competition in the industrial gases industry throughout the entire United States.

Respondents contend the competitive impact of BOC's acquisition must be considered on a regional basis because some industrial gases cannot be shipped economically more than 100 to 300 miles. Such a contention, however, ignores the fact that the large industrial gases companies, in fact, compete throughout the entire United States. This is accomplished by having plants strategically located throughout the United States.

Respondents' argument is also contrary to the Commission's holding in Kennecott Copper Corp., 78 F.T.C. 744 (1971), aff'd, 467 F.2d 67 (10th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 94 S. Ct. 1617 (1974). Kennecott Copper, which is squarely on point with this issue, was a potential competition case involving the coal industry. Coal, like some industrial gases, can only be economically shipped limited distances, and coal marketing is therefore generally confined to the geographic area of its production.

The Commission held in Kennecott Copper that although the distance over which coal is shipped is limited, the nation as a whole constituted the relevant geographic market within which to assess the impact of the challenged acquisition. The Commission based its conclusion on the fact that the large coal companies, including the acquired company, compete with each other throughout the United States and the fact that the acquiring company intended to become a nationwide competitor. The geographic market issue was raised on appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. The Tenth Circuit upheld the Commission's determination that the nation as a whole was a relevant geographic market. 467 F.2d at 71. That same conclusion must be reached in this proceeding.[4]

C. Market Concentration

The industrial gases market in the United States is highly concentrated. BOC respondents do not dispute that the top seven or eight firms account for the bulk of the market. The evidence of record establishes that in 1972, the top eight industrial gases firms in the United States accounted for 86.5 percent of the market and the top four firms held 69.6 percent of the market.[5] Top eight firm concentration in the industrial gases market has increased from 84 percent to 86.5 percent during the past five years and the top four firm concentration has increased from 67 percent to 70 percent. Further, the record discloses a significant increase in industry concentration from 1967 to 1972 through mergers (Findings of Fact 65-66).[6]

---

[4] The Commission's holding in Kennecott is not inconsistent with the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 42 U.S.L.W. 4368 (see BOC RB 51). In General Dynamics, the Court expresaly did not reach geographic or product market; further Kennecott was affirmed by the Court subsequent to the General Dynamics decision.

The degree of concentration in the U.S. industrial gases industry is well above the level considered by the Commission and the federal courts to constitute a concentrated market.[7] In The Stanley Works, 78 F.T.C. 1023 (1971), aff'd, 469 F.2d 498 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 928 (1973), the Commission and the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit found that the cabinet hardware industry in which four firms accounted for 49-51 percent of the market was "* * * sufficiently concentrated to invoke the proscriptive sanction of the Clayton Act * * *" 469 F.2d at 504.

The Supreme Court, in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 278 (1964), found that the relevant line of commerce was "highly concentrated" as the top five firms controlled 65.4 percent of the market and the top nine companies held 88.2 percent. Recently, the California gasoline market, in which the top four and seven firms accounted for 61 and 83 percent respectively of refining capacity and 58 and 81 percent respectively of sales, was held to be highly concentrated. United States v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 367 F. Supp. 1226, 1252 (C.D. Cal. 1973), aff'd mem., 42 U.S.L.W. 3710 (July 8, 1974).

BOC respondents have asserted that the value of shipments for industrial gases reported by the Bureau of the Census should not be considered as a reliable basis for establishing concentration in the industrial gases market. This assertion is based on the testimony of one witness who stated that value of shipment information required by the [5] These concentration figures are based upon the total value of shipments by primary producers of industrial gases. These concentration ratios are an accurate reflection of industry concentration since it is to the industrial gases companies which customers must look to supply their needs. Concentration ratios based upon value of shipments of industrial gases of all manufacturers including those not in the industrial gases industry are also extremely high, with the top eight and four firms accounting for 79.3 and 63.8 percent respectively of total value of shipments in 1972 (Findings of Fact 62-64).

[6] Other evidence of industry concentration in industrial gases exists. There are only three "national bulk producers" in the industrial gases market—Linde, Air Products and Airco. It is basically these three companies that purchasers of industrial gases have to look to fill the shortages of industrial gases which existed as of 1973 (Dempster 559; Smith 1732-33; CX 95D).

[7] An authority frequently used by the Commission and the federal courts as a guideline for measuring concentration is C. Kaysen & D. Turner, Antitrust Policy: An Economic and Legal Analysis 72 (1959), which defines a "tight oligopoly" as an industry in which eight firms share at least 50 percent of the market and the largest firm has at least 20 percent.

Census could be subject to different interpretation by different companies. He criticized the Census information as providing only the value of gases at the producing plant and not at the point of actual distribution. Further, his company did not normally measure company achievements on f.o.b. plant data.

Bureau of the Census reports are traditionally used in antitrust cases and their reliability is well established. See, e.g., Avnet, Inc., 78 F.T.C. 1562, 1563 n. 1 (1971). Reporting companies are required by law to accurately report their value of shipments to Census. Industrial gases shipment reports have been made to Census for many years. Census reports are clearly as reliable, if not more so, than any overall industry data which could be compiled for the purpose of litigation.

Respondents also contend captive production of industrial gases should be included in the universe. This argument is without merit. Captive production is not part of the industrial gases industry; captive production is not available to serve the industrial gases market. There is no competition between such producers with respect to the industrial gases each produces and consumes. To the extent surplus production is available, the record establishes that such surplus is sold to industrial gases companies who resell in the marketplace (Finding of Fact 55). Thus, to include captive production in the market would not be meaningful in terms of trade realities; it would recognize competition where competition, in fact, does not exist.

BOC respondents misread Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562 (1972), aff'd, 315 F. Supp. 372 (E.D. Mich. 1970), and 286 F. Supp. 407 (E.D. Mich. 1968). There, the Supreme Court regarded AC Spark Plugs as a competitor in the spark plug market, although AC was owned by General Motors and AC plugs were installed as original equipment in GM cars. Of critical importance in that case, however, was the fact that GM actively marketed AC plugs in the spark plug market including the lucrative replacement market. GM did not simply manufacture its spark plugs as a necessary component or input to its car production.

Respondents also attempt to dilute market statistics by including in the industrial gases market, production and sales of other products such as propane, butane, propylene, chlorine and sulphur dioxide. These gases are not considered as part of the industrial gases industry. The bulk of such gases are sold by other industries for different purposes. To the extent such gases are sold by industrial gases companies, the volume is insignificant (Finding of Fact 39).

Moreover, it is well settled that precise market data in antitrust cases is simply not necessary. For example, in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, the defendant argued that the government's statistics concerning its own sales were improperly derived since they included both wholesale and retail sales in the same category. The Supreme Court rejected the argument, stating:

> Again, while recognizing a possible margin of error in statistics combining sales at two levels of distribution, we believe they provide an adequate basis upon which to gauge Brown sales through outlets it controlled * * * In summary, although appellant may point to technical flaws in the compilation of these statistics, we recognize that in cases of this type precision in detail is less important than the accuracy of the broad picture presented. We believe the picture as presented by the government in this case is adequate for making the determination required by §7: whether this merger may tend to lessen competition substantially in the relevant markets. (370 U.S. at 342 n. 69).

The Commission has also recognized that the government is not required to establish the exact size of a market in Section 7 cases. In Papercraft Corp., 78 F.T.C. 1352, 1405-06, (1971), aff'd, 472 F.2d 927 (7th Cir. 1973), the Commission held that estimates by experienced members of the industry were an adequate basis for determining the size of the relevant market. It is thus concluded that market data in this proceeding is sufficiently precise to present an accurate assessment of market concentration in the industrial gases industry.

D. Potential Competition

The Supreme Court, in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315 (1962) stated:

> The dominant theme pervading congressional consideration of the 1950 Amendments was a fear of what was considered to be a rising tide of economic concentration in the American economy * * *.

The greater the concentration "the greater is the likelihood that parallel policies of mutual advantage, not competition, will emerge." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 280 (1964). The Court also observed that "* * * competition will be most vital when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share." Ibid.

Decisions by the Supreme Court have made it abundantly clear that Section 7 of the Clayton Act is to be construed at the possibility of not only preventing the rising tide of economic concentration, but preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration. Further, Section 7 deals with probabilities, not with certainties. FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 577 (1967). Section 7 "look[s] not merely to the actual present effect of a merger but instead to its effect upon future competition." United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 277 (1966).

With these basic premises in mind, the elimination of potential competition as well as actual competition is prohibited by Section 7. United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526 (1973); Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562 (1972); United States v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964); United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (1964). The potential competition doctrine has meaning only as applied to concentrated or oligopolistic markets. "The present procompetitive effects that a perceived potential entrant may produce in an oligopolistic market will already have been accomplished if the target market is performing competitively. Likewise, there would be no need for concern about the prospects of long-term deconcentration of a market which is in fact genuinely competitive." United States v. Marine Bancorporation, Inc., 42 U.S.L.W. 5210, 5218 (U.S. June 26, 1974).

There are two kinds of potential competition which an acquisition may foreclose. An acquisition may eliminate the procompetitive influence that a firm which is positioned on the edge of a market, threatening to come in, exerts upon the behavior of the companies within the market. Secondly, an acquisition may eliminate the likelihood of a procompetitive entry into a market by an actual potential competitor, i.e., a firm that, were it not for the acquisition, would likely have entered the market either de novo or by a toehold acquisition.

A party to an acquisition may be both a perceived potential entrant and an actual potential entrant. In such an instance, the acquisition would foreclose both types of potential competition. The elimination of either type of potential competition by itself renders an acquisition illegal under Section 7. E.g., United States v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 367 F. Supp. 1226, 1235 (C.D. Cal., 1973), aff'd without opinion, 42 U.S.L.W. 3710 (July 8, 1974); United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., supra, at 538 (Douglas, J., concurring). An acquisition which eliminates a company that is both a perceived and an actual potential entrant "renders the anticompetitive consequences of the acquisition even greater." Phillips Petroleum Co., supra. (367 F. Supp. at 1234).

The procompetitive influence exerted by a perceived potential entrant has been succinctly stated by the Supreme Court in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., supra at 174:

> The existence of an aggressive, well equipped and well financed corporation engaged in the same or related lines of commerce waiting anxiously to enter an oligopolistic market would be substantial incentive to competition which cannot be underestimated.

The potential entry effect of an actual potential entrant arises from the likelihood of actual market entry by the potential competitor at some time in the future and set the stage for noticeable deconcentration. The merger deprives the market of the procompetitive effect of an increase in the number of competitors. United States v. Ford Motor Co., supra at 587 (Burger, C.J., concurring).

BOC argues that the record in this proceeding is filled with references to price wars and severe competition, with evidence of declining prices, product surpluses, and low profitability. Hence, the doctrine of potential competition does not apply to this case (BOC PF 190). The administrative law judge had concluded just the opposite, that the market is highly concentrated, entry barriers are high, prices have firmed substantially, product shortages exist, and that, in fact, there is evidence the major companies stay out of each other's way (Findings 49-76). Thus, the doctrine of potential competition is highly applicable to this proceeding.

E. The Acquisition of Airco Eliminated BOC as a Significant Perceived Potential Entrant

Prior to BOC's stock acquisition in Airco, BOC was perceived by companies within the industrial gases market in the United States as waiting on the edge of the market for the right opportunity to enter. Members of the U.S. industrial gases industry not only recognized BOC as one of the few firms possessing the necessary resources, technical knowledge and expertise and marketing capability to enter the U.S. market, but also believed BOC was very likely to enter. Indeed, the two largest U.S. industrial gases firms not only perceived BOC as the firm most capable and most likely to enter the industrial gases market in the United States, but both Linde and Air Products anticipated BOC would enter the U.S. industrial gases market at some time in the future (Flamm 250-52, 335; Baker 392). Executives of Alabama Oxygen and Burdett of Cleveland anticipated market entry by BOC (Kimerling 876, 878; Loveman 613). Dr. Muller, a consultant in the industrial gases industry in the United States, also anticipated BOC would enter the U.S. market (Muller 682).

Moreover, the belief by firms in the U.S. market that BOC was a likely entrant was well founded. BOC had actively pursued various means of entry into the U.S. industrial gases market since at least 1968, and had participated in the U.S. market with Airco in a joint venture selling industrial gases plants. BOC was known to have the resources, technical knowhow, and marketing expertise to enter the market. BOC was recognized as being an international company with 50 percent of its profits coming "off-shore the United Kingdom" (Flamm 238). BOC had entered the industrial gases market in numerous countries since 1956, most recently Brazil (Finding of Fact 85). The United States industrial gases market is the largest and most technically advanced market in the world, and in 1973, the market was very bouyant (Findings of Fact 86-87, 49-51). The attractions of the United States market to an international company was very much appreciated by U.S. industrial gases companies (Flamm 255). Further, BOC was the most likely potential entrant into the U.S. industrial gases market (Findings of Fact 80-83).

In sum, based on BOC's history of being an international company and having entered numerous industrial gases markets around the world, and possessing the resources, technical ability, marketing knowhow and the motivation and incentives to enter the U.S. market, having made numerous contacts beginning in 1968, with U.S. firms concerning possible acquisition or market entry, having participated in the joint venture with Airco and being located in the adjacent Canadian market, considering the bouyant nature of the U.S. industrial gases market as of 1973, and the testimony of industry executives that they believed BOC to be the most likely entrant into the market, it must be concluded that BOC was a perceived potential entrant into the U.S. industrial gases market.

F. BOC Exerted Beneficial Influence on Competitive Conditions in the United States Industrial Gases Market

The Supreme Court in Falstaff Brewing Corp., supra, made it clear that an acquisition which eliminates a perceived potential entrant violates Section 7 if the potential competitor was so positioned on the edge of the market that it exerted beneficial influence on competitive conditions in that market (410 U.S. at 532-33).

In a lengthy footnote to the majority opinion in Falstaff, the Supreme Court spelled out the nature of evidence to be considered in weighing the effects of the elimination of a perceived potential entrant:

> The Government did not produce direct evidence of how members of the New England market reacted to potential competition from Falstaff, but circumstantial evidence is the lifeblood of antitrust law, * * * (citations omitted) especially for §7 which is concerned "with probabilities, not certainties," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 323. As was stated in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 174 (1964), "[p]otential competition cannot be put to a subjective test. It is not susceptible of a ready and precise answer."
> Nor was there any lack of circumstantial evidence of Falstaff's on-the-fringe competitive impact. As the record shows, Falstaff was in the relevant line of commerce, was admittedly interested in entering the Northeast, and had among other ways * * * made its interest known by prior-acquisition discussions. Moreover, there were * * * objective economic facts as to Falstaff's capability to enter the New England market; and the same facts * * * would be probative of violation of §7 through loss of a procompetitive on-the-fringe influence. (410 U.S. at 534-35 n. 13).

The approach suggested by the Supreme Court in Falstaff was followed by the District Court in assessing the competitive impact of the acquisition by Phillips Petroleum Company of the Western Manufacturing and Marketing Division of Tidewater Oil Company in United States v. Phillips Petroleum Co., supra. On the basis of objective evidence, the District Court held that the acquisition was illegal under Section 7. Just recently, the District Court's decision was unanimously affirmed without opinion by the Supreme Court. 42 U.S.L.W. 3710 (U.S. July 8, 1974).

The District Court concluded that Phillips' elimination as both a perceived and actual potential entrant had substantial anticompetitive effects within the meaning of Section 7, on the basis of the following standard of proof:

> [W]here credible objective evidence shows the basic economic facts of the acquiring company's overall size, resources, capability, and motivation with respect to entry into an adjacent attractive market involving a line of commerce in which the firm is already heavily engaged, that firm must be considered to be a significant potential entrant unless it is objectively demonstrated that some unique feature of the market precludes such entry. Moreover, where the market is concentrated and there are few such likely entrants, whether due to the existence of high barriers to entry or for other reasons, no further inquiry is required as to the anticompetitive effect of the acquisition, and that effect must be considered to be substantial within the meaning of §7. (367 F. Supp. at 1239).

BOC argues that the Supreme Court's recent decision in United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 42 U.S.L.W. 5210, 5216 (June 26, 1974), requires proof that firms in the industry in fact guided their conduct in light of the perceived entrant's presence on the market fringes (BOC PF 168). Industry officials in the present proceeding testified that they had not made any business decisions based on the perceived potential entry of BOC into the U.S. industrial gases market (Finding of Fact 81). Mr. Flamm of Linde testified that such factors were "a degree of sophistication that did not enter our considerations." (Flamm 336).

Voluminous economic evidence in this record demonstrates that BOC's position on the fringe of the U.S. industrial gases market exerted a procompetitive influence on the market. This economic evidence satisfies any burden which may have been set forth in Marine Bancorporation since Section 7 deals with probabilities, not certainties. FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 577 (1967). The industrial gases market is highly concentrated with only three national "bulk" producers.[8] Barriers to entry are extremely high. BOC was the most likely potential entrant into the market with few, if any, other potential entrants. BOC's financial strength and experience in entering industrial gases markets throughout the world indicated BOC's capability of entering the U.S. industrial gases market on a unilateral basis. BOC had the economic incentives to enter the U.S. market, and in 1973, the market was ripe for entry. BOC had been actively exploring methods of market entry since 1968. Further, there are no unique features of the U.S. industrial gases market which would preclude entry by BOC. Thus, it must be inferred that BOC's position as a perceived potential entrant had a procompetitive effect on the U.S. industrial gases market.

[8] Industry members do consider existing competitors in their marketing discussions, particularly the big three bulk producers (Flamm 305, 350).

G. The Acquisition of Airco Eliminated BOC as an Actual Potential Entrant

The elimination through merger of an actual potential entrant can be unlawful "[A]lthough its competitive conduct in the market may be the mirror image of that of the acquired company" since the entry eliminates a potential competitor exercising present influence on the market, United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 532 (1973); it also eliminates the possibility of eventual market deconcentration. United States v. Ford Motor Company, 286 F. Supp. 407 (E.D. Mich. 1968), aff'd, 405 U.S. 562, 587 (1972) (Burger, C. J., concurring in part).

Strong objective evidence of record indicates that BOC would have eventually entered the U.S. industrial gases market either de novo or through toehold acquisition. BOC had a "long-term objective" of expanding its international operations and BOC's chairman admitted the Airco acquisition was in furtherance of this objective. The U.S. market is the world's largest industrial gases market and the most technically advanced. BOC needed to be "in tune" with this technology (Smith 1788). BOC could not be truly "multi-international" without operating in the North American market (Smith 1731). BOC needed to be in competition with its American-based competitors "on their home grounds" to survive internationally (CX 38C; see Findings of Fact 84-87).

BOC continuously investigated methods of entry into the U.S. market from 1968 through 1973, including hiring a consultant who was a specialist in industrial gases, making an extensive investigation of the industrial gases market in 1969-1970, and holding acquisition discussions with several small industrial gases companies, including commencing a study of possible acquisition of Airco in June 1973 (Findings of Fact 90-101). BOC had the financial resources, technical knowhow and marketing ability, and the economic incentives and motivation to enter the market. Further, there were no barriers to such entry by BOC.

BOC argues that testimony by BOC officials and BOC contemporaneous documents prove conclusively BOC would not have entered the U.S. industrial gases market except for the Airco acquisition. The testimony by BOC officials, however, must be viewed in the light of other testimony given in this proceeding, and in light of other evidence of record. The BOC officials admitted there were strong economic incentives for BOC to enter the U.S. industrial gases market (Findings of Fact 103-107), and they authorized extensive acquisition discussions with several U.S. industrial gases firms. Thus, self-serving testimony that BOC would never enter the U.S. market de novo or by toehold acquisition can be given little weight.

BOC stresses two contemporaneous documents, (1) the Perham-Greenfield report of the BOC 1969-1970 investigation of the industrial gases industry, and (2) an internal budget and forecast for the development of business through 1973 (Finding of Fact 108).

The Perham-Greenfield report does not represent a BOC decision not to enter the U.S. industrial gases market. It was a report to the BOC managers on the U.S. market as of early 1970, and it was negative on entry by BOC at that time. However, the report recommended that BOC continue to look for future opportunities in the U.S. market (Finding of Fact 95).

The July 1970 BOC budget and forecast did not authorize any funds for entering the U.S. industrial gases market through 1973. However, Peter Laister, a director of BOC, testified that funds for acquisitions are left out of planning documents when it is uncertain what acquisitions will occur in the future (Finding of Fact 109). Mr. Laister also stated that in any large business you obviously cannot read the future a few years out.

There is no other documentation in the record to establish that BOC made a business decision not to enter the U.S. industrial gases market. If such a decision had been reached, it is inconceivable that BOC would have authorized several extensive merger discussions with U.S. firms after receipt of the Perham-Greenfield report. Further, the $80 million needed for the Airco transaction did not appear in any planning documents. Thus, this subjective evidence of BOC's state of mind is not persuasive.

The subjective evidence discussed above does not overcome the strong objective evidence of BOC's likely entry into the U.S. industrial gases market. It is well settled that subjective evidence of management's intent is entitled to little weight in determining whether a company is an actual potential entrant. The Supreme Court expressly rejected reliance on such subjective evidence in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964). After a full review of objective evidence in that case showing the capability and incentives of joint venturers to enter a market independently, the Court held (at p. 174):

> Unless we are going to require subjective evidence, this array of probability certainly reaches the prima facie stage. As we have indicated, to require more would be to read the statutory requirement of reasonable probability into a requirement of certainty. This we will not do.

In his concurring opinion in United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 545 (1973), Justice Marshall elaborated reasons for giving subjective evidence limited consideration in actual potential entry cases (at pp. 567-569):

> The reasons for so limiting the role of subjective evidence are not difficult to discern. Such evidence should obviously be given no weight if it is not credible. But it is in the very nature of such evidence that in the usual case it is not worthy of credit. First, any statement of future intent will be inherently self-serving. A defendant in a §7 case such as this wishes to enter the market by acquisition and its managers know that its ability to do so depends upon whether it can convince a court that it would not have entered de novo if entry by acquisition were prevented. It is thus strongly in management's interest to represent that it has no intention of entering de novo—a representation which is not subject to external verification and which is so speculative in nature that it could virtually never serve as the predicate for a perjury charge.

* * * * * * *

> Thus, in most cases, subjective statements contrary to the objective evidence simply should not be believed. But even if the threshold credibility gap is breached, it still does not follow that subjective statements of future intent should outweigh strong objective evidence to the contrary. Even if it is true that management has no present intent of entering the market de novo, the possibility remains that it may change its mind as the objective factors favoring such entry are more clearly perceived.

BOC also argues that it is incumbent upon complaint counsel to show that de novo or toehold entry was economically feasible and attractive. BOC stresses that there was no evidence at all to the effect that such a course of action would have been reasonably likely to yield even a modest profit (BOC PF*177).

Moreover, it is argued that after BOC offered testimony that de novo entry designed to produce a viable national competitor would have cost almost $250 million, taken at least 10 years to show a profit, and would not have been a prudent business decision, complaint counsel offered no rebuttal (BOC PF*178). BOC also points out that there was no evidence offered as to the asking prices or the profitability of small industrial gases companies which were available for acquisition.

BOC would impose an impossible burden on a trial record. It would be nearly impossible to determine reasonableness of asking prices of firms in the industry, and literally impossible to establish at what point in time de novo entry would produce a viable national competitor and return a "modest profit." It may have been easier and more immediately profitable for BOC to enter the U.S. industrial gases market purchasing a large existing market share than it would be for BOC to have to engage in the competitive struggle necessary to win a significant market share by de novo or toehold entry. "But the test in Section 7 cases is not whether anticompetitive conduct is profit maximizing. The very purpose of Section 7 is to direct the profit incentive into channels which are procompetitive." Falstaff Brewing Corp., supra (Marshall, J., concurring), at p. 572.

There is, moreover, substantial evidence of record showing that de novo entry or toehold acquisition would have been both feasible and attractive to BOC. The record is manifestly clear that BOC had the resources, technical knowhow and marketing experience to enter the U.S. industrial gases market de novo or by toehold acquisition. BOC found it economically feasible and attractive to enter de novo and by toehold acquisitions industrial gases markets in 19 different countries throughout the world. BOC found it economically feasible and attractive to recently enter the industrial gases market in Brazil de novo by building a small plant. The Brazilian and the U.S. industrial gases markets have comparable growth rates (Baker 2732).

Air Products' successful de novo entry into the industrial gases market in Great Britain in 1957 also demonstrates by analogy the feasibility and attractiveness of entry by BOC on a small scale into the U.S. industrial gases market. In 1957, Air Products was a small company and its entry into Great Britain was its first overseas penetration. It did not have the resources and world wide marketing experience that BOC had at the time of BOC's stock acquisition in Airco. Air Products began its operations in Great Britain by building very small plants and it had to compete with BOC, whose market share was in excess of 95 percent. Despite its meager beginning, Air Products was able subsequently to obtain a 25 percent share of the Great Britain industrial gases market (Baker 2738). Further, Air Products found it attractive to recently enter the Canadian market where it markets products from its U.S. gases plants, pays a 10 percent tariff, and has at the present less than 1 percent of the market (Baker 396-99, 2713-15).

Further convincing evidence of the feasibility and attractiveness of entering the U.S. industrial gases market by toehold acquisition is the successful entry by Liquid Air in 1968 through acquisition of American Cryogenics, a small company that was losing $4 million a year at the time of its acquisition. Liquid Air was able to turn American Cryogenics into a profitable operation. Furthermore, market conditions in 1968 were not as advantageous for entry into the market as conditions in recent years. Liquid Air has also been able to extend its initial penetration into the U.S. market through acquisition of other toehold firms and by internal expansion (CX 345H, in camera; Dempster 511, 518-19, 528-530, 552).

The record also establishes that had BOC not acquired a stock interest in Airco, it would have been an opportune time for BOC to enter the U.S. industrial gases market de novo by competing for tonnage supply schemes for industrial gases. BOC had already established itself in the United States market as a supplier of air separation plants through its joint venture with Airco which designed and sold air separation plants in the United States from 1967 through 1971. In recent years the demand for industrial gases in tonnage quantities has been increasing faster than the capacity of the U.S. industry to construct plants, and BOC could successfully compete in the United States for tonnage accounts (Baker 2734-35). Tonnage accounts are profitable (Baker 2741).

The prevailing market conditions of increased demand and shortage of production capacity also would make it an opportune time for BOC had it not acquired stock in Airco to enter the U.S. industrial gases market by acquisition and expansion of a toehold firm. The evidence of record clearly shows that entry into the U.S. industrial gases market by toehold acquisition was available to BOC. At the time BOC acquired the stock of Airco, there were a number of attractive small U.S. industrial gases producers available for acquisition, including Burdett of Norristown, Northern Gases, and Alabama Oxygen (Heckel 736; Perkins 788; Kimerling 876; Baker 2750, 2781). Further, Burdett of Cleveland, which BOC denigrates, was the subject of several BOC acquisition discussions, and in the fall of 1973, before the Airco acquisition, BOC was still interested in acquiring Burdett (Loveman 591-92). Thus, entry by toehold acquisition was available to BOC. (See the Commission's decision in Kennecott Copper Corp., 78 F.T.C. 744, 927 (1971), aff'd, 467 F.2d 67 (10th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 94 S.Ct. 1617 (1974), where the existence of toehold firms in the market was stated to be sufficient to show the availability of entry by toehold acquisition.)

Executives of two of the largest industrial gases firms in the United States testified that BOC could enter the U.S. industrial gases market by a toehold acquisition, by building a tonnage plant, by building a tonnage plant with incremental capacity to serve the merchant market, or by any combination thereof (Flamm 260; Baker 393-94, 2734-2735). Early 1974 would have been an opportune time to enter the U.S. industrial gases market (Baker 2735).

Thus, it is concluded that de novo or grass roots entry into the U.S. industrial gases market was feasible and economically attractive to BOC. It is further concluded that there were toehold firms that could have been acquired by BOC on a practical basis. It is also concluded that, as of December 1973, BOC was an actual potential entrant into the U.S. industrial gases market either de novo or by toehold acquisition; its entry would have increased the number of effective competitors in the market. BOC was committed to becoming a viable national firm with at least 5 percent of the market. Thus, BOC would have been compelled to seek its place in the market at the expense of the established firms, and this effort by BOC would have resulted in a procompetitive effect in the marketplace.

Further, the substantiality of the anticompetitive effect resulting from the elimination of an actual potential entrant may be inferred from the objective facts as are present in this case. Objective evidence establishes that BOC was an actual potential entrant, that the market is highly concentrated, and that there are high barriers to entry and few, if any, other likely entrants. Thus, no further inquiry is required into the anticompetitive effects of the acquisition and the effect must be considered substantial within the meaning of Section 7. United States v. Phillips Petroleum Company, 367 F. Supp. 1226, 1239 (C.D. Cal. 1973); see United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 532 (1973).[9]

H. Acquisition of Airco by BOC Increased Entry Barriers in the U.S. Industrial Gases Market

Airco, one of the dominant firms in the U.S. industrial gases market was acquired by BOC, a company with substantial resources and technical and marketing skills and apparently the second largest industrial gases company in the world. It must be concluded that such an acquisition increased concentration in the market and substantially increased what were already exceeding high entry barriers.

I. Airco Is Not A Toehold

Airco clearly does not meet the criteria for a toehold firm as its assets and market position enabled BOC instantly to achieve a dominant, national position in the U.S. industrial gases market without any expansion effort. BOC's chairman testified that BOC would need over five percent of the national market to be a viable competitor

[9] Even if BOC's conduct in the marketplace is the "mirror image" of that of Airco (see United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. at 532 (1973)), it appears that Section 7 is nevertheless violated. The Court, in Falstaff, stated that it would "leave for another day" the question of the applicability of Section 7 to a merger that will leave competition in the marketplace exactly as it was, neither hurt nor helped. (Id. at 537.) However, as observed by Justice Marshall, Section 7 prohibits an entry by acquisition [other than toehold] since such an acquisition eliminates the possibility of future actual competition. (Id., Marshall, J., concurring, at 561.) Thus, even if de novo or toehold entry by BOC did not have immediate procompetitive effects, there is the possibility that such entry would have such effects at some time in the future. This is sufficient to establish a violation of Section 7, which looks to possibilities—not certainties, and looks to the future as well as the present.

The District Court in United States v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 367 F. Supp. 1226, 1258 (C.D. Cal. 1973), defines a toehold acquisition as:

> * * * one which is sufficient to assist the potential entrant over the entry barriers and into the market, but not so large that the entrant merely replaces the acquired company; the acquiring company must have a substantial need to build upon the acquisition. Such a foothold acquisition is fully consistent with the concept of unilateral entry, since both envision a significant market penetration effort by the entering company quite apart from whatever assets or market position have been acquired.

Under the above definition, with which the administrative law judge is in accord, Airco clearly is not a toehold acquisition.

II. Inhalation Anesthetic Equipment

A. Inhalation Anesthetic Equipment Comprises a Line of Commerce

Inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories fall within the criteria for defining product markets set forth by the Supreme Court in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 (1962):

> The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. * * * The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes and specialized vendors.

The Court further emphasized that:

> * * * it is necessary to examine the effects of a merger in each such economically significant submarket to determine if there is a reasonable probability that the merger will substantially lessen competition. (Ibid.)

It is now well established that it is not necessary for each of the seven criteria set forth in Brown Shoe to be present in every merger case in order to establish a market; a relevant market has been found to exist where less than all of the Brown Shoe criteria were present. United States v. E. I. duPont de Nemours [Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593-95 (1957); General Foods Corp. v. F.T.C., 386 F.2d 936, 941 (3rd Cir. 1967); Reynolds Metals Co. v. F.T.C. 309 F.2d 223, 227 (D.C. Cir. 1962).

Applying the Brown Shoe criteria, it is clearly established that inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories are a separate and distinct market. The medical profession, as well as firms in the industry, recognize inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories as constituting a separate market. Inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories have peculiar characteristics and uses, i.e., supplying anesthetic vapors to patients during surgical procedures. Production facilities for inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories are unique, owing to the unique nature of the technology of supplying gases for anesthesia. Customers buying or using inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories are distinct from those buying or using medical products generally. Inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories are priced markedly higher than comparable equipment used in other medical applications.[10]

BOC respondents point out that there is a profusion of products in the IAE market and that individual IAE products are not interchangeable (BOC PF 311). On that basis, BOC argues that IAE products are not a relevant product market. However, the principal product in IAE, the anesthesia machine, consists of nearly every product in the IAE market. The remaining items in the IAE market are necessary in order for the patient to effectively receive the anesthetic vapors. Additionally, there is a degree of interchangeability among surgical, veterinary and dental anesthesia machines. These products have the common denominator of all being used by the anesthesiologist to administer anesthesia. The surgical, veterinary and dental anesthesia machines utilize common technology to perform the identical purpose of inducing anesthesia in surgical procedures.

B. IAE Geographic Market

Manufacturers of inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories generally market their products throughout the United States. Airco markets inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories throughout the United States, as does BOC's subsidiaries, Fraser Sweatman and Harris Lake. The acquisition will thus have a direct and immediate effect upon competition in the IAE market throughout the United States.

Accordingly, the United States as a whole is the relevant geographic market in which to appraise the effects of BOC's acquisition of Airco stock upon competition in inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories. United States v. Marine Bancorporation, Inc., 42 U.S.L.W. 5210, 5215 (U.S. June 26, 1974); United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384

[10] Inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories must be semi-conducive to avoid danger of explosion. This pushes the cost of such items substantially above that of otherwise comparable or even identical items used in the practice of inhalation therapy. This price differential is further enhanced by the greater precision needed in equipment for the administration of potentially lethal anesthetic agents than that for the administration of gases for therapeutic purposes (Hedley-Whyte 1278).

U.S. 546, 549 (1966). Respondents do not dispute the geographic market.

C. Market Concentration

The record establishes that the IAE market is highly concentrated. Airco is the dominant firm in the IAE market; the consortium of BOC and its subsidiaries, Fraser Sweatman and Harris Lake, constitute a substantial part of the market. The record reveals that in the manufacture and sale of the anesthesia machine, three companies completely dominate the market—Airco, Foregger and BOC.

The record also reveals that barriers to entry are high, i.e., technological expertise in manufacturing and marketing; the need for sales and service organization; high capital costs; brand loyalty; and the entrenchment of the leading companies in the marketplace. An already highly concentrated market with high entry barriers obviates any need to show a trend in concentration. Stanley Works, 78 F.T.C. 1023, 1065 (1971), aff'd, 469 F.2d 498, 503-504 (2nd Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 928 (1973).

D. Competitive Effects

No difficult or novel issue is involved in appraising the effect of BOC's acquisition of Airco stock in the IAE market in the United States. The facts disclose a clear violation of Section 7. The Supreme Court has repeatedly struck down mergers between actual competitors with considerably smaller market shares than those of Airco and BOC. In Brown Shoe, supra, the Court determined that a merger resulting in a combined market share of 5% would be illegal. 370 U.S. at 343-44. Similarly, acquisition of the ninth-ranked firm, with 1.3 percent of the aluminum conductor market by the market leader, with 27.8 percent of the market, was struck down by the Court in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa-Rome), 377 U.S. 271 (1964), as was a merger between the sixth- and seventh-ranked firms with 5.84 and 5.48 percent, respectively, of the three-state beer market in Pabst, supra. The Court in Pabst also found the merger unlawfully anticompetitive in the national beer market where the two firms ranked tenth and eighteenth and had a combined market share of 4.49 percent of total U.S. beer sales. With a combined market share of 8.9 percent, a merger between the third-ranking firm with 4.7 percent and the sixth-ranking firm with 4.2 percent of the market was likewise invalidated by the Court in United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270 (1966).

In United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363

(1963), the Supreme Court set forth the test for judging horizontal acquisitions between significant competitors:

> Specifically, we think that a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects.

Concentration in the inhalation anesthetic equipment market is very high. The market shares of the top four firms in 1972 totaled 64.5 percent, and the top eight firms had 87.9 percent of the total market. Where "concentration is already great," the Supreme Court has observed, "the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great." Philadelphia National Bank, supra, 374 U.S. at 365, n.42; Alcoa, supra, 377 U.S. at 279; United States v. Continental Can, 378 U.S. 441, 461-62 (1964).

Although it is not necessary to show the further likelihood of anticompetitive effects of the acquisition, such effects clearly present themselves in this market. While no firm in the IAE market has been able to approach Airco's market dominance, BOC has shown itself to be a formidable factor in the market. Instead of expanding its market share, with the possibility of market deconcentration, BOC joined forces with Airco to increase substantially Airco's market dominance. Thus, the merger of Airco and BOC increased concentration, heightened entry barriers, and more firmly entrenched Airco in the IAE market.

III. Inhalation Therapy Equipment

A. Inhalation Therapy Equipment Comprises a Line of Commerce

The product market criteria set forth in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 (1962), discussed hereinbefore in connection with the IAE market, establishes ITE as a relevant product market within which the effects of BOC's acquisition of Airco stock under Section 7 may be considered. ITE is recognized by the medical profession and by the firms in the industry as constituting a separate entity. ITE has peculiar characteristics and uses. Customer users and purchasers of ITE are distinct and the price of ITE is distinct from the prices of IAE (see infra, p. 105).

ITE is comprised of the equipment and accessories used in the administration of gases for therapeutic purposes. There is also a distinct group of medical paraprofessionals referred to as "inhalation therapists" and recently as "respiratory therapists" who specialize in inhalation therapy (Hedley-Whyte 1210-11; Karpick 1396). Although the duties of these professionals has in recent years expanded to include other aspects of respiratory care, they primarily are responsible for the administration of gases for therapeutic purposes, i.e., inhalation therapy (Karpick 1393, 1396). Inhalation therapists are further differentiated from other medical personnel by virtue of their specialized training. They are certified and registered as respiratory therapists. Further, respiratory therapists have their own professional organization and medical journal (Hedley-Whyte 1210-1211; Karpick 1395). Inhalation therapy is recognized by the medical profession as a subsection of the broad field now referred to as respiratory therapy.

ITE equipment has a specialized production technology and requires specialized vendors to successfully market the products. ITE is distinct from IAE, and is separate from other respiratory therapy equipment such as suction equipment and monitoring equipment. ITE meets the criteria set forth in Brown Shoe, supra, 370 U.S. at 325, sufficiently to constitute a submarket for Section 7 purposes.

B. Geographic Market

The acquired firm, Airco, markets inhalation therapy equipment and accessories nationwide, as do its competitors, including BOC's subsidiary. The acquisition's effect will be felt directly and immediately in the ITE market throughout the United States. The United States as a whole is, therefore, the relevant geographic market in which to appraise the effects of BOC's acquisition of Airco stock upon competition in inhalation therapy equipment and accessories. United States v. Marine Bancorporation, Inc., 42 U.S.L.W. 5210, 5215 (U.S. June 26, 1974); United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 549 (1966). Respondents do not dispute the geographic market.

C. Market Concentration

The ITE market is concentrated, although not as concentrated as the IAE market. Further, in the ITE market Airco is not the dominant firm that it is in the IAE market. The sales of ITE by BOC and its subsidiaries are not very substantial (Table II, in camera). It is doubtful that the complaint in this matter would have been brought based on the market shares in the ITE market alone. However, other more substantial markets are involved in this proceeding [industrial gases and IAE]; and other significant factors are involved in the sale of ITE, such as the formidable position of BOC in the medical markets throughout the world, and BOC's intention to and capability of unilaterally expanding ITE sales in the United States.

D. Competitive Effects

Although the inhalation therapy equipment and accessories market is composed of many companies, the bulk of the sales in the market are concentrated in the hands of a few firms. Airco is a substantial factor in the ITE market and BOC's subsidiary, Harris Lake, backed by BOC, had established itself as a significant competitor.

Substantial barriers to entry and expansion limit the potential for growth of small firms in the rapidly growing inhalation therapy equipment and accessories market. Backed by BOC's vast capital, technological and marketing skills, BOC's operations not only had the ability to expand in this market, but were already doing so. Thus BOC's subsidiary, Harris Lake, though small, was a significant and closely watched competitor. BOC had carefully devised its strategy for growth when it entered the U.S. market. Through internal expansion, acquisition of other small competitors, or a combination of both approaches, BOC intended to become a significant firm in the U.S. inhalation therapy equipment and accessories market.

The fact that BOC had taken steps to accomplish its expansion goals made BOC a highly significant factor in the market. There can be little doubt that within a short span of time, BOC would have significantly increased its share of the ITE market. As a firm with immense resources and capabilities, already in the market, BOC exerted a significant restraining influence on the market leaders beyond its small market share, and was a strong force for competition.

Section 7 dictates that a small, significant competitor such as BOC, with its capability, interest, and incentives to expand, must be compelled to pursue internal development in lieu of an acquisition inimical to competition. United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 370 (1963); United States v. Standard Oil Company (New Jersey), 253 F. Supp. 196, 227 (D.N.J. 1966).

As recognized by the Second Circuit in Stanley Works, supra, at 508:

> [t]he continued independence of companies with relatively small market shares is * * * crucial to the health and vitality of a market threatening to become oligopolistic.

The legal principle set forth in Stanley Works is well established. The Supreme Court earlier noted that "the basic premise of * * * [Section 7 is] that competition will be most vital 'when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share.' United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 274 U.S., at 363." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 280 (1964).

In Alcoa, only a dozen companies could claim market shares as large as one percent. This fact was specifically noted by the Supreme Court in finding the acquired firm, ranked ninth, with a 1.3 percent market share, a significant competitor. Alcoa, supra, at 281. In Stanley, ten firms had market shares as great as one percent and Stanley was ranked tenth. Similarly, outside the central core of dominant firms, of which Airco is a member, the inhalation therapy equipment and accessories market is composed of small competitors.

Section 7 "look[s] not merely to the actual present effect of a merger but instead to its effect upon future competition." United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 277 (1966). Elimination of competition between Airco and BOC in the ITE market has eliminated the probability of substantial future competition between the two firms, and has significantly increased entry barriers by combining BOC's tremendous resources and experience with Airco's existing market strength.

IV. The Acquisition of Airco Stock by BOC Is a Violation of Section Five of the Federal Trade Commission Act

An acquisition that violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, also violates Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. E.g., Stanley Works v. F.T.C., 469 F.2d 498, 499 n.2 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 928 (1973).

In the present case, BOC's acquisition of Airco stock violates Section 7 in several respects. The acquisition eliminated BOC both as a perceived potential entrant and as an actual potential entrant into the industrial gases industry in the United States. It also eliminated actual competition between BOC and Airco in the inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories market and in the inhalation therapy equipment and accessories market. Therefore, the BOC acquisition also violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Accordingly, BOC respondents, as charged in the complaint, violated both Section 7 of the Clayton Act and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act also applies in the present case to Airco. The Commission has ruled that "* * * Section 5 is the proper statute under which to charge an acquired corporation where the acquisition substantially lessens competition." Dean Foods Co., 70 F.T.C. 1146, 1291 (1966). In Dean Foods, the Commission held that the acquired firm, Bowman Dairy Corporation, violated Section 5 by entering into a purchase contract for the sale of its assets to Dean Foods (70 F.T.C. at 1292).

Although Airco did not enter into an agreement to sell its assets to BOC, the record clearly shows that Airco was instrumental in BOC's acquisition of Airco's stock. First, Airco actively sought out BOC and provided confidential information with respect to its business operations to BOC. Airco and BOC entered into an agreement on July 25, 1973, which provided for an exchange of confidential information between the two companies and also prohibited either company from making a tender offer for the other company's shares for a period of five years without the approval of the other company's board of directors (Finding of Fact 25).

On Dec. 10, 1973, Airco and BOC entered into another agreement in which Airco consented to BOC's tender offer for Airco shares. This agreement also provided for reciprocal representation by BOC and Airco on each other's board of directors. Further, the agreement gave Airco the right to purchase or designate a purchaser for any of the Airco shares acquired by BOC which BOC may subsequently sell (Finding of Fact 30).

Further, Airco actively assisted BOC in making its tender offer. Airco not only made its list of shareholders available to BOC, it also had Airco's transfer agent mail BOC's offer to Airco shareholders (Finding of Fact 30).

Airco's role in the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC was a significant part of the overall transaction. Airco actively opposed the Curtiss-Wright proposal and supported the BOC proposal. Accordingly, respondent Airco, as charged in the complaint, violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by taking affirmative actions which resulted in an acquisition prohibited by Section 7 of the Clayton Act and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Moreover, it is proper to join Airco as a party respondent to this case since the relief to be entered may affect the rights and interests of Airco. Accordingly, Airco was a proper party to this action. See, e.g., United States v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 367 F. Supp. 1226, 1261-62 (C.D. Cal. 1973), aff'd mem., 42 U.S.L.W. 3710 (July 8, 1974), and the cases cited therein.

V. Form of Relief

BOC respondents have consented to the jurisdiction of the Commission (Finding of Fact 12), and the Commission has jurisdiction over Airco (Finding of Fact 20). Thus, the Commission has authority to enter whatever remedy may be necessary to restore competition to the status that existed prior to December 1973, and to take steps to assure that the law will not be violated in the future.

It is well settled that the choice of the remedial order is committed to the discretion of the Commission. F.T.C. v. Mandel Bros., 359 U.S. 385, 392-93 (1959); L. G. Balfour Co. v. F.T.C., 442 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. 1971).

Generally, the most appropriate remedy to redress a Section 7 violation is divestiture. Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 573 (1972); F.T.C. v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967).

In the present case, effective relief can only be achieved by complete divestiture of Airco's stock by BOC, removal of BOC representatives from Airco's board and removal of Airco representatives from BOC's board. Complete divestiture and removal of BOC and Airco representatives from each other's board of directors will restore BOC as a procompetitive force on the edge of the market and as a likely potential entrant into the United States industrial gases market. The same sanction will also restore BOC as an independent, actual competitor in the inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories market and in the inhalation therapy equipment and accessories market.

BOC has shown some proclivity toward mergers in the lines of commerce relevant to this proceeding. To insure that the Commission's objective in bringing this proceeding is not circumvented, the Commission should retain jurisdiction over BOC respondents and the authority to approve future acquisitions in the three lines of commerce relevant to this proceeding for a period of ten (10) years. Abex Corp. v. F.T.C., 420 F.2d 928, 933 (6th Cir. 1970); cert. denied, 400 U.S. 865 (1970); Seeburg Corp. v. F.T.C., 425 F.2d 124, 129 (6th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 866 (1970).

The acquisition involved in this proceeding is 4 million shares of Airco stock. Because of a court injunction issued at the behest of the Commission, intermingling of assets of the two corporations has been prevented. F.T.C. v. British Oxygen Co., 1974 CCH Trade Cas. ¶75,003 (D. Del. 1974) [supra]. Thus, divestiture will not cause undue difficulty to either BOC or Airco. Further, it is possible to get almost immediate relief since the divestiture involves stock only. The order entered herewith will require BOC to set up an independent Voting Trustee which shall have full independent authority to vote said stock until such time as the trusteed stock shall have been divested pursuant to the provisions of this order. Under this arrangement, the vagaries of the financial markets will not prevent some immediate relief.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Commission has jurisdiction of and over the subject matter of this proceeding and of respondents The British Oxygen Company Limited; BOC Financial Corporation; BOC Holdings Limited; and British Oxygen Investments Limited ("BOC respondents"); and respondent Airco, Inc. ("Airco").

2. BOC respondents and Airco were, at all times relevant herein, corporations engaged in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

3. The appropriate lines of commerce within which to evaluate the competitive effects of the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC are: (a) industrial gases; (b) inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories; and (c) inhalation therapy equipment and accessories.

4. The proper geographic market within which to determine the competitive effects of BOC's acquisition in the three relevant lines of commerce is the United States, as a whole.

5. The effect of the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC has been, or may be, substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, and in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, in the following ways:

(a) Substantial potential competition between BOC and Airco in the production and sale of industrial gases has been eliminated.

(b) BOC has been eliminated as a significant perceived potential entrant into the production and sale of industrial gases in the United States.

(c) BOC has been eliminated as a significant actual potential entrant into the production and sale of industrial gases in the United States.

(d) The already high concentration in the industrial gases market in the United States may be increased.

(e) Already high barriers to entry of new manufacturers into the production and sale of industrial gases may be raised significantly.

(f) Substantial actual competition between BOC and Airco in the manufacture and sale of inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories has been eliminated.

(g) Concentration in the manufacture and sale of inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories has been increased.

(h) Airco, through its Ohio Medical Products Division, has been further entrenched in the manufacture and sale of inhalation anesthetic equipment and accessories.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

BY ENGMAN, Commissioner:

This is an appeal by all respondents from an initial decision by Administrative Law Judge Ernest G. Barnes.

The British Oxygen respondents appeal his ruling that they violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act in acquiring approximately 35 percent of the outstanding shares of common stock in respondent Airco.[1] There appears to be no dispute that 35 percent gives BOC effective control of Airco.

The administrative law judge also found that certain agreements between BOC and Airco relating to the acquisition violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and both BOC and Airco appeal that ruling.

Prior Proceedings

In December 1973, BOC acquired 4 million shares, or 35 percent, of the outstanding common stock of Airco by means of a public tender offer. On Feb. 26, 1974, two months after the acquisition, the Commission issued a complaint charging that BOC's acquisition violated the antitrust laws. On the same day the Commission applied to a United States District Court for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction requiring BOC to maintain Airco as a separate entity and restraining it from, among other things, voting its Airco stock, having BOC personnel serve on the Airco board, increasing or decreasing its holding of Airco stock, and exchanging trade secrets with Airco pending disposition of the Commission's complaint.

On Mar. 8, 1974, the District Court issued a preliminary injunction requiring BOC, among other things, to maintain Airco as a separate company. The court declined to enjoin BOC from voting its Airco shares or having BOC personnel serve on the Airco board. The injunction was conditioned on the Commission expediting its administrative proceeding: FTC v. British Oxygen Co., 1974-1 Trade Cases ¶75,003 (D. Del. 1974), appeal by Airco docketed, No. 74-1492, 3rd Cir. May 20, 1974 [9 S&D 887].

[1] Airco also appeals that ruling, joining in the British Oxygen companies' briefs. The British Oxygen respondents are represented by common counsel and will be collectively referred to as BOC. The corporate relationships between the BOC respondents are described in Findings 6-8. Airco is sometimes referred to in the record by its previous name, Air Reduction Company.

During hearings on the complaint which were commenced on May 6, 1974, some 28 witnesses were called and several thousand pages of documentary exhibits were received into the record. On Oct. 18, 1974, the administrative law judge issued his initial decision sustaining the major allegations of the complaint. Motions by all the parties for extensions of time to file appeal briefs were granted by the Commission. Oral argument on the appeals was heard by the Commission on Apr. 30, 1975.

The Respondents

British Oxygen Company is a publicly-held United Kingdom company with its main office in London. A principal part of its business is the production and sale of industrial gases, not only in the British Isles but in some 18 other countries. At the time of the acquisition it was the second largest industrial gases firm in the world. BOC also produces and sells equipment for the manufacture and storage of certain gases at extremely low temperatures (cryogenic equipment), welding and cutting equipment, medical equipment, chemicals, metals, vacuum engineering and some consumer products. In its fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1973, BOC had total sales of about $766 million, approximately half of which were derived from operations in the United Kingdom and the balance chiefly from countries that were formerly parts of the British empire.

Airco, Incorporated is a publicly-owned New York corporation with its principal office in Montvale, N.J. It manufactures industrial gases and medical products, which account for about 35 percent of total sales. Airco also makes and sells welding and cutting equipment, cryogenic equipment, metals and specialized metal products, medical gases, and high vacuum equipment. It operates gases plants in 22 locations scattered throughout the United States. It is the third largest producer of industrial gases in the United States. Through its Ohio Medical Products Division it also engages in the sale of inhalation anesthetic equipment and inhalation therapy equipment. Its sales of inhalation anesthetic equipment exceed those of any other company in the United States. In 1973 Airco had net sales of $584 million and net income of approximately $19 million.

BOC's Acquisition of an Interest in Airco

BOC acquired its interest in Airco in late December 1973 in the context of a competing tender offer for Airco stock.

During 1973 Airco's stock had been selling at its lowest prices in over five years. In June 1973 BOC learned of rumors of an impending tender offer for Airco stock and the managing director of BOC discussed Airco's vulnerability to such a tender offer with a vice president of Airco. BOC also implemented a study of the possibility of BOC's acquiring Airco by a tender offer.

Later that month, the president of Airco met with the board chairman of BOC and proposed an amalgamation between BOC and Airco. Subsequently, on July 25, 1973, BOC and Airco entered into a written agreement that provided for the exchange of confidential financial information and contained a provision that neither company would make any offer for a period of 5 years to acquire any securities of the other without the prior approval of the other company's board of directors. Meetings exploring an amalgamation between the two companies were held during September and October.

In November 1973, the Curtiss-Wright Corporation suddenly informed Airco that it was prepared to make a tender offer for 2 million Airco shares at $16-17 per share. After consideration of the proposal and a study of the Curtiss-Wright company, the Airco board of directors decided to oppose any such tender offer. On Dec. 3, 1973, Curtiss-Wright made a public tender offer for 2.4 million shares of Airco stock at $18 per share. Airco's board recommended to Airco's shareholders that they not accept it and asked them to wait to consider possible alternatives to that offer.

Shortly thereafter, BOC and Airco entered into an agreement in which Airco consented to BOC making a tender offer for Airco shares. The agreement provided for reciprocal representation by BOC and Airco on each other's board of directors. Additionally, the agreement provided that Airco would have first right to purchase or to designate a purchaser for any Airco shares purchased by BOC should BOC subsequently decide to sell.

On Dec. 10, 1973, BOC made a tender offer to buy up to 4 million shares of Airco stock at $20 per share. Airco's board informed Airco's shareholders that it did not oppose the offer and advised them that a closer association of Airco and BOC would be beneficial.

The BOC tender offer was oversubscribed and the shareholders who tendered to BOC had their tenders pro rated. The cost to BOC of purchasing the 35 percent interest in Airco was $80 million plus $2.8 million in expenses. Subsequently Airco's board of directors was enlarged from 12 to 16 directors to provide for four representatives of BOC.

The Complaint

The Commission's complaint charges that the acquisition may substantially lessen competition in industrial gases, inhalation therapy equipment, and inhalation anesthetic equipment, and submarkets thereof.[2] The case was tried on the theory that BOC's acquisition of controlling interest in Airco substantially lessened potential competition in the U.S. industrial gases industry by eliminating BOC as the most likely potential entrant into that market, and that actual competition between Airco and U.S. subsidiaries of BOC in the inhalation anesthetic equipment and inhalation therapy equipment was eliminated. The ALJ sustained these charges and an additional charge that the July and December agreements between BOC and Airco, paving the way for the BOC tender offer, violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. He issued an order requiring BOC to divest its holdings of Airco stock and Airco to cease and desist from taking any steps to implement any provision of the agreements with BOC.

I. INDUSTRIAL GASES

"Industrial gases" are recognized as consisting of those gases, except for common fuel gases, sold in compressed or liquid (and sometimes solid) form including acetylene, carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, argon, helium, hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen, nitrous oxide, other medical gases, rare gases, and mixtures and combinations thereof. The term "industrial gases industry" is commonly used to refer to a distinct group of manufacturers who produce the principal atmospheric gases (oxygen, nitrogen, argon) and acetylene and who may produce or purchase for resale the other mentioned gases. Sales by industrial gases firms are direct or through distributors to other manufacturers, welders, contractors and other users.

The industrial gases industry has two major marketing segments; tonnage and merchant. "Tonnage" refers to supplying a single customer where demand at a particular plant location justifies the construction of a "tonnage" or "on-site" plant near that location. The gas is delivered through a pipeline, with many tons of gas delivered a day. Steel companies are typical tonnage users of oxygen. Tonnage plants are commonly owned and operated by industrial gases companies with output sold under long-term contracts. However, some customers own and operate a plant which has been built for them ("turnkey" plants).

[2] The complaint also charged that the acquisition lessened competition in medical pipeline systems, electrical welding equipment, and gas welding and cutting equipment. These allegations were abandoned by complaint counsel early in the proceeding.

The only gases which are produced and sold on a tonnage basis are oxygen, nitrogen and hydrogen.

"Merchant" refers to sales of gases in smaller quantities. The gas is transported to the customer either in gaseous form in cylinders or as bulk liquid. The larger quantities are shipped as bulk liquid under reduced temperatures. Plants used to supply gases to customers in either liquid form or in cylinders are referred to as merchant plants. It is common, however, for on-site tonnage plants to have merchant capacity. A gases company building a tonnage plant for itself will often construct excess capacity, sell the excess in the merchant market, and benefit from the economies of scale which would otherwise not be available. Gases distributed into the merchant market, including gases coming from incremental production in tonnage plants, are sold at prices that are as high as eight or nine times the price of tonnage gas.

It is important to note that the production and handling of bulk liquid gases requires highly technical skills and special equipment designed to withstand extremely low temperatures. The equipment is specialized and used almost exclusively in the industrial gases industry.

A. Relevant Market

The ALJ found that the relevant product market is the production and distribution of industrial gases by industrial gases companies. Included are all gases sold by industrial gases firms including resale of gases purchased from companies who produce them as by-products. Because individual gases are utilized for different purposes, have different prices, and there is no cross-elasticity of production facilities except among the atmospheric gases, respondents contend that the ALJ erred in treating them all as part of one line of commerce. However, we agree with his reasoning and conclusions.

There is no doubt that each of the individual gases listed in the complaint could constitute a separate product market since most gases have specialized end uses. However, lack of interchangeability in use does not automatically bar recognition of a broader line of commerce encompassing such products where, for technological or other reasons, there is commonality in production and distribution resulting in a distinct and recognized "industry" of firms who sell a broad line of such products. U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563 (1966). U.S. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576, 594 (S.D.N.Y. 1958); U.S. v. Ford Motor Co., 286 F. Supp. 407, 411-416 (E.D. Mich. 1968), aff'd, 405 U.S. 562 (1972); cf. Sterling Drug, Inc., 80 F.T.C. 477 (1972).

Industrial gases companies typically either produce or distribute a broad range of gases. They do this in order to provide their customers and dealers in the merchant market with a full or nearly full line of gases because many buyers prefer to order and get delivery from one gases supplier. Also the technical skills used in production, are very similar for many gases. For example, oxygen, nitrogen and argon are all produced in identical air separation plants, generally by a highly technical cryogenic process. Gases produced in such plants accounted for over 63 percent of the total value of all industrial gas shipments by primary manufacturers in the United States in 1972. The skills and technical capability for storing and transporting are also similar for many of the industrial gases. Oxygen, nitrogen, argon, helium, carbon dioxide, and hydrogen are commonly transported and sold to distributors in bulk liquid form in special tank cars or trailers.

This type of synergetic marketing relationship is not unlike the "cluster of products and services" offered in response to "settled consumer preferences" which the courts have held set "commercial banking" apart as a separate line of commerce. U.S. v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 (1963); U.S. v. Connecticut National Bank, 418 U.S. 656 (1974). See also U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., supra 384 U.S. at 573-74 (1966). The industrial gases companies are recognized in the trade as a distinct industry and are represented by two trade associations. It was entry into the "U.S. industrial gases market" that BOC had studied and considered prior to its acquisition of Airco, not simply the production of one industrial gas or a limited group of gases.

BOC also challenges the ALJ's finding that the United States as a whole is the appropriate "section of the country" or geographic market in which to measure any adverse effects of the loss of BOC as a potential entrant. Although most industrial gases are sold and distributed in regional markets of a few hundred miles distance from the point of manufacture, it is appropriate to use the nation as a whole as the section of the country affected by the merger. To begin with, BOC was interested in becoming a nationwide competitor in this country's industrial gases industry and did not limit its studies or merger discussions to one particular area or region. As is apparent from the evidence discussed later in this opinion, the interest evinced by BOC in some regional firms was whether they would constitute feasible footholds for subsequent building of a national company. Airco, the company it eventually acquired, was engaged in the industrial gases business throughout the nation. This clearly was a factor in BOC's decision to acquire it (Tr. 1732-37).

In FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., where Procter & Gamble, a potential entrant into household liquid bleaches, acquired Clorox, an established nationwide seller of that product, the Commission and the courts found it appropriate to use national sales and concentration data even though liquid bleach was distributed within a range of only 300 miles from the point of manufacture, 63 F.T.C. 1467, 1537, 1561 (1963), vacated, 358 F.2d 74 (6th Cir. 1966), rev'd, 386 U.S. 568, 571 (1967). In U.S. v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602, 622 (1974) the Court held that "in a potential-competition case * * * the relevant geographic market or appropriate section of the country is the area in which the acquired firm is an actual, direct competitor." See also U.S. v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546 (1966); U.S. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., supra; and Kennecott Copper Corp. v. FTC, 467 F.2d 67, 71 (10th Cir.) cert. denied, 416 U.S. 909 (1974), where national "markets" were considered as appropriate alternatives to regional markets.

Furthermore, the record shows that in an important segment of the industrial gases business, namely tonnage gases, the leading gases companies (including Airco) compete on a national basis in submitting bids for the construction of onsite plants. Such nationwide competition among leading firms in the industry in an important segment of the business is in itself a sufficient basis for finding that the country as a whole is a relevant market area. U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., supra, 384 U.S. at 575 (1966).

We conclude that the sale of industrial gases by U.S. industrial gases firms constitutes the appropriate market for the purpose of examining the effects of this acquisition.

B. Concentration

The U.S. industrial gases industry is highly concentrated. As indicated in the following table which shows 1972 market shares of leading firms based on f.o.b. plant selling value of shipments by all U.S. manufacturers classified in the industrial gases industry by the Bureau of Census, the top four firms accounted for approximately 70 percent of production and the top eight firms for over 80 percent:[3]

[3] Some of the individual firm data in the following tabulation were given in camera treatment at the hearing. In view of the fact that the information is now nearly three years old, no competitive harm should result from its disclosure and we have decided to take it out of in camera status. See also Section 3.45 of the Commission's Rules of Practice.

INDUSTRIAL GASES MARKET SHARES, 1972

Furthermore the ALJ found that from 1967 to 1972 there was an increase in concentration in the U.S. industrial gases market. Four-firm concentration increased from 67 percent to 70 percent and eight-firm concentration increased from 84 percent and 86.5 percent between those years.[6]

BOC disagrees with the size of the market used in measuring the foregoing market shares and trends. Its arguments can be subdivided into three areas:

(1) the exclusion of the production of helium by the Federal Government,

(2) the exclusion of the production of atmospheric gases in air separation plants owned by backward-integrated firms,

(3) finally, BOC objects to the inclusion of tonnage gases sold pursuant to long-term contracts.

We find no merit in any of these objections.

The ALJ excluded all helium produced in government-owned plants. BOC challenges this exclusion, pointing out that one-half of all helium produced and sold is derived from government plants. However, the ALJ was clearly correct in not counting this production since the government does not sell its helium in the open market but sells it to industrial gases companies who purify it and resell it as part of their total marketing package. Such resales by industrial gases firms were included within the ALJ's market.

[4] Based upon value of shipments of industrial gases produced by plants classified as in the industrial gases industry.

[5] Pro forma; includes value of shipments of two industrial gases companies acquired effective December 31, 1972 (CX 335-P, Tr. 516).

[6] It is true as BOC points out, and as is conceded in the initial decision, that concentration ratios reported for 1967 by Census in BOC RX 72F are not strictly comparable with 1972 data. Shipments included in 1967 ratios (both in the numerator and the denominator) but not included in 1972 data are products other than industrial gases ("secondary" products) shipped by plants classified in the industrial gases industry, and resales, and various miscellaneous receipts. But if one assumes that the percentage of total resales, secondary product shipments and miscellaneous receipts accounted for by the four largest firms remained fairly constant between 1967 and 1972—a reasonable assumption we think-then the figures are comparable.

BOC has proffered other calculations in an attempt to show a decline in concentration. (Reply brief pp. 14-15 and references cited therein.) However these tabulations are based in whole or in part on market definitions (universe figures) which include inter-plant production and consumption of industrial gases by establishments that are not classified as industrial gases establishments. Since we have determined that such production and consumption are not within the relevant market (infra), these calculations do not have any probative force.

There are instances of backward integration into industrial gases, primarily by steel companies supplying their own oxygen from air separation plants. It is true that to the extent that such vertical integration occurs, the demand for oxygen from industrial gases firms is reduced pro tanto. But that is not equivalent to producing gases for sale in the marketplace. The vertically integrated firms utilize the gas they produce only for their internal manufacturing processes. Any excess gases which they do market are sold to the industrial gases firms, and not in competition with them or their distributors.

It is true that in U.S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d. Cir. 1945) the Court agreed with the government that the extent of Alcoa's "control of the aluminum market" could be measured by examining not only Alcoa's sale of ingot aluminum, but also the consumption of ingot in its fabricating plants. But the Court did not hold that such a broader market was the only appropriate market, as BOC contends. Alcoa was virtually the sole supplier of ingot to nonintegrated fabricators of products (sheet, foil, rod, bar), that Alcoa also produced. The fact that Alcoa was in competition with its customers and could impose, as it did at times, a cost-price squeeze was an important element of the monopolization case against it. The vertical integration of Alcoa played a qualitatively different role in aluminum industry compared with the backward integration of industrial gases users. The exclusion of "in-house" production and consumption from the relevant market was proper here and is in accordance with several prior Section 7 cases. See, e.g., U.S. v. Greater Buffalo Press, Inc., 327 F. Supp. 305, 309 (W.D.N.Y. 1970), dismissal reversed and remanded 402 U.S. 549, 555 (1971); Avnet, Inc. 82 F.T.C. 391, 451-54 (1973), aff'd. 511 F.2d 70 (7th Cir.), cert. denied (Oct. 6, 1975). Even if such production were included within the relevant market, four-firm concentration would exceed sixty percent and Airco's share would approximate 14 percent (Finding 62). The change is not so substantial as to cause a different result in this case.

BOC argues that if production by backward-integrated steel firms is not to be included, then the initial decision should not have included any of the gases produced in tonnage plants owned by industrial gases companies since they are committed under long-term supply contracts and are not available for sale in the open market. It contends that as in U.S. v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486 (1974) market shares computed on such a basis "do not represent the exercise of [present] competitive power but rather the obligation to fulfill previously negotiated contracts at a previously fixed price." Id. at 501.

However we see no error in including gases produced in tonnage contracts pursuant to long-term contracts. Nor do we agree that it leads to a logical dilemma. Gases produced for both tonnage users and merchant users are often produced at the same plant using the same facilities. In General Dynamics, the acquired company had diminished ability to compete for new business because most of its coal deposits—a limited resource found only on certain lands—were previously committed. Past production figures were not indicative of future capability; hence it was error, the Court held, to use market shares based on past production rather than on what coal reserves were available for future contracts. In contrast, the industrial gases companies have virtually unlimited natural resources to produce gases. The principal gases are literally made out of thin air. Since an industrial gases firm is always able to compete for new business from an existing plant or by building a new plant, the past record of these firms in selling tonnage gases is a reasonable indicator of their future ability to compete for new accounts.

C. Barriers to Entry

The administrative law judge found, and BOC does not dispute, that there are substantial barriers for entry into the industrial gases business. To begin with, substantial capital is needed for production plants which cost $7 or $8 million to build. Larger plants cost up to $16 million. With costs of new plant construction being higher today than in previous years, a new entrant would suffer a cost disadvantage insofar as competing in areas (at the same geographical distance to principal customers) that are supplied by established plants.

Experience and a reputation for technical proficiency is undoubtedly a considerable advantage that established firms have over new entrants. Cryogenic facilities which produce atmospheric gases are operated at low temperatures and can be hazardous to employees and surrounding community if misoperated. Lack of familiarity with cryogenic technology has been suggested as a reason why many steel companies prefer to have onsite plants operated by industrial gases firms rather than by themselves. Entry on a multiplant basis is also viewed as desirable if one or more plants are to serve tonnage customers. If one gases plant should have to be closed down for repairs, the supplier would then have an emergency backup facility to provide bulk liquid gases to the tonnage customers.[7]

D. Elimination of BOC as a Future Entrant

As the principal basis for his decision that the acquisition will likely lessen competition in the U.S. industrial gases industry, the ALJ found that BOC was a potential entrant into the U.S. market and that by acquiring Airco—a leading firm already in the market-BOC eliminated the beneficial effects that would result from a competitive form of entry.[8]

We agree. Except for a toehold-acquisition entry by another large international industrial gases firm in 1968, in recent years there has been no significant entry into the U.S. market, which has been dominated by three firms, one of which is Airco. As to possible future entry, industry executives were of one of two views—either there will be no further substantial entry into the U.S. market, or there could be entry by BOC or possibly two or three other large international firms. Only these firms were viewed as having the know-how and experience to surmount the difficulties confronting a would-be entrant. Of those who adhered to the latter view—and this included executives of the two leading industrial gases firms in the United States—all agreed that BOC was the most likely of this small group to enter the U.S. market (Tr. 250, 335, 393, 445-46, 564-68, 594, 876-878). Testimony by BOC executives as well as BOC documents confirm these objective assessments as they show that BOC by 1969 believed it should be represented in the United States, particularly in industrial gases, its primary business. As BOC's chairman phrased it, only a strategy of what, how, when, and where was lacking (CX 47). By stepping into

[7] To some extent independents may solve this problem in the merchant market by canvassing other gases companies for temporary supply, and it is common practice for the major firms to exchange gases among themselves when one lacks merchant supply (CX 44-Z-37; CX 232-T; BOC RX 62-1; Tr. 1984; Tr. 2011-12).

[8] The ALJ also found that BOC's position in the fringe of the U.S. industrial gases market itself exerted a procompetitive influence (I.D. pp. 95-96 [pp. 1321-1322, herein]). Presumably, the ALJ had in mind that firms in a concentrated market will sometimes limit their prices and profit margins to forestall new entry. See U.S. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526 (1973); Bain, Barriers to New Competition (1956). No showing of such effect was made here. In fact, several executives of leading firms testified that although they viewed BOC as the most likely firm to enter the market, BOC had no effect on their prior pricing decisions. Presumably during the time Federal price ceilings were in effect, BOC's position as a possible entrant would have had no additional restraining influence on prices in any event. The record is not clear, however, that the witnesses' testimony was limited to that period. In any event, the finding of actual influence on prices cannot stand.

The ALJ also found that the acquisition increased entry barriers (I.D. p. 103 [p. 1327, herein]). Although it is difficult to resist the thought that this acquisition—which created the world's largest consortium in industrial gases—may further deter new entry, there was no inquiry into such questions during the hearing. Consequently we will also vacate this finding. Missouri Portland Cement Co. v. Cargill, Inc., 498 F.2d 851, 865-66 and n.32 (2d Cir. 1974); Beatrice Foods Co., 81 F.T.C. 481, 534-35 (1972).

Airco's shoes, BOC virtually removed any prospect that any major future procompetitive entry would ever occur in this industry.[9]

Not only did the acquisition remove whatever prospects existed that BOC would eventually enter the U.S. market by internal expansion or its equivalent, i.e., elimination of "actual entry" effects, but it removed BOC's presence on the fringe of the market which might in the future have had some disciplining effect on U.S. market prices. Although there is no evidence of such disciplining effect in the past, if present trends continue and supply becomes tight, leading firms may coordinate pricing decisions and areas of specialization (infra pp. 35-36 [p. 1365]). The possibility of entry by BOC may become a factor to be reckoned with. "The existence of an aggressive, well equipped and well financed corporation engaged in the same or related lines of commerce waiting anxiously to enter an oligopolistic market would be a substantial incentive to competition which cannot be underestimated." U.S. v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 174 (1964). See also concurring opinions in U.S. v. Falstaff, supra, 410 U.S. at 538-39, 560 n.15.

BOC's Incentives for Entry into the U.S. Market. The acquisition of Airco was motivated primarily by a desire to expand BOC's ever-widening international operations and gain exposure to United States technology.[10] BOC's board chairman characterized the United States market as the "most powerful and largest in the world [which] must be of continuing interest to any company which has ambitions to act internationally" in the industrial gases business.[11]

Although BOC started its gases business in the British Isles, it has expanded into some 17 countries, including such industrialized nations as Australia, South Africa, Canada, India, Pakistan, Italy, and Brazil. All of these were either de novo or toehold acquisition entries. At the time of the acquisition, BOC was the second largest producer and marketer of industrial gases and related equipment in the world, with sales of those products estimated at nearly $400 million in 1973 (CX 76K). BOC regarded the United States as being the most important and most advanced industrial gases market in the world and one that still enjoys a respectable growth rate (CX 36 A-B, CX 47-A, Tr. 2000-01).

[9] Cf. Turner, "Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act," 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1313, 1384-85 (1965):

"In this situation ['a market in which entry barriers for all but a small group of firms are too high'] the only significant hope for making the market in question more competitive, apart from radical technological changes or the development of new substitutes, lies in new entry by one or more of those firms for whom entry barriers are not prohibitive. Loss through merger of one of a limited group of potential entrants thus reduces the prospects of future deconcentration."

[10] There is no claim here that the acquisition was undertaken solely to effect "financial" relationships such as tax savings, earnings-per-share gains via favorable price-earnings differences, or "improved" performance through use of pooling-of-interest accounting methods—motives which have inspired many "conglomerate" mergers. See Bureau of Economics, Federal Trade Commission, Economic Report on Corporate Mergers ch. 2 (1969); Steiner, Mergers: Motives, Effects, Policies (1975).

[11] He stated:

"[T]he American market, partly as a result of its sine, is the source of much technology, much new development, and we [BOC] have to be in tune with that" (Tr. 1728).

"The first reason [for acquiring stock in Airco] is that we have always been interested in the industrial gas market of America. While there is no virtue attached to the claim of being an international company, there are nevertheless benefits which can be obtained by being an international company, and quite clearly, those benefits are diminished if we don't have a position in North America" (Tr. 1844).

The managing director of BOC also confirmed the general desire of BOC to enter the United States industrial gases market (Tr. 2658-59).

It is interesting to note that in 1969, when BOC management first commenced long range studies of U.S. market, it was emphasized that making profits from a U.S.-based operation was not the primary goal: "Despite the very large size of markets in the USA, the main purpose of a series of BOC ventures over the next, say, five to ten years would be commercial, managerial and technical 'exposure' rather than for the sake of the business itself" (CX 38-E). After the acquisition of controlling interest in Airco, BOC's chairman informed his company's shareholders that the acquisition enabled BOC to pursue its "long-term objectives." He viewed the Airco transaction as offering BOC the opportunity to enter on a national scale "in one jump" as compared to a series of slower, more expensive (and more procompetitive) steps (Tr. 1736).

Ability of BOC to Expand Into the U.S. Market. BOC does not dispute that it had the financial, technological and business ability to expand into the U.S. market (Tr. 237-38). BOC had an established world-wide reputation and had gained American business experience by participating in the manufacturing and selling of air separation plants in the United States through a joint venture with Airco from 1967 through 1971.

Uniqueness of BOC's Status as a Potential Entrant. Aside from BOC, the only other firms named by any members of the industrial gases industry as possible entrants into the U.S. market were Messer Greishiem and Linde A.G., both German firms, and AGA of Sweden. They were not, however, considered by American firms to be very strong candidates for entry, a view that BOC shared (CX 76L). Linde A.G. is primarily a manufacturer of industrial gases manufacturing equipment for sale to producers and lacks experience in the distribution end of the gases business.[12] Messer Greishiem does not have the reputation in the industry that BOC possesses (e.g. Tr. 721-22). AGA of Sweden was viewed by some as having the technological prerequisites for entry, but BOC and others felt this firm lacked the financial ability to enter the U.S. market (Tr. 1760, CX 76L).

Contrary to BOC's contentions, none of the companies in the United States which operate air separation plants for their own use, or buy large quantities, is considered a likely potential entrant into the business of selling industrial gases on the open market. None has successfully entered the market in the past and any excess oxygen or other gases they produce they sell to industrial gases firms. Industry witnesses who testified in this proceeding did not consider them to have the required marketing expertise and capability needed to make them likely prospects for distributing industrial gases in the merchant market (Tr. 346, 443-44, 564-65, 2743-44).[13]

[12] Linde A.G. sells air separation equipment in the United States, but does not manufacture and distribute gases in this country. (Linde A.G. is not affiliated with the Linde division of Union Carbide). We have also examined the in camera material which BOC has requested us to consider (BOC RX 235 in camera; Tr. 2065-69) and do not find that it detracts from the evidence that BOC was the most likely entrant into the U.S. market.

That technical expertise and marketing experience in industrial gases are not easy to come by, but are prerequisites for successful entry, is demonstrated by the unsuccessful attempt of Standard Oil of New Jersey (now Exxon) to enter the market by acquiring American Cryogenics, a West Coast producer of industrial gases. Standard's experience was not in the industrial gases field and it eventually sold American Cryogenics to an affiliate of L'Air Liquide—a world-wide French industrial gases firm. At the time of the sale (1968), American Cryogenics was losing $4 million a year on sales of $20 million. L'Air Liquide has subsequently been able to turn the company (Liquid Air in its present name, see p. 10, supra [p. 1347]) into a profitable and aggressive operation—a fact of which BOC was aware.

BOC also argues that the initial decision ignores the potential competition represented by the smaller industrial gases firm already doing business in some, but not all, of the regional markets within the United States. The difficulty with this line of argument is that unlike BOC, these firms do not constitute major potential competition to the United States market as a whole and the "Big Three" national firms that dominate the U.S. industry.

Interests Shown by BOC Regarding Entry in the United States Industrial Gases Market Since 1970. Although BOC concedes that it had strong desires and incentives to enter the U.S. market, it contends that a study of the U.S. industrial gases market conducted in 1969 convinced its management that there was no feasible means to enter. It submits that the Commission should therefore find that BOC would not have entered the U.S. market but for the "unique opportunity" provided by Airco.

In 1969 BOC's directors decided to make an onsite study of the American industrial gases market to consider "whether there are any identifiable opportunities in USA which BOC might wish to exploit at some future date" (BOC RX 181 C). BOC assigned Allan Perham, chairman of Canox (BOC's Canadian industrial gases subsidiary) and I. Greenfield, a London staff man, to make the study. Together they interviewed people familiar with the U.S. industrial gases industry and completed a report in the early part of 1970.

[13] BOC's own study of the U.S. market in 1970 confirmed this view in a section entitled "Customer Ownership of Plant:"

> "At one stage it was thought possible that the giant petrochemical complexes would own their own air separation units and perhaps sell surplus to the majors. We were informed that they were persuaded not to follow this route, largely by Linde Division who emphasized the need for back-up supplies, etc. A.D. Little do not believe that customer ownership will be of any significance in the future." (BOC RX 62-K).

BOC relies on the report's conclusion that "based on the BOC requirement of 15 percent pretax return on capital employed there is today no case for entering the USA industrial gas market as a producer for either onsite supply or merchant requirements" (BOC RX 62B).[14] Since there is testimony that the report was accepted by the BOC top management committees and board of directors, BOC contends that the Perham-Greenfield report virtually closed the door on the United States for BOC.

The contention that this report demonstrates that BOC decided not to seek entry into the U.S. market is not borne out by the record. To begin with, BOC has quoted only a portion of the Perham-Greenfield report. The report, completed in February 1970, based its recommendation on low profit margins existing in the U.S. gases industry but went on to caution that its "generally negative conclusion is in relation to the foreseeable future and should not be considered final. Opportunities could rise in the future and a periodic review of the situation is recommended" (BOC RX 62B) (emphasis added). Subsequent to the Perham-Greenfield report, BOC did in fact continue to take an active interest in examining entry possibilities into the U.S. industrial gases industry.

(1) In April 1970, an investment banker approached BOC and advised that a fifty percent interest in Burdett Oxygen Company of Cleveland ("Burdett-Cleveland") was available. Although he noted that profits of the firm were negligible and that it did not appear a very attractive proposition, BOC nevertheless responded there was a possibility that it would be interested, but that an essential precondition to further study would be that BOC could obtain control (CX 233-34). After learning that control was not available, BOC told the banker it was not interested but if the situation changed it could be interested (CX 243).

(2) In August 1971, BOC's managing director discussed with Charles Perkins, president of Burdett Oxygen Company of Norristown, Pa. (which has no present connection with Burdett of Cleveland) a proposal by Perkins that BOC enter the U.S. by acquiring Burdett and a number of other small independent gases companies. A memorandum of the conversation (which took place at BOC's offices in London) was made by the BOC official and copies were sent to other top BOC officials including the chairman of the board of BOC. Soon afterwards, BOC sent an executive to the United States to look over the company. The visit lasted three or four days during which the BOC representative made a thorough inspection of the books and records as well as the physical plant. Discussion and consideration was given to BOC's purchasing Burdett-Norristown with a group of other nonmajor industrial gases companies to effectuate a toehold entry into the U.S. market. The BOC official recommended to his superiors in a memorandum dated Oct. 4, 1971 that:

[14] The reference to a 15 percent pretax "requirement" return on capital was based on an "arbitrarily selected yardstick" of BOC management to set realistic limits to the study (BOC RX 181 C).

> If it is agreed both that BOC should make an entry into the industrial gases market in the USA and that this type of entry be adopted (from the small end upwards in the Canox manner)[15], then Perkins, Burdett, and the group he proposes would in principle be a likely route * * * The companies he runs, if not financially healthy, have a reasonable trading foothold and can probably be made healthy. The other independents may well agree to his plan and his claims are broadly borne out by first checks (CX 254-C).

Despite the visiting official's optimistic view of the company, BOC apparently regarded the company as too small to form the basis for long term expansion in the U.S. market. BOC informed the president of Burdett by letter that BOC had decided it was not then interested in acquiring the company. However the letter concluded that BOC was aware of the "sort of profits which can be made in the U.S. market and [we] are keenly interested to improve this awareness" (CX 117).[16]

Feasibility of Entry. BOC claims that it would never enter the U.S. market but on a national scale and that it would cost about $240 million for it to have entered the U.S. market on such a scale had the Airco opportunity not presented itself. BOC's chairman testified that he could not conceive any circumstances in which BOC would ever expend that amount of money for entry into the United States.

This argument depends, however, upon an acceptance of self-serving testimony that BOC would never enter except on such a large scale. No reasons are presented as to why BOC would have to enter on a national scale. L'Air Liquide—a leading French firm—successfully entered the U.S. market through the purchase of a small regional firm in 1968. Subsequent to that acquisition, it purchased additional small regional companies and has constructed an air separation plant in the Seattle-Tacoma area and an acetylene plant in Houston and one in Los Angeles (CX 335 V-W, Tr. 528-530). At the time of the hearing it was expanding production capabilities in three additional areas of the country (Tr. 528). We have difficulty in perceiving why this international firm (which was the world's largest industrial gases firm before BOC acquired Airco) was able to enter on such a modest scale, yet BOC could not.[17] The record indicates the existence of many small companies which could presumably be purchased in similar fashion.

[15] Canox, as previously noted, is the name of BOC's industrial gases firm in Canada. BOC entered the Canadian market by toehold acquisitions after World War II and is now the third largest firm in that market.

[16] Another incident took place after the Perham-Greenfield report. Dr. Albert Muller, a former consultant to BOC called by complaint counsel, testified that in 1970, subsequent to the Perham-Greenfield report, he and Mr. Perham, at the request of BOC, had meetings with the owner of Gardner Cryogenics, an American helium firm, as to the possible acquisition of that company by BOC (Tr. 671-80). This followed a study previously made by BOC of the possibility of acquiring that company (CX 15, CX 17). Although BOC claims its interest was only in acquiring this firm's European business, Dr. Muller testified that BOC was also interested in Gardner's United States operations (Tr. 676, 679, 709). Although the firm was not acquired, this incident corroborates the view that BOC had not closed the door on possible entry into the U.S. market because of the Perham-Greenfield report.

We do agree with BOC, however, that the additional conversations referred to in Findings 101 and 102 of the initial decision are not probative on the issue at hand.

We reject BOC's contention that before toehold entry can be considered as a procompetitive means of entry it must be shown that any of these firms was available at a reasonable price as of the time of the acquisition of Airco. Such a burden would be unrealistic. Also the fact that some of these firms may have sizeable shares of a local market in sales of a particular gas or group of gases would not disqualify them as permissible toehold candidates since the target market—the sole "relevant market" in this potential competition case—is the national industrial gases market. Regional producers had sales substantially below 10 percent of industry sales and one or more small firms presumably could have been acquired for purposes of subsequent expansion into a national or semi-national operation. See The Budd Co., F.T.C. Dkt. 8848, Commission opinion, Aug. 29, 1975 [86 F.T.C. 518].[18]

Industry experts suggested other ways by which entry could be achieved or an initial entry expanded. The chief executive officer for Air Products and Chemicals' gases operations who has been in the gases business for 22 years testified (Tr. 393-94):

> Q What method of entry do you believe the British Oxygen Company could have used to enter the United States market for industrial gases in late 1973?
> A * * * [T]hey have already chosen one method which we, of course, know about. Other methods available, of course, are the construction of an air separation plant capable of producing liquid gas products, to serve a particular market area of the United States within economic distribution radius from the facility. They could bid for a base load pipeline gas supply opportunity from one of the merging new markets and then add incremental capacity to that facility in order to serve not only the base load customer, but the surrounding industrial market, or they could acquire one of the smaller regional producers and add new capacity to that regional producer's production capabilities and expand their market penetration that way.

[17] Noting that L'Air Liquide was expanding in the United States, a BOC official suggested (in 1969) that "despite the very large size of markets in the USA" there could be a "series of BOC ventures [entries] over the next, say, five to ten years * * *" He also suggested "some kind of joint venture, or series of joint ventures * * * if direct entry and acquisition are blocked." (CX 38 D, E).

[18] Over twenty small regional firms were identified by witnesses. (We do not agree, however, with complaint counsel that Chemetron should be classified as a toehold firm, since its business was nearly nationwide and it had 10 percent of the national market. Nor would we regard Liquid Air as a permissible toehold firm since it was a rapidly expanding firm which had the financial backing to become a national producer. Cf. The Budd Co., supra.) Additional independent manufacturers were listed in a 1969 BOC staff report on the U.S. market, which stated "We believe that in actual fact there are approximately between 60-100 across the USA" (CX 44-Z-97).

Similar views were stated by the head of the Gas Products Department of the Linde Division of Union Carbide (Tr. 259-60).

An important ingredient of feasibility of entry is, of course, whether reasonable profits could be anticipated which would justify the expenditures necessary for BOC to make a de novo or toehold entry. If, for instance, the American market had been plagued by chronic overcapacity and extremely low profit margins, little incentive would exist for new entry. Although excess capacity existed in the 1960's, by 1973 conditions had changed substantially and there were shortages in the supply of air gases. By 1974 the market was buoyant; prices had firmed and industry was anticipating a yearly growth rate of up to 10 percent compounded annually over the next 5 years (Tr. 239, 246, 256, 391, 403, 438, 1941, 2716, 2719, 2723).[19]

By 1974 new applications for industrial gases in the United States were contributing to increasing demand. This has in part been due to the rise in prices of petroleum products. Industrial gases are now being used in the production of synthetic natural gas that can be used for commercial purposes or in power generation. The elevated price of oil has also led to the production of gas for pipeline transmission by the combustion of coal with oxygen. Additionally, industrial gases are now being used to generate chemical feedstock for the manufacture of fertilizers and methanol. These new applications have created demand for large tonnage plants by public utilities and chemical companies. The scarcity of natural gas has also made economically prohibitive the use of ammonia for generating nitrogen for metallurgical processes. This has increased demand for nitrogen produced by air separation.

Other new applications in the United States have been the development of nitrogen food freezing and the use of industrial gases in sewage treatment. Also the high price of scrap metal has resulted in steel companies using liquid pig metals to produce more steel rather than melting scrap. This has increased the requirement of steel companies for oxygen.

According to the witnesses from Air Products and Chemicals, the demand for principal industrial gases products, particularly tonnage oxygen, has increased to such an extent that the engineering and manufacturing capacity of the industry today is insufficient to meet the demand for construction of new plants (Tr. 2727). At the time of the hearing his company had recently told customers that it was unable to supply their requirements for new industrial gases plants.[20] In addition, the witness from the Linde Division of Union Carbide testified that a number of industrial gases are in short supply and that Linde has had to allocate customers. Union Carbide announced that demand for industrial gases was "exceptionally strong in 1974, and exceeded Union Carbide's ability to supply even at capacity operation." Airco told its stockholders in 1974 that peak production had been maintained "to keep pace with developing tightness in the industrywide supply of bulk-liquid products," that there was "unprecedented demand" and record sales in 1973 were due to new uses of industrial gases. These companies are the three largest firms in the industry accounting for 60 percent of the nation's manufacturing capacity in industrial gases.

[19] This is supported by the Department of Commerce which predicted industrial gases to be in a high demand through 1975 resulting in increased output and price rises. United States Industrial Outlook 1975, U.S. Department of Commerce (1974) pp. 98-99. (Official notice is taken of this publication).

Based on the fact that BOC had the clear incentive to enter the U.S. market; that it had the technological, and managerial expertise necessary to effectuate such entry as well as having large capital resources; that it earlier entered the Canadian market; that it in fact considered possible acquisitions of small American firms; and that demand for industrial gases in the U.S. was outstripping capacity in 1973-1974 with indications that this is a long-term trend—we cannot accept the testimony of BOC's executives that under no circumstances would BOC attempt an entry into the market other than Airco acquisition. Where objective considerations so clearly favor probable entry, contrary testimony by company officials as to future intent has little probative force. See U.S. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 563-569 (concurring opinion); President's Task Force Report on Productivity and Competition ("Stigler Report") 5 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. ¶50,250 (1969) at 55,521 ("The identity of potential entrants should not be established by introspection"). Even apart from the fact that such testimony is inherently self-serving, it would represent, at best, only the current views of present management. Circumstances change, as does management. Even a firm that has once firmly rejected de novo or toehold entry in a market, preferring (understandably) to enter by acquiring an established leader, may reconsider and enter if the latter route is blocked by antitrust action.[21] Clearly the ALJ was correct in basing his findings on objective evidence and other facts of record rather than the testimony as to BOC's future intent.

Also we perceive no error in approaching the question of potential competition in this industry on the basis of assessing future probabilities and market trends. The Act contemplates this. "[C]ourts should look also to the size and growth prospects of the target market * * *" U.S. v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602, 642 (1974). "[R]ational rules applying to mergers that involve the possible loss of a new entrant should take the trend of demand into account." Turner, "Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act," 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1313, 1385 (1965).

[20] BOC contends that this testimony was designedly misleading. However the witness' view of industry conditions is supported by a recent Department of Commerce report (publication cited in the preceding footnote) which states: "Shipments of all industrial gases will be limited because of lack of production capacity. New plants are being built, but completions scheduled for 1975 probably will not satisfy the rising demand for industrial gases."

[21] Such entry occurred after U.S. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576 (S.D.N.Y. 1958) was decided. See discussion infra.

If, despite the generally negative Perham-Greenfield report in early 1970, BOC still examined possible entry candidates later, there is every reason to believe that at the time of the acquisition, when the market had firmed up and major U.S. firms were not able to construct new plants at a pace to keep up with demand, BOC would be interested in entry. Simply because no entry had been effectuated at the time the Airco opportunity presented itself did not mean that BOC would not have eventually realized its "long-term objectives" of entering the U.S. market—by growth rather than by this major acquisition. The "premise of an antimerger statute such as §7 is that corporate growth by internal expansion is socially preferable to growth by acquisition." U.S. v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 370 (1963).

We conclude that as of December 1973, there was a "reasonable probability" that BOC would have eventually entered the U.S. industrial gases market by internal expansion, or its equivalent, but for the acquisition of Airco, U.S. v. Penn-Olin Co., 378 U.S. 158, 175 (1964); Ekco Products Co. v. FTC, 347 F.2d 745, 752-753 (7th Cir. 1965). In view of the trends in the market existing at the time of the hearings in 1974, and attested to by witnesses, the probability that BOC would enter the U.S. market in the future, if divestiture is ordered, has even increased.

E. The Question Reserved in Falstaff and Marine Bancorporation

Respondents contend that in the absence of BOC exerting any present fringe effect on the U.S. gases market, the possibility that BOC might have entered the market by some more procompetitive means is legally irrelevant.

The Supreme Court has expressly reserved decision on the question of whether an acquisition which has no immediate market effects except for the elimination of a future entrant can violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act. In U.S. v. Marine Bancorporation, supra at 625 (1974) the Court stated:

> The Court has not previously resolved whether the potential-competition doctrine > proscribes a market extension merger solely on the ground that such a merger eliminates the prospect for long-term deconcentration of an oligopolistic market that in theory might result if the acquiring firm were forbidden to enter except through a de novo undertaking or through the acquisition of a small existing entrant (a so-called foothold or toehold acquisition).

See also id. at 639; and U.S. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 537 (1973).[22]

BOC urges that the Commission answer the question reserved in Marine Bancorporation and Falstaff by holding this acquisition to be lawful irrespective of whether BOC would have been likely to enter the U.S. market.

The Commission and lower courts have on several occasions expressed the view that foreclosure of likely or probably future competition between two merging firms can be the type of "effect" which "may be substantially to lessen competition" with the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.[23]

We find no persuasive reasons to depart from that line of authority. It is true that unlike a horizontal merger between actual competitors, a merger between potential competitors does not increase concentration, or reduce the number of firms, in a market. There would, however, be a decrease in concentration, and increased pressures for competition, if the potential entrant entered by internal growth or its equivalent.[24] Section 7 is as concerned with "preserving the possibility of eventual

[22] Previous "potential competition" cases which have reached the Court have involved acquisitions which arguably reduced the premerger level of competition or raised entry barriers. See U.S. v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 659 (1964); U.S. v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co. 378 U.S. 158, 174 (1964); U.S. v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 462-63 (1964); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967). There is, however, dictum in several of those opinions suggesting that elimination of a future entry by the acquiring corporation into the acquired company's market is a type of foreclosure that is covered by Section 7 of the Clayton Act. See, e.g., FTC v. Procter & Gamble, supra at 575 ("If Procter had actually entered, Clorox's dominant position would have been eroded and the concentration of the industry reduced").

[24] Respondents contend that the legislative history shows that Section 7 was designed only to prevent increases in concentration, citing from the Senate Report on H.R. 2734 (which upon passage amended Section 7 of the Clayton Act in 1950 to read in its present form) the statement that the purpose of the proposed bill was "to limit future increases in the level of economic concentration resulting from corporate mergers and acquisitions." The reference to "economic concentration" was to national aggregate concentration in the industrial sector which Congress feared was on the rise. It was not a statement that mergers which only raise concentration in a particular line of commerce were to be covered by the legislation. The 1950 amendment in fact removed language in Section 7 that appeared to limit its scope to acquisition of an existing competitor (the so-called "acquiring-acquired" test). U.S. v. Brown Shoe Co., supra, 370 U.S. at 317. See Narver, Conglomerate Mergers and Market Competition ch. 3 (1967) for evolution of the 1950 amendment with regard to conglomerate mergers.

It is certainly settled by Supreme Court decisions that Section 7 can be violated in ways that do not necessarily increase concentration in the relevant market. In addition to cases recognizing that Section 7 applies to mergers that make it difficult for new competitors to enter (e.g., Procter & Gamble, referred to in the above text), the Court's holding deconcentration" of oligopolistic markets as it is with preventing increases of concentration. U.S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 279 (1964); U.S. v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365N.42 (1963). It is now settled that enforcement policy under Section 7 should be concerned not only with immediate effects on the market, but also with market conditions over the long term so as to preserve opportunities for future entry and competition. This was clearly the import of the Court's decision in Procter [Gamble, supra, where the Court held the merger to be anticompetitive because it had the effect of deterring future entry. Although we have dismissed for want of evidence the charge that the BOC-Airco merger has further raised existing entry barriers, the removal of BOC as the most likely of a limited group of possible entrants into the market has the same, if not greater, adverse effect on prospects for future competition as the raising of entry barriers. Both effects reduce the likelihood that future entry will occur, thus entrenching the existing firms already in the market.

BOC contends that if the "actual potential entrant" doctrine is to be applied it should be confined to cases where "subjective" proof exists that the acquiring firm would have entered but for the acquisition. It is true that in giving weight to "objective" factors in determining whether a firm is likely to expand into a new geographical market, there is the possibility that the deciding tribunal will err. But "if justice requires the fact to be ascertained, the difficulty of doing so is no ground for refusing to try." O. Holmes, The Common Law 48 (1881). "Potential competition cannot be put to a subjective test. It is not 'susceptible of a ready and precise answer.' " U.S. v. Penn-Olin Co., 378 U.S. 158, 174 (1964). To follow BOC's suggestion and simply refuse to make any objective determination of the probabilities would leave the resolution of the legality of many large mergers to the self-serving testimony or documentation of company officials who stand to gain if the merger is permitted. A "wrong" decision, i.e. dismissal of the proceeding on the basis of erroneous statements as to the firm's ability and incentives to enter by internal rather than external growth, would mean the permanent loss of the firm as a future major competitive force in the market.

On the other hand, if objective considerations of the firm (its capability, incentives, and nearness to the market) and feasibility of entry sufficiently indicate that it would probably enter at some point in U.S. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526 (1973), that elimination by merger of a perceived potential entrant may violate Section 7, in no way depended upon a likely increase in market concentration resulting from such a merger. Nor is a resulting "increase in concentration" the basis upon which vertical mergers have been held to violate Section 7. See, e.g., Brown Shoe Co., supra, 370 U.S. at 323-334; Antitrust Law Developments 76-78 (1975).

by internal growth or a toehold acquisition—and the decision is made on that basis—an erroneous decision will be far less apt to have any substantial adverse consequences on the marketplace.

That the antitrust laws should be concerned with elimination of "objective probable entrants" was demonstrated in the aftermath of U.S. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576 (S.D.N.Y. 1958), one of the first merger cases brought under Section 7 after it was amended in 1950. Bethlehem Steel, which was located primarily in the East, argued that it needed the ingot facilities of Youngstown's Chicago plant as a prerequisite to building new plate and structural shape mills in the Chicago area. Contending that the construction of an entirely new integrated plant in Chicago of the desired scale was not economically feasible, it presented figures showing the costs of a new plant greatly exceeded the cost of expanding Youngstown's existing plant. The District Court recognized that "it is undoubtedly easier and cheaper to acquire and develop existing plant capacity than to build entirely anew," and acknowledged both Youngstown's and Bethlehem's avowals that absent the merger neither would be able to build an integrated plant in the Chicago market. However, the Court found that the contentions, "which, of course, involve matters of business judgment and, in a sense, matters of preference," were "not persuasive in the light of their prior activities and history, their financial resources, their growth and demonstrated capacity through the years to meet the challenge of a constantly growing economy." Id. at 616. A few years after the decision disallowing the merger, Bethlehem built in that area what has been described as one of the country's most efficient steel plants.[25]

F. Prospects for Future Competition in the Industrial Gases Industry

In U.S. v. Marine Bancorporation, supra, the Court held that by introducing evidence of high concentration ratios the Government established a prima facie case that the market was a candidate for the potential competition doctrine and that the burden was on the defending company to show that the concentration ratios do not accurately depict the competitive characteristics of the market, id. at 631.

Complaint counsel has clearly made such a prima facie case here. The industry is dominated by the three national companies-the Linde Division of Union Carbide, Air Products and Chemicals, and Airco. Together these three firms share 60 percent of production. Four-firm concentration is 70 percent and eight-firm over 85 percent with concentration being on the upswing in recent years (supra pp. 10-11 [p. 1347-1348 herein]). The industrial gases industry has been classified as "highly concentrated," and is very close to being among the relatively few "extremely high concentrated" industries in the American economy. Adams, "Public Policy in a Free Enterprise Economy," The Structure of American Industry 467-69 (4th ed. 1971).

[25] Singer, Antitrust Economics 133 (1968):

"Bethlehem may have accomplished, even more effectively than by merger, both the potential for vigorous upward competition against U.S. Steel, as well as the ability for strong downward competition against the smaller, less efficient steel producers. The District Court, by finding illegal the proposed merger between Bethlehem and Youngstown, encouraged the independent entry of new capacity in the Chicago area by Bethlehem."

BOC argues that despite any prima facie case based on concentration ratios, the industry is competitive. In support of this it points to the fact that the "unit value" of many of the major industrial gases have dropped over the past several years as demonstrated from calculations derived from Census data. For example, the average unit value of shipments of oxygen dropped from $1,100 per million cubic feet in 1963 to $720 per million cubic feet in 1972, with the unit value of pipeline oxygen gas dropping from $700 per million cubic feet in 1963 to $480 per million cubic feet in 1972. Similarly, the average unit value of nitrogen dropped almost 20 percent from 1963 through 1972. The average unit value of carbon dioxide declined nearly 50 percent in that period and the unit value of argon dropped over 50 percent. BOC asserts that only for hydrogen has the unit value risen since 1963.

In contrast, BOC points out that the wholesale price index for all industrial commodities rose from 94.7 in 1963 to 117.9 in 1972. U.S. Bureau of the Census, Statistical Abstract of the United States 1973, Table No. 570, at 348.

For a number of reasons this argument, which has some superficial appeal, must be rejected. To begin with, the record shows that BOC is incorrect in stating that the unit value has risen only for hydrogen. The unit value of acetylene, an important industrial gas, increased 25 percent from 1963 to 1972 (BOC RX 190). The unit value of solid carbon dioxide has increased over that period (BOC RX 193). The unit value for cylinder and bulk oxygen in both gas and liquid form increased over that period (BOC RX 199). The unit value for nitrogen pipeline gas increased 13 percent between 1963 and 1972 (BOC RX 196). Thus, the unit value trend is quite a mixed picture.

But there is a more basic problem with BOC's argument. There are very decisive economies of scale in the production of gases from a tonnage plant. The record shows that in recent years the size of new air separation plants has increased substantially and BOC admits that as a result "there is no question that economies of scale in tonnage plants have led to lower unit cost." Thus, insofar as gases which are produced in large part from tonnage plants (oxygen, hydrogen, argon, and nitrogen), there has been a reduction of the unit value due to the declining unit costs in production. There is also an "averaging down" effect on measurements of average unit value of these gases.

BOC responds, however, that the lower unit costs have been passed on to customers in the form of lower prices. Although this is true for pipeline nitrogen (since 1966), pipeline oxygen, and argon—since the unit value for shipments of these particular gases has declined—there is no way of knowing from the record whether all or what portion of reduction in production costs has been passed on.

Respondents also rely on testimony by witnesses that competition was and has remained "vigorous" and "strong" in the industry. Although there is evidence of price competition during the 1960's, when the industry was plagued by over-capacity due to circumstances unforeseen by the industry, general and vague statements cited by respondent are too equivocal to be probative on the degree and scope of competition existing during the time of the acquisition.[26] No actual price data were put in record by respondent and the evidence that is in the record indicates that demand has caught up with supply (and has exceeded supply in some areas). "Prices have gradually firmed up," one executive testified, "because the industry's practice back in the early 1970s was that they had excess capacity and they were using a kind of a marginal pricing philosophy * * *. As demand firmed up, marginal costing and marginal pricing disappeared and full costing and full pricing became the standard * * *." (Tr. 2723). Other witnesses agreed that air gases such as oxygen and nitrogen have been in short supply since 1971 and, as previously noted (supra p. 25 [p. 1357-58 herein]) this trend is expected to continue.

Economists teach us that in a high fixed-cost industry, leading firms are prone to avoid overt price competition. Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 195 (1970); Neal, Industrial Concentration and Price Inflexibility 77 (1942). The record supports this view with respect to the instant case. A BOC document reveals that at a private meeting on Sept. 6, 1973, a representative from one of the three dominant U.S. industrial gases firms told BOC's chairman that with respect to the U.S. industrial gases market, "the U.S. gas market has stabilized and that the three main competitors no longer encroach on each other's area of domination" (CX 95D).

[26] Respondent, for instance, quotes the testimony by the president of Liquid Air, Inc. that there has been "vigorous" price competition in the industry. When asked what "vigorous" meant, he replied "High enough to make a profit"—clearly a non-sequitur (Tr. 556). The witness from Union Carbide testified "I would say there is a fair amount of vigorous price competition" (Tr. 305, emphasis added). These and other general expressions of subjective opinions by industry witnesses cannot be given much weight, particularly in view of the rarity with which industry witnesses, in our experience, ever acknowledge the absence of vigorous competition in any form.

There is documentary evidence in the record that supports a finding that in 1966-1967 Union Carbide lost sales and market share because it raised prices but other firms did not follow (CX 232-Z-24, CX 232-S). Also the 1970 Perham-Greenfield study reported that industrial gases had become a commodity in the U.S.A. "and as a result are sold essentially on price" with the result being a depressed industry at that time or earlier. Although the study observed that there were current attempts to increase prices, the authors did not believe the increases would keep pace with inflation. However, as the above text indicates, by 1973 prices had firmed up and in June 1973 BOC started laying the groundwork for a takeover of BOC.

There are also indications that the industry may tend towards parallel pricing practices. Thus, during the hearings in April 1974 Linde Division increased prices 10 to 15 percent. Airco immediately followed within a day or so with a price increase (Tr. 314).

Although current profit figures were not put in the record by BOC, indications are that profits have been rising.[27] In a statement to shareholders, Airco announced that the "1972 earnings performance of our Industrial Gases, Welding Products and Electronics Divisions was Outstanding" (CX 85X). Airco also stated to BOC during their July 1973 discussions that their "after tax return is better than AP [Air Products] or Linde: [for example] CO-2 is estimated to give a 10% after tax return" (CX 93E). A BOC staff document drafted in June 1973 for consideration by the BOC chairman and managing directors advised that although "* * * the general level of profitability in the leading industrial gases firms in the USA was poor throughout the 1960's, there is evidence that it is improving now and likely to establish a better plateau for the middle/later 1970's;" and that "skilful managements earned acceptable returns." It noted instances of two United States industrial gases firms having relatively high profit returns according to data published in Fortune (CX 76B-C).

BOC contends, however, that the threat of backward integration of tonnage users, e.g., steel and chemical companies, will cause industrial gases suppliers to perform in a competitive manner. It argues that when a gases company bids on a tonnage supply contract it knows that the customer may consider purchasing his own plant as an alternative and this fact prevents the bidder from charging more than a reasonable rate of return. While there may be some check placed on profit margins on tonnage supply contracts as a result of the threat of vertical integration, this would not assure that prices and profits will not exceed a competitive level. To begin with, it is only for certain gases, particularly oxygen, where a single customer consumes quantities justifying an onsite tonnage plant that there is any real economic impetus for some customers to consider owning their own captive source of supply. Furthermore, any company that decided to integrate backward to produce its own oxygen would undoubtedly incur higher unit costs than an industrial gases company since the latter is frequently able to recoup a portion of costs by sale in the merchant market of nitrogen and argon which can be produced simultaneously in the air separation plant. Large users of gases historically have not found it feasible to enter into the industrial gases business. See also discussion of entry barriers, supra, pp. 14, 19 and n.13 [pp.1350, 1353, herein]. Finally, as the ALJ pointed out, any restraining effect on prices by the threat of backward integration would have little effect on prices in the merchant market. Prices for oxygen in the merchant market, for instance, are in the order of five to ten times the price of tonnage oxygen. The marginal potential contribution to the supply side of the merchant market, which is apt to be limited in geographic availability depending on the location of such customer, is unlikely to have a significant impact on that price level.

[27] A composite average of three firms' profit margin on sales between 1970 and 1972 placed in the record by BOC reveals there was a 46 percent gain from 4.92 percent to 7.17 percent (BOC RX 254). Although the consolidated rate of return on investment never exceeded 3 percent during that period, investment was calculated on the basis of "gross fixed plants and equipment" not taking into account depreciation (ibid.). Exclusion of such an important reduction of the capital base in a capital-intensive industry would result in a substantial understatement of return compared to commonly accepted rates of return.

In sum, we fail to find convincing reasons to view entry by BOC as lacking competitive significance for this industry. Entry by BOC by internal growth (or expansion of toehold firm) would add a new competitor and decision-maker to an industry that is already highly concentrated and becoming more so. New entry into another geographical market by a strong, proven-and-tried competitor frequently has the effect of shaking up established industry leaders and sets in motion pressures on them to compete more vigorously in price or services in order to retain their existing market shares.

We conclude that that Section 7 has been violated and BOC should be ordered to divest itself of Airco.

II. INHALATION ANESTHETIC EQUIPMENT

The complaint also alleges that one of the effects of the acquisition of Airco stock may be substantially to lessen competition in the manufacture and sale of inhalation anesthetic equipment, or any submarket thereof, in the United States. "Inhalation anesthetic equipment" was defined by complaint counsel during the proceedings as equipment and accessories used in the administration of gas for anesthetic purposes. It is to be distinguished from equipment designed to aid patients in breathing ("inhalation therapy equipment"). The principal items of anesthetic equipment are anesthesia machines, vaporizers, face masks, ventilators, flow meters, and various connecting tubes. Many of these items are similar to "inhalation therapy equipment," except that they must be semi-conductive to prevent accidental electrocution or explosions in the operating room. This results in prices being higher than on corresponding therapy equipment.

At the time of the acquisition, Airco, through its Ohio Medical Products Division, was the leading seller of inhalation anesthetic equipment in the United States. BOC, through two U.S. subsidiaries, Fraser Sweatman, Inc. and Harris Lake, Inc.,[28] also marketed certain types of inhalation anesthetic equipment.

The ALJ found that total sales of inhalation anesthetic equipment in the United States in 1972 was $24,305,611. Airco's share of those was approximately 31 percent ($7,616,338). The share collectively held by firms acquired by BOC amounted to 8 percent ($2,013,362). The ALJ also found that sales were highly concentrated, the four largest manufacturers in 1972 having captured 64.5 percent of total sales and the eight largest, 88 percent. The ALJ found that the manufacture and sale of inhalation anesthetic equipment constituted a separate product market and the acquisition of Airco stock by BOC substantially lessened competition in that line of commerce.

BOC's threshold challenge to this portion of the initial decision is with respect to the definition of the product market and the completeness of sales data placed in the record.

A. Inhalation Anesthetic Equipment and Accessories as a Line of Commerce

Both here and before the ALJ, BOC has objected to the market definition as being too broad. A review of the specific items encompassed within the asserted market demonstrates that there is lack of interchangeability, and therefore lack of competition between or among the items.[29]

The ALJ responded that (1) the principal item, the anesthesia machine, "consists of nearly every product" in the asserted market; and (2) the remaining items in the asserted market are necessary in order for the patient to effectively receive the anesthetic vapors.[30]

While these facts may be true, they do not establish that production and sale of all inhalation anesthetic equipment are in a single economic market. Automobiles "consist of" tires, mufflers, spark plugs, etc., but this does not mean that the production of automobiles may be lumped with the production of all tires, mufflers, etc., into a single product market. Automotive parts that are sold separate and apart from the sale of automobiles (aftermarket sales) obviously are not in the same market as assembled automobiles. So it is with inhalation equipment. A purchaser may buy a completed "anesthesia machine" from one manufacturer but purchasers also buy separate components from different manufacturers. Table I of the ALJ's findings disclose that only eight of the 23 firms whose output is included in the total market manufacture and sell anesthesia machines; and anesthesia machine sales represent only 22 percent of total inhalation anesthetic equipment sales. The ALJ's second point—complementarity in end use among the products—does not establish that the products belong in the same economic market. Automobiles need oil and gasoline to be operable, but no one would surely contend that automobiles, oil, and gasoline are all in the same product market.

[28] Fraser Sweatman was the U.S. subsidiary of Cyprane, Ltd. a United Kingdom company which was acquired by BOC in 1972. Harris Lake, Inc. was the subsidiary of Harris Calorific Company, a United States company, full control of which was acquired by BOC in November 1973.

[29] Included in the initial decision's market are the following items: (1) "Anesthesia machines" (the essential elements of which are a cart, regulators, flow meters, vaporizers, conducting tubes, masks, CO2 absorption canisters, and rebreathing reservoir bags); (2) anesthesia vaporizers (containers that convert a liquid anesthetic into a vapor); (3) rebreathing reservoir bags; (4) anesthesia conducting tubes that carry the gas from the anesthesia machine to the patient; (5) anesthesia airways (curved tubes inserted into a patient's mouth); (6) anesthesia face masks; (7) connecting Y-pieces; (8) adapters and fittings; (9) carbon dioxide absorption canisters; (10) flow meters; (11) yokes, handscrews, and valves; (12) anesthesia ventilators (devices which mechanically assist a patient's breathing during anesthesia); (13) anesthesia respirometers (measures volume of breathing); (14) endotracheal tubes and cuffs; (15) laryngoscopes for anesthesia; (16) forceps for anesthesia; (17) disposable breathing circuits; (18) other miscellaneous anesthesia accessories. The market as defined encompasses equipment whether sold for use in hospitals, by the veterinary profession, or the dental profession.

[30] The ALJ found that there is a degree of interchangeability, both in the supply side (technological similarity leading to production flexibility) and the demand side among surgical, veterinary, and dental anesthesia machines. Although BOC disputes this finding, we find the record supports the inclusion of veterinary and dental machine production output capacity in the same market with surgical machines. The machines are very similar in their makeup and the principles of producing them are the same. Many of the components are identical. Cf. The Budd Co., Dkt. 8848, Commission Opinion, Aug. 29, 1975 [supra]; Beatrice Foods Co., Dkt. 8864, Commission Opinion, July 1, 1975 [supra].

On appeal complaint counsel seek to bolster the ALJ's finding on the ground that inhalation anesthetic equipment is a "cluster" market within the meaning of U.S. v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 356-7 (1963); A.G. Spalding [Bros., Inc., 56 F.T.C. 1125 (1960), aff'd, 301 F.2d 585 (3d Cir. 1962) and U.S. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576 (S.D.N.Y. 1958). But as we pointed out in Sterling Drug, Inc. 80 F.T.C. 477, 595 n.19 (1972) in "those cases it was established or undisputed that resource flexibility existed or that the product groupings were sold as a full line by most firms." See also U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 572 (1966). It is not asserted by complaint counsel that there is ease of production flexibility such that any manufacturer of one item within the product grouping can readily manufacture any of the other items from existing facilities.[31] And unlike the "industrial gases", which we found to constitute a single line of commerce, there is no evidence that manufacturers offer a full or nearly full line of such products. Only 4 of the 23 companies in the asserted inhalation anesthetic equipment market produce as many as half of the items making up the asserted market and none of the companies make all of them. Even among the four companies having the greatest volume of overall sales, two made less than half of the items. Although some manufacturers apparently serve as primary suppliers of certain equipment to other firms which resell them as part of a broader line of inhalation equipment, the record does not show the extent this occurs and complaint counsel's market is limited to sales at the manufacturing and import level. Also unlike the record with respect to the industrial gases industry, there is no evidence that the manufacture of "inhalation anesthetic equipment" is viewed as a distinct industry. On the basis of this record, we cannot agree that the manufacture of all inhalation anesthetic equipment constitutes a single economic market.

[31] It appears that the products can be grouped into three types of production processes; production of rubber goods, production of plastic goods, and production of metal goods by machine shop tools and foundry castings. BOC's contention that there is no cross-elasticity of production facilities across these categories is not challenged by complaint counsel.

The ALJ based his decision on the existence of such an overall market and apparently did not deem it necessary to consider whether competition was substantially lessened in submarkets of the asserted overall market, although this was pleaded in the complaint. Sales data on a product-by-product basis were placed in the record and we have calculated the following market shares of BOC and Airco in the three product lines in which both competed to a significant degree, measured in terms of dollar sales at the manufacturing level in 1972.

	Sales ($)	Market Share
	Anesthesia Machines
All	5,229,834	100%
Airco	2,413,231	46%
BOC	822,888	16%
	Anesthesia Vaporizers
All	1,109,951	100%
Airco	273,712	25%
BOC	579,495	52%
	Anesthesia Face Masks
All	1,170,623	100%
Airco	1,035,901	88%
BOC	36,275[32]	3%

Although BOC maintains that the market share data with regard to inhalation equipment are incomplete, we are satisfied that they are a sufficiently reliable basis for measuring concentration and market shares with regard to the above product lines. For instance, in its own analysis of the anesthesia machine market BOC placed Airco as dominating sales "with approximately 55-60% of the market" (CX 169B). Testimony by knowledgeable industry witnesses indicated that at least 90 percent of industry sales were accounted for by the 23 firms listed by complaint counsel as selling inhalation anesthetic equipment. Recognizing that "the development of precise market data could be 'prohibitively expensive and burdensome to obtain' in industries characterized by a central core of firms surrounded by a fringe of much smaller competitors," the Commission has accepted the Supreme Court's teaching in Brown Shoe that "precision in detail is less important than the accuracy of the broad picture." Avnet, 82 F.T.C. 391, 465, aff'd, 511 F.2d 70 (7th Cir. 1975); Papercraft Corp., 78 F.T.C. 1352, 1405-06 (1971), aff'd, 472 F.2d 927 (7th Cir. 1973); see Brown Shoe Co., v. U.S., 370 U.S. 294, 342 n.69 (1962). We find that the above tabulations reflect the approximate size of these product markets.

[32] $36,275 is the figure listed in the initial decision. However it understates the degree of actual competition between BOC and Airco since Harris Lake (BOC) reported sales of face masks of $76,942 in 1972 although they were manufactured for them by another firm.

Clearly in these three product lines the challenged acquisition has substantially lessened competition. In addition to being the two largest manufacturers of anesthesia machines, BOC and Airco are number one and number two, respectively, in the manufacture and sale of anesthesia vaporizers. Although BOC challenges the ALJ's findings that entry barriers in inhalation anesthetic equipment are high, when such substantial market shares are held by participants in a horizontal merger, lack of high entry barriers is not a defense in any event. Absence of substantial entry barriers does not itself ensure that lost competition will be restored. Ekco Product Co., 65 F.T.C. 1163, 1208-09 (1964), aff'd, 347 F.2d 745 (7th Cir. 1965); American Brake Shoe Co., 73 F.T.C. 610, 684-85 (1968), aff'd, 420 F.2d 928 (6th Cir.). See also Brodley, "Oligopoly Power Under the Sherman and Clayton Acts" 19 Stan. L. Rev. 285, 349 (1967). Furthermore the record amply supports the ALJ's findings that significant entry barriers exist.

III. INHALATION THERAPY EQUIPMENT

The complaint also alleges that competition may be substantially foreclosed in the manufacture or sale of "inhalation therapy equipment" or submarkets thereof. Inhalation therapy equipment is defined by complaint counsel as equipment used to aid patients to breathe, rather than to anesthetize them.

As in the case on inhalation anesthetic equipment, the alleged product market consists of a wide variety of equipment which are mostly nonsubstitutable and are generally made by different production methods.[33] Production of the various equipment is fragmented among many different companies. The initial decision lists some 30 firms in the field and one witness stated that his company had identified some 59 companies making one or more pieces of such equipment. The majority of firms have sales under $1 million. None of the companies manufactures all items of inhalation therapy equipment. Among the four firms having the greatest aggregate sales, only two manufacture as many as half the items. Although Airco manufactures 10 out of the 16 types of equipment comprising the market, the BOC firms manufactured at most only two types. As in the case of inhalation anesthetic equipment there is a failure to demonstrate that the leading firms manufacture a full or nearly full line of inhalation equipment.[34] Accordingly, we conclude that it has not been established that the manufacture of inhalation therapy equipment constitutes a single, overall market.[35]

[33] The ALJ found the following items as comprising the inhalation therapy equipment market: (1) ventilators (sometimes called respirators) which force air or oxygen into the patients lungs; (2) humidifiers and nebulizers, which humidify the air or oxygen; (3) resuscitators (emergency devices); (4) delivery tubing; (5) face masks; (6) flow meters; (7) nasopharyngeal catheters and cannulae; (8) oropharyngeal airways; (9) drain and condensation bottles; (10) adapters and fittings; (11) yokes, handscrews and valves; (12) respirometers; (13) bacteria filters; (14) tracheotomy tubes; (15) incubators used to control or assist in breathing; (16) oxygen tents; (17) IPPB (intermittent positive pressure breathing devices).

Turning to the individual product lines comprising inhalation therapy equipment, there is no evidence of any significant competition between Airco and BOC. BOC's sales in this field were virtually limited to respirometers and Airco did not manufacture this item. As to the possibility that potential competition may have been eliminated or lessened, complaint counsel stated during the hearing that they were basing their case in inhalation therapy equipment solely on the foreclosure of "actual" competition between the firms, not on any charge that BOC's importance to the market was due to future entry on a much grander scale. Respondent's counsel clearly relied on complaint counsel's statement and refrained from eliciting testimony relating to any issue of potential entry.

Accordingly, the allegation that both actual and potential competition in inhalation therapy equipment or submarkets thereof have been substantially diminished as a result of the BOC acquisition of Airco stock must be dismissed.

IV. AIRCO

Although Airco did not enter into an agreement to sell its assets to BOC (compare Dean Foods Co., 70 F.T.C. 1146, 1292 (1966)), by certain actions and agreements detailed above, supra p. 4 [p. 1342-43 herein], Airco's board of directors facilitated BOC's acquisition of Airco stock. Thus Airco's board, in exchange for Airco's representation on BOC's board of directors, consented to BOC's tender offer for Airco shares and advised Airco's shareholders of their consent and that a closer association of Airco and BOC would be beneficial to Airco. These actions technically constituted violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act since they were intended to, and did, facilitate an acquisition of stock that violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Were it not for the fact that Airco should be subject to certain provisions of the order to restore Airco's independence from BOC control, it would probably not be necessary to retain Airco as a respondent in this proceeding. Nevertheless the joinder appears desirable for purposes of assuring that certain preacquisition agreements between Airco and BOC are rescinded,[36] and we shall not disturb the ALJ's findings that Airco violated the Federal Trade Commission Act with respect to the acquisition.

[34] Therefore the so-called "cluster market" cases cited by complaint counsel are unavailing. In Philadelphia National Bank, supra, there was no dispute that commercial banks offered the various services that make up "commercial banking." In Bethlehem Steel, supra, the major producers, including the two merging firms, produced the cluster of iron and steel products accepted as an alternative market in that case. In Spalding, supra, the leading firms, including the two merging firms, sold athletic equipment as a full line to retail distributors. See also U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 572 n.6, where the Court in holding that a "cluster of services" market had been demonstrated cited the fact that 24 out of the 38 firms offered a full line of the four types of central service station protection services, and nearly all the remaining firms offered three out of four of the services.

[35] Even if such a market definition were accepted, we would probably have difficulty upholding a violation in that line of The BOC firms, however, accounted for about one-half of one percent of sales.

V. RELIEF

The ALJ ordered BOC to divest its stock in Airco within one year. In addition he required BOC to assign its stock to a voting trustee who would vote the Airco stock pending divestiture. This latter provision, which was not sought by complaint counsel, is not necessary in our estimation unless future events dictate the need for such trusteeship to accomplish divestiture. Cf. U.S. v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 249 F. Supp. 154, 165 (S.D.N.Y. 1965). Accordingly, it will be deleted. We do not agree with BOC that the one-year period for divestiture is too short.

The ALJ's order also prohibits BOC from acquiring, directly or indirectly, during the next 10 years, the business of any firm engaged in the business of industrial gases without approval of the Federal Trade Commission. Since requirement of advance Commission approval of acquisitions in this field might make it difficult for BOC to compete for the acquisition of a toehold firm as a basis for future entry should an occasion arise where the owner is attempting to sell his company quickly, we shall permit the acquisition of a firm selling less than $25 million a year in industrial gases without the requirement of obtaining Commission approval.[37] We will, however, require BOC to obtain Commission approval before acquiring any company engaged in the manufacture or sale of anesthesia machines, anesthesia vaporizers, or anesthesia face masks since BOC is already engaged in those lines of commerce in the United States.

The ALJ's order also appropriately requires BOC and Airco to cease any representation on each other's respective boards of directors. In addition the order requires Airco to cease and desist from taking any steps to implement any provision of the agreements between Airco and BOC of July 25, 1973, and of Dec. 10, 1973. We think the latter provision is unnecessarily broad in one respect. Airco's "right of first refusal" allows Airco to purchase or designate a purchaser for such shares in whole for cash in an amount equivalent in value to the consideration for which BOC proposes to sell such shares to a transferee (CX 108 B). If the Airco corporation itself should purchase back the acquired stock, the ownership of Airco would be in approximately the same status as prior to the BOC takeover. On the other hand, if Airco should seek to designate a purchaser, there should be no objection provided sale to the designee does not raise antitrust problems. No reasons have been presented by complaint counsel as to why Airco should not have an opportunity to exercise this right subject to Commission approval of the designee.

[36] Had Airco not been joined as a respondent in this proceeding, a finding of violation of Section 7 and an order of divestiture against BOC might nevertheless supercede and render unenforceable these agreements between Airco and BOC. However, we need not reach this question.

[37] Based on 1972 Census data, shipments totaling $25 million would represent approximately 4 percent of the national market.

As to a second point raised by Airco—the desirability of retaining the provision contained in the July 25 agreement that restricts BOC from disseminating certain confidential Airco business information—complaint counsel has offered no objection to this suggested change and we cannot perceive any. Accordingly the order will be modified in this respect also.

An appropriate order accompanies this opinion.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, CONCLUSIONS AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint in this matter on Feb. 26, 1974, charging that respondents, The British Oxygen Company Limited, BOC Financial Corporation, BOC Holdings Limited, and British Oxygen Investments Limited had violated Section 7 of the amended Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §18) in acquiring 4 million shares of the stock of Airco, Incorporated and further charging these respondents and Airco, Incorporated with violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45). Testimony and other evidence in support of and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint were received in evidentiary hearings and in an initial decision of Oct. 18, 1974, the administrative law judge concluded that the principal charges were supported by the evidence and entered an order that would require divestiture of the acquired firm and other relief.

The Commission, having considered the appeal filed by the respondents and the entire record, and having determined that the law judge's findings of fact and conclusions, as modified herein and as supplemented by the attached Commission opinion, should be adopted as the findings and conclusions of the Commission, now makes its findings as to the facts, its conclusions drawn therefrom and its order.

1. through 35. With the exception of Finding 18, the Commission adopts the Preliminary Statement and Findings 1 through 36 of the initial decision.

36. Finding of Fact 36 of the initial decision is revised to read:

The Bureau of the Census classifies the production and marketing of industrial gases as a separate and distinct industry under Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) 2813 (CX 296A-F, CX 312A-K). The United States industrial gases industry has been defined by Census from at least 1945 through the present as those establishments primarily engaged in manufacturing gases for sale in compressed, liquid and solid forms (CX 340A-B, CX 336A-B, CX 338A-B; CX 339A-B, CX 296A). The gases classified by Census as industrial gases are acetylene, carbon dioxide, argon, helium, hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen, nitrous oxide, other elemental gases, and compressed and liquified gases (CX 299D, CX 300A-D, CX 312C-D). The same group of gases have been classified as industrial gases by Census since at least 1954 (CX 337A-C).

37. through 52. The Commission adopts Findings 37 through 52 of the initial decision.

53. Finding of Fact 53 of the initial decision is revised to read:

There is no price data in the record as such. BOC respondents contend that price competition in the industry is extremely rigorous, and reference is made to testimony of industry executives (Dempster 556; Baker 436-37; Flamm 305). This testimony is, however, somewhat equivocal. Mr. Flamm of Linde stated that between Linde, Air Products and Airco—"they argue their service is equal, I would say a fair amount of vigorous price competition" (Flamm 305). Further, this testimony, which is of the most general nature, must be viewed in perspective with the supply-demand situation existing during the past 2 years, and testimony that prices have firmed, marginal pricing has disappeared and full pricing has become the standard. Respondents also rely upon the observations in the Perham-Greenfield (BOC) report on the United States industrial gases market as of 1969-1970 (BOC RX 62). The report also covers the period 1969-early 1970. The supply-demand situation and industry pricing practices changed substantially from early 1970 to the end of 1973 when the challenged acquisition occurred (Findings of Fact 50-52).

54. Finding of Fact 54 of the initial decision is revised to read:

BOC respondents placed several charts in evidence which demonstrate that average unit value of major industrial gases has declined in recent years (BOC RX 246; BOC PF 123). Conclusions regarding prices have been drawn from data compiled by the Bureau of the Census on the total value and quantity of shipments of the various gases, f.o.b.

plant, with the unit value (i.e., the ratio of total value of shipments to total quantity of shipments) used as an approximation of price. Declining unit value has little significance in establishing that the marketplace is highly competitive. The basic pattern in the industry has been an increase in volume purchased by individual customers and a trend toward pipeline delivery. Thus, the increasing use of tonnage oxygen with low delivery costs has had an averaging-down effect on the unit value of shipments. Economies of scale in production and delivery has also effected lower unit costs (Baker 2745-46).

55. through 65. The Commission adopts Findings 55 through 65 of the initial decision with the exception that the reference to "BOC RX 254" in the second sentence of Finding 58 should read: "Id. Figures 20 and 21."

66. The Commission adopts Finding 66 of the initial decision except for the first two sentences thereof.

67. through 80. The Commission adopts Findings 67 through 80 of the initial decision.

81. Finding 81 of the initial decision is revised to read:

Industry witnesses testified that their pricing and marketing decisions had not been affected by the perceived potential entry of BOC (Flamm 336-37; Dempster 567-68; Kimmerling 881-82; Baker 446).

82. through 91. The Commission adopts Findings 82 through 91 of the initial decision, striking the word "Bangladesh" in Finding 85 and changing "19 countries" in Finding 89 to read "17 countries."

92. Finding 92 of the initial decision is revised to read:

In October 1969, Dr. Muller was told by the chairman of BOC to terminate all activities other than searching for opportunities for BOC in the U.S. industrial gases field (CX 42, CX 248A-B). In December 1969, the chairman of BOC informed Dr. Muller that BOC should be represented in the United States; the only questions were what, how, when and where (CX 47A).

93. and 94. The Commission adopts Findings 93 and 94 of the initial decision, revising the last sentence of Finding 94 to read:

Throughout Dr. Muller's association with BOC, BOC continually stressed its interest in entering the U.S. industrial gases market (CX 42, 47A; Muller 668).

95. The Commission adopts Finding 95 of the initial decision, revising the first sentence to read:

By 1969, BOC had made a definite decision to investigate possible entry into a number of U.S. markets, with first priority to be given to the U.S. industrial gases market (CX 40A, CX 246).

96. Finding 96 of the initial decision is revised to read:

[Delete subtitle]

In November 1969, Mr. Johnson of Loeb, Rhodes and Company, an investment banking firm, was told by BOC executives that BOC was interested in making an acquisition of some consequence in the United States in the industrial gases line of business.

Mr. Johnson indicated that he had earlier relations with Chemetron that involved negotiations for the acquisition of Chemetron by another company. BOC executives expressed an interest in pursuing possible acquisition of Chemetron. In January 1970, a meeting was arranged between BOC and Chemetron officials. Chemetron's management made it clear that they were interested in permitting BOC to acquire only a minority interest, enough to protect against a takeover by other companies. The BOC representative in turn indicated that he doubted that his board of directors would be interested in anything less than a majority interest. BOC later informed Johnson that it was not interested in pursuing the matter further (CX 223, 224, 225; Tr. 832-35).

97. Finding 97 of the initial decision is adopted, deleting the subtitle.

98. Finding 98 of the initial decision is revised to read:

[Delete subtitle]

BOC considered Burdett Oxygen Company of Cleveland (Burdett-Cleveland) a possible acquisition candidate in 1969 (CX 40A). In 1969, BOC told Burdett-Cleveland that it might be interested if the company ever wished to dispose of its operations (CX 216). Mr. Perham and Mr. Greenfield of BOC visited Burdett-Cleveland during BOC's 1970 study of the U.S. industrial gases market. Although the authors of the report considered the company to have management problems and to be in financial trouble, they expressed the view that "possibly their strategy in obtaining three tonnage supply schemes could be made to work if the business ever is available at a realistic price * * * We recommend we watch and wait with only a minor possibility it could be of interest to us" (CX 232 D-E, in camera).

99. Finding 99 of the initial decision is revised to read:

Early in 1970, an investment banker told BOC that 50 percent of the stock of Burdett-Cleveland could be purchased for $4-5 million. In April 1970, BOC informed the banker that there was a possibility that BOC could be interested in a majority position in Burdett-Cleveland (CX 233A, CX 234). After BOC was told it was then impossible to obtain control, BOC told the banker that if the situation changed it should be alerted as it might still be interested (CX 243). In September-October 1970, BOC told Burdett-Cleveland and its bankers that it was interested in buying Burdett's Niagara Falls, N.Y., industrial gases plant for its Canadian operation across the border. However nothing came of the matter (CX 244A, CX 245).

100.-102. The Commission adopts Finding 100 of the initial decision, but vacates Findings 101 and 102.

103.-111. The Commission adopts Findings 103 through 111 of the initial decision, but deletes the sentence in Finding 110: "The Brazilian market has a growth rate comparable to the U.S. market."

112. The Commission adopts Finding 112 of the initial decision, revising the last sentence to read: "At the time BOC acquired Airco stock, there were a number of small regional U.S. industrial gases producers, some of which presumably were available for acquisition (see, e.g. Tr. 736, 788, 876, 393, 2734-35, 2750, 2781, 260).

113.-121. The Commission adopts Findings 113 through 121 of the initial decision, deleting the first sentence of Finding 121.

122. The Commission adopts Finding 122 of the initial decision but substituting the following for the first two sentences thereof: "The Z-79 Committee of the American National Institute consists of the leading manufacturers of IAE, representatives of the medical professional societies in the United States and representatives of the Federal Government (Hedley-Whyte 1212-13).

123.-127. The Commission adopts Findings 123 and 124 of the initial decision, deleting the first sentence of Finding 124. Findings 125-127 are vacated.

128.-140. Findings 128 through 138 and Finding 140 of the initial decision are adopted except for characterizations of sales of IAE as constituting a single market. Finding 139 is vacated.

141.-149. Findings 141 through 149 of the initial decision are adopted, except for Finding 143 which is vacated.

Tables I and II in camera of the initial decision are adopted by the Commission.

150.-153. Findings 150 through 153 of the initial decision are vacated and the following findings are entered in lieu thereof:

Prior to the acquisition of Airco, BOC competed with Airco in the manufacture or sale of anesthesia machines, anesthesia vaporizers and anesthesia face masks. (CX 135-141, 146, 147; 150; Physical Exhibit A, Table I in camera). The manufacture and sale of anesthesia machines, anesthesia vaporizers, and anesthesia face masks is in each of these product lines a line of commerce for purposes of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. BOC's stock acquisition has substantially lessened competition in these lines of commerce.

154.-174. The Commission adopts Findings 154 through 174 of the initial decision except to the extent they characterize sales of ITE as constituting a single market.

175.-182. Findings 175 through 182 of the initial decision are vacated.

The following Conclusions of the initial decision are adopted except as indicated:

Conclusion IA

Conclusion IB

Conclusion IC, except for the last sentence of the first paragraph.

Conclusion ID

Conclusion IE

Conclusion IF (entitled "BOC Exerted Beneficial Influence etc. * * *" at pp. 93-96 [pp. 1320-1321, herein]) is vacated.

Conclusion IG (entitled "The Acquisition of Airco etc. * * *" at pp. 96-102 [pp. 1322-1327 herein]) is adopted, except that in the first paragraph on p. 100 [p. 1325 herein] "17 different countries" is substituted for "19 different countries" and the final sentence is deleted. Further, the third sentence in the second paragraph on p. 101 [p. 1326, herein] is deleted and "See Finding 112" is substituted therefor.

Conclusion IH is vacated.

Conclusion II is adopted.

Conclusion IIA is vacated.

Conclusion IIB is adopted.

Conclusion IIC is vacated.

Conclusion III is vacated and the following is entered therefor: There is insufficient evidence that competition has been lessened in the sale of inhalation therapy equipment as the result of the acquisition.

Conclusion IV is adopted to the extent it is not inconsistent with the final order and opinion of the Commission.

Conclusions of Law at pp. 114-116 [pp. 1336-1337 herein] are adopted to the extent they are not inconsistent with the findings and opinion of the Commission.

The following final order is hereby entered:

FINAL ORDER

For the purpose of this order, "BOC" shall include all subsidiary or related corporations and all successor corporations of The British Oxygen Company Limited; BOC Financial Corporation; BOC Holdings Limited; and British Oxygen Investments Limited; and "Airco" shall include all subsidiary or related corporations and all successor corporations of Airco, Inc.

I

It is ordered, That BOC, its officers, directors, agents, representatives and employees, shall within one (1) year from the date this order becomes final, divest itself absolutely and in good faith, subject to the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission, of all rights, title and interest including without limitation all shares of stock and all assets, properties, rights and privileges, tangible or intangible, including without limitation all plant, equipment, machinery, raw material reserves, inventory, customer lists, trade names, trademarks, good will, and other property of whatever description acquired by BOC as a result of its acquisition of the stock of Airco.

II

It is further ordered, That none of the stock, assets, properties, rights and privileges, tangible or intangible, required to be divested by BOC pursuant to Paragraph I above, shall be divested directly or indirectly to anyone who is, at the time of the divestiture, an officer, director, employee, or agent of, or under the control, direction or influence of BOC, or who owns or controls more than one percent of the capital stock of BOC.

III

It is further ordered, That respondent BOC shall cease and desist for a period of ten (10) years from the date this order becomes final from acquiring, directly or indirectly, through subsidiaries or otherwise, the whole or any part of the stock, share capital or assets (other than products sold in the normal course of business) of any concern, corporate or noncorporate, engaged at the time of acquisition in any State of the United States in any or all of the business of (1) industrial gases, or (2) anesthesia machines, or (3) anesthesia vaporizers, or (4) anesthesia face masks, without the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission. The foregoing restriction (1) shall not apply to the acquisition of a concern which in the two most recent reporting years prior to the acquisition has reported value of shipments of industrial gases (SIC 2813) to the Bureau of Census not in excess of $25 million in the aggregate in each of the two years; Provided, however, That BOC has not already acquired any interest in a concern engaged in any portion of the business of manufacturing or selling industrial gases in the United States and no longer retains an ownership interest in Airco at the time of such acquisition.

The prohibited acquisitions in the above paragraph shall include but not be limited to the entering into of any arrangement between BOC, and any concern engaged in any or all of the aforesaid businesses pursuant to which BOC obtains the market share of any such concern (a) through such concern discontinuing its participation in the industries mentioned in this paragraph, or any segment thereof, under its own trade name or labels and thereafter manufacturing or distributing any of said products under the BOC trade name, or (b) by reasons of such concern discontinuing its participation in the industries mentioned in this paragraph, or any segment thereof, and thereafter transferring to BOC its customer lists, or in any other way making available to BOC access to its customers or its customer accounts.

It is further ordered, That BOC notify the Federal Trade Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate structure such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

V

It is further ordered, That BOC cease any and all representation on the board of directors of Airco, and cease and desist from taking any steps to nominate, seat, or admit any representatives of Airco to the board of directors of BOC.

VI

It is further ordered, That BOC shall within sixty (60) days from the date this order becomes final, and every sixty (60) days thereafter until BOC has fully complied with the provisions of this order, submit in writing to the Federal Trade Commission a verified report setting forth in detail the manner and form in which BOC intends to comply or has complied with this order. All compliance reports shall include, among other things that are from time to time required, a summary of contacts or negotiations with anyone for the specified stock, assets, properties, rights, and privileges, tangible or intangible, the identity of all such persons, and copies of all written communications to and from such persons.

VII

It is further ordered, That Airco cease and desist from taking any steps toward achieving union of interest between Airco and BOC, including but not limited to merger, acquisition, consolidation or joint venture in any market referenced herein.

VIII

It is further ordered, That Airco cease and desist from taking any steps to implement any provision of the agreements between Airco and BOC of July 25, 1973, and of Dec. 10, 1973. The foregoing provision shall not apply (1) to Airco's right of first refusal as set forth in paragraph 4 of the Dec. 10, 1973 agreement, subject, however, to Commission final approval of the exercise of that right; (2) to the restrictions on dissemination of information contained in the July 25, 1973 agreement.

IX

It is further ordered, That Airco cease any and all representation on the board of directors of BOC, and cease and desist from taking any steps to nominate, seat, or admit any representative of BOC to the board of directors of Airco.

X

It is further ordered, That Airco shall within sixty (60) days from the date this order becomes final, submit in writing to the Federal Trade Commission a verified report setting forth in detail the manner and form in which Airco has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, and the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Michael Milea/Peter Sinclair, Ltd., a corporation, and Bernard Rein, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and the rules and regulations promulgated under the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Michael Milea/Peter Sinclair, Ltd. is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida with its main office and principal place of business located at 475 Park Ave., South, New York, N.Y. The firm also maintains warehousing and distribution facilities at 3240 W. 16th Ave., Hialeah, Fla., where the firm maintained its principal place of business under the name Imperial Imports, Inc., until October 1973. In October 1973, Imperial Imports, Inc., a Florida corporation, merged with its wholly-owned subsidiary Michael Milea/Peter Sinclair, Ltd., a New York corporation, to form the corporate respondent.

Respondent Bernard Rein is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent's Hialeah, Fla., facility, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is 3240 W. 16th Ave., Hialeah, Fla.

Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the importation of wearing apparel for sale to retailers throughout the United States.

COUNT I

Alleging violation of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and the implementing rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, the allegations of Paragraph One hereof are incorporated by reference in Count I as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 2. Respondents, now and for some time last past, have imported for introduction into commerce, introduced into commerce, sold, transported, distributed, delivered for shipment, shipped, and offered for sale in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, wool products, as "wool product" is defined therein.

PAR. 3. Certain of said wool products were misbranded by the respondents within the intent and meaning of Section 4(a)(1) of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, in that they were falsely and deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled or otherwise identified with respect to the character and amount of the constituent fibers contained therein.

Among such misbranded wool products, but not limited thereto, were sweaters identified by respondents as "50% acrylic, 30% wool, 20% cotton" whereas in truth and in fact, said wool products contained substantially different amounts of fibers than as represented.

PAR. 4. Certain of said wool products were further misbranded by respondents in that they were not stamped, labeled, tagged or otherwise identified as required under the provisions of Section 4(a)(2)(A) of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and in the manner and form as prescribed by the rules and regulations promulgated under said Act.

Among such misbranded wool products, but not limited thereto, were wool products, namely sweaters, with labels on or affixed thereto which failed to disclose the percentage of the total fiber weight of the said wool products, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding five percentum of said total fiber weight, of (1) wool; (2) reprocessed wool; (3) reused wool; (4) each fiber other than wool, where said percentage by weight of such fiber was five percentum or more; and (5) the aggregate of all fibers.

PAR. 5. Certain of said wool products were further misbranded by respondents in that they were not stamped, labeled, tagged or otherwise identified as required under the provisions of Section 4(a)(2)(C) of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and in the manner and form as prescribed by Rule 13 promulgated under said Act.

Among such wool products, but not limited thereto, were sweaters whose labels failed to disclose the name, or other identification issued and registered by the Commission, of the manufacturer of the wool product or one or more persons subject to Section 3 of the Act with respect to such product.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices as set forth above were, and are, in violation of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce, under the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

COUNT II

Alleging violation of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and the implementing rules and regulations promulgated thereunder and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, the allegations of Paragraph One hereof are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 7. PAR. 7. The severity of a cold is judged or measured by the severity of its accompanying symptoms. Therefore, when respondent represented that the use of Listerine would make colds milder or less severe as aforesaid it thereby represented, directly or by implication, that such use of Listerine would relieve or lessen the severity of cold symptoms to a significant degree.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact the use of Listerine as directed will not have a significant beneficial effect on cold symptoms.

Therefore the representation set forth in Paragraph Seven hereof is and was false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the further course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has represented, directly or by implication, that the latest or most recent tests conducted by or for it, or available to it, prove that children who gargle with Listerine twice a day have fewer and milder colds and miss fewer days of school because of colds than do those children who do not so use Listerine.

PAR. 10. In truth and in fact the most recent studies or tests conducted by or for respondent, do not prove or support the representation that children who gargle with Listerine twice a day have fewer and milder colds and miss fewer days of school because of colds than do those children who do not gargle with Listerine twice a day.

Therefore, the representations set forth in Paragraph Nine hereof are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 11. In the further course and conduct of its business, through the use of the statement, "Kills Germs By Millions On Contact," respondent has represented, and now represents, directly or by implication, contrary to the fact, that the ability of Listerine to kill germs is of medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds and sore throats.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of its business, and at all times mentioned herein respondent has been, and now is, in substantial competition with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale in commerce of mouthwashes.

PAR. 13. The use by respondent of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements and representations has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of Listerine by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted and now constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY ALVIN L. BERMAN, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

NOVEMBER 25, 1974

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Commission's complaint charges respondent Warner-Lambert Company ("Warner-Lambert") with having engaged in unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by virtue of various statements and representations made in connection with, and to induce the sale of, its "Listerine" mouthwash preparation. More specifically, it is charged that, through various advertisements, including product packaging and labels, respondent has represented that the use of Listerine will cure colds and sore throats, will prevent colds and sore throats and will cause colds and sore throats to be less severe than they otherwise would be; that these representations are false, misleading and deceptive. It is alleged that the severity of a cold is judged or measured by its accompanying symptoms, that the representation that the use of Listerine would make colds less severe constituted a representation that such use would relieve or lessen the severity of cold symptoms to a significant degree, and that this representation is false, misleading and deceptive.

Another allegation of the complaint is that respondent misrepresented that the most recent tests conducted by or for it, or available to it, prove that children who use Listerine have fewer or milder colds and miss fewer days of school than children who do not use Listerine. Still another allegation is that respondent has misrepresented that the ability of Listerine to kill germs is of medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds and sore throats.

Respondent, by its answer, admitted that it has represented that the use of Listerine as directed, in conjunction with a regimen of proper rest and diet, will cause fewer colds and will help reduce the severity of colds. It denied representing that the use of Listerine would cure or would totally prevent colds or sore throats. It admitted that Listerine would not cure colds or totally prevent colds or sore throats, but averred that the use of Listerine as directed, in conjunction with a regimen of proper diet and rest, had been demonstrated to result in fewer colds, milder colds and milder symptoms thereof and less severe colds and sore throats.

Respondent admitted that the severity of a cold is judged or measured by its accompanying symptoms, and that the representation that the use of Listerine would make colds less severe constituted a representation that such use would relieve or lessen the severity of cold symptoms to a significant degree. It denied, however, that the use of Listerine as directed will not have a significant beneficial effect on cold symptoms. Respondent denied other material allegations of the complaint.

Subsequent to its answer, respondent moved for partial summary decision dismissing all allegations of the complaint which are related to the labeling of Listerine. It contended that the Federal Trade Commission lacks jurisdiction over the labeling of drugs—that such jurisdiction rests solely with the Food and Drug Administration. Administrative Law Judge Allard, on Dec. 14, 1972, held that labeling can be considered as advertising under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and so denied the motion. Permission to apply to the Commission for review of the order pursuant to Section 3.23(b) of the Commission's Rules was denied by Judge Allard and, on Mar. 2, 1973, the Commission refused to consider an application for review in the absence of a Section 3.23(b) type ruling by the administrative law judge. The undersigned was assigned to hear this matter in place of Judge Allard following Judge Allard's departure from the Federal Trade Commission. After a review of all of the various pleadings and papers filed by the parties with respect to this issue, and upon consideration of this matter, the undersigned finds himself in agreement with Judge Allard's order and it remains the ruling on this issue.

Extensive hearings were held during which a large volume of testimony and documentary evidence was received. Among the evidence received or officially noticed was some from the record in a prior matter entitled Lambert Pharmacal Co., 38 F.T.C. 726 (1944) [Dkt. 4232].[1]

This initial decision is based upon the entire record including proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law and briefs and supporting memoranda filed by the parties, as well as their responses. The undersigned has also taken into account his observation of the witnesses who appeared before him and their demeanor. Proposed findings not herein adopted, either in the form submitted or in substance, are rejected either as not supported by the evidence or as involving immaterial matters.

[1] The significance of this prior case to the instant matter will be discussed infra, as appropriate.

FINDINGS OF FACT[2]

1. Respondent Warner-Lambert is a corporation, organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 201 Tabor Rd., Morris Plains, N.J. (Admitted, Ans. par. 1).

2. Respondent is now, and for some time last past, has been engaged in the manufacture, advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of a mouthwash preparation designated "Listerine" to retailers for resale to the consuming public (Admitted, Ans. par. 2).

3. In the course and conduct of its business respondent now causes, and for some time past has caused, Listerine, when sold, to be shipped from its plants and facilities to purchasers thereof located in various States other than the States of origination, and maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in said Listerine in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. The advertisements which are the subject of this proceeding have been disseminated by respondent in "commerce" within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act (Admitted, Ans. pars. 3, 4).

4. In the course and conduct of its business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been, and now is, in substantial competition with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale, in commerce, of mouthwashes (Admitted, Ans. par. 12). For the years 1964 through the first six months of 1972, Listerine's annual share of the mouthwash market was, respectively, 43.3 percent, 45.6 percent, 44.5 percent, 39.4 percent, 42.7 percent, 45.7 percent, 47.5 percent, 51.2 percent and 51.4 percent (CX 139-O).[3]

5. Listerine antiseptic was first marketed by the Lambert Pharmacal Company, now respondent Warner-Lambert, in 1879, and has been continuously marketed across State lines by respondent or its predecessors since that time. The Listerine formula (CX 48, in camera) has been unchanged since 1879. Its essential ingredients include thymol, eucalyptol, methyl salicylate and menthol. These ingredients are present in amounts within the limits for the internal doses of such ingredients generally recognized as safe (CX 139A).

6. Throughout its history, Listerine has been presented as being, inter alia, beneficial in certain respects for colds, cold symptoms and sore throats and to be beneficial for certain antiseptic purposes (CX 139B).

[2] Findings of fact, for the most part, are made in numbered paragraphs which appear on pages 3-71, 75-77 and 80-95 [pp. 1406-1459, 1463-1465, 1467-1480 herein]. Discussions and applications of findings, as well as consideration of legal and other matters, appear where deemed appropriate. Some follow particular findings which pertain thereto; others follow all of the numbered findings. Findings which appear in unnumbered paragraphs are, nevertheless, findings.

7. Since prior to 1938, Listerine labeling has included the claims regarding colds and sore throats as set forth in CX 49 and 50 (See Finding 25, infra). These claims have been made continuously since prior to the effective date of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act of 1938, and up to and including the date of the issuance of the complaint herein (CX 139B).

8. From April 1965 to June 1973, respondent spent several million dollars on its Listerine "colds" advertising (CX 45, 46; RX 100, all in camera).

9. In the course and conduct of its business, and for the purpose of inducing the sale of Listerine, respondent has made, and is now making, numerous statements and representations concerning the efficacy of Listerine in print advertisements and in television broadcasts transmitted by television stations located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, having sufficient power to carry such broadcasts across State lines (Admitted, Ans. par. 4).

Representative Advertisements

The first major issue to be resolved is as to what representations have been made by respondent. Following is a description of some representative advertisements.

A. Print Advertisements

10. A number of advertisements depict a Listerine bottle showing the label on which appears, "Listerine Antiseptic Kills Germs By Millions On Contact. For Bad Breath, Colds and resultant Sore Throats." (CX 1, 5, 7, 11, 13, 15, 28, 30).

11. An advertisement widely disseminated in many newspapers in January 1968 (CX 21) shows a man with a handkerchief held against his nose and reads, "This man has something to give you—a rotten cold! Fight back with Listerine! Nothing can make you cold-proof. * * * But-for fewer colds, milder colds, try this:—Get plenty of rest.—Watch your diet.—Gargle twice a day with full-strength Listerine. Tests made over a twelve-year period proved that people who gargled with Listerine full strength twice a day, every day, had fewer colds and milder colds than those who did not. With a fighting chance like that * * * it's no wonder more people use Listerine during the colds-catching season than any other oral antiseptic. Why don't you?" (CX 20).

12. "Want to write fewer of these this winter? 'Dear Miss Bell, Johnny's absence from school last week was due to another cold. Yours truly, Mrs. Ryan.' Nothing can cold-proof Johnny but for fewer colds, milder colds, have him try this:—Get plenty of rest.—The right diet.—Gargle twice a day with full-strength Listerine. Tests over a 12-year period proved that people who gargle with Listerine twice a day had fewer colds, milder colds than those who did not. Have your family try it." (Emphasis in original) (CX 9, 25). This advertisement was widely disseminated from December 1968 through February 1969 and in September 1969 (CX 10, 26).

13. "FIGHT BACK. The colds-catching season is here again! Nothing can cold-proof you. * * * but Listerine Antiseptic gives you a chance to fight back! Try this:

1. Get plenty of rest. 2. Watch your diet. 3. Gargle twice a day with full-strength Listerine. Fight back with Listerine Antiseptic. Gargle twice a day—starting now—before you get a cold. You may find the colds you do get will be milder, less severe. That's why more people use Listerine during the colds-catching season than any other oral antiseptic. Why don't you?"

Featured in the middle of the advertisement is a hand in a boxing glove holding a bottle of Listerine with the statement on the label, "Listerine Antiseptic Kills Germs By Millions On Contact. For Bad Breath, Colds and resultant Sore Throats." (CX 27). This advertisement was widely disseminated in many newspapers in November 1969 (CX 29).

14. In an advertisement placed in a number of newspapers in December 1970 (CX 33), the following appears, "COLDS SEASON SPECIAL. Here comes the colds-catching season again, and nothing's going to stop it. But at least this year you can give your family a fighting chance. Make sure they get lots of sleep, good food, and gargle with Listerine Antiseptic, twice a day. * * * 7 OFF ON THE COLD FIGHTER." (CX 32).

15. "Fight Back. You Can't Stop Colds, But You Don't Have To Give Up. The colds-catching season is now in full swing and there is no way to keep your kids warm and dry all the time. So what do you do? Give up? No! You fight back. You make sure your family gets plenty of rest, dresses properly and eats lots of good food. And you make them gargle twice a day with Listerine Antiseptic. You can't stop colds, but at least this way you have a fighting chance. This colds season, fight back with Listerine Antiseptic." At the top of this advertisement, there is depicted an inverted bottle of Listerine with the words on the label, "Listerine Antiseptic Kills Germs By Millions On Contact" (CX 17). This advertisement was run in February 1972 (CX 18).

B. Television Commercials

16. In a commercial entitled "Rubber Stamp-Boy," a woman and young boy (obviously mother and son) are shown. The words "Cold Proof" appear on the boy's forehead. The following announcement covers the action that takes place: "Wouldn't it be great if you could make him cold-proof? Well, you can't. Nothing can do that (boy sneezes). But there is something you can do that may help. Have him gargle with Listerine Antiseptic. Listerine can't promise to keep him cold-free, but it may help fight off colds. During the cold-catching season, have him gargle twice a day with full-strength Listerine. Watch his diet, see he gets plenty of sleep, and there's a good chance he'll have fewer colds, milder colds this year (the words "Fewer Colds, Milder Colds" are superimposed on the picture). It's a fact that more families use Listerine during these cold-catching months than any other oral antiseptic. So be sure your family gargles regularly with Listerine Antiseptic. We can't promise to keep your family cold-free, but Listerine may help you fight off colds" (the words "Fight Colds" are shown with a bottle of Listerine) (CX 34A, 140A). This type commercial was run in March and April 1967 (CX 39).

17. In a commercial entitled "Boxer," a boy wearing boxing gloves is shown as the announcer says, "Can a 12 year old boy * * * wage a one-boy fight against the common cold? Well, he can give it a good try if right behind him there's a mother armed with Listerine Antiseptic (Mother appears). We can't promise that Listerine will keep him cold-free, no product can do that. But Listerine may help him fight off colds (the words "Fight Colds" are superimposed on the picture). If you have him gargle twice a day with full-strength Listerine, if you watch his diet and see that he gets plenty of sleep, there's a good chance that he'll have fewer colds, milder colds this year (the words "Fewer Colds, Milder Colds" are superimposed on the picture while the boy gargles). Many mothers see that their families gargle regularly with Listerine. In fact, during the cold-catching season, more people use Listerine than any other oral antiseptic. We can't promise to keep your family cold-free, but Listerine may help you fight off colds." (The words "Fight Colds" are superimposed on the picture.) (CX 34C, 140C). This type commercial was run in March and April 1967 (CX 39).

18. In a cartoon commercial entitled "Survival Kit," one character designated Mrs. Smith says, "Betsy gets a cold, Dad gets a cold and so does Junior!" A second female character says, "Well, nothing can guarantee to keep colds away see, but my Winter Survival Kit may help." Mrs. Smith, "What's that?" Second character, "My three-way way to ward off colds. Plenty of sleep * * * a balanced diet * * * and gargle twice a day with full-strength Listerine Antiseptic. * * *" The announcer concludes with, "Try it, your family may have fewer colds, milder colds this season." (A pillow, pitcher of orange juice and a bottle of Listerine are depicted with the words "Fewer Colds, Milder Colds.") (CX 34E, 140E). This type commercial was run from November 1967 through March 1968 (CX 39).

19. In a commercial entitled "School Bus," two mothers are standing in the rain near a school bus. First mother, "Muriel, where's Davey and Sue?" Second mother, "Ah, down with colds again." First mother, "Again?"-Second mother, "Oh, yes, and your family always seems fine." First mother, "I've got a theory." Second mother, "A theory? Nothing can prevent colds." First mother, "You can help. * * * I watch their rest and diet and have them gargle twice a day with Listerine. * * * I think we've cut down on colds, and those we do catch, don't seem to last as long." The announcer concludes, "For fewer colds, milder colds, more people use Listerine than any other mouthwash" (the words "Fewer Colds, Milder Colds" are superimposed on the picture) (CX 34F, 140F). This type commercial was run from October 1967 through March 1968 (CX 39).

20. In a commercial entitled "Keeps You Dry," two small boys are shown coming into the house. The following dialogue occurs: Mom, "Okay kids. Upstairs and gargle with Listerine, you're soaking wet." Jamie, "Doeth Litherine (sic) keep me dry?" Mom, "No silly, it's colds I'm worried about. We can't really stop 'em, but this year we're gonna gets lots of sleep * * * and good food and gargle twice a day with Listerine. I bet that'll help keep colds away." Jamie, "Do grownups do this too?" Jackie, "Of course we do." Announcer, "Listerine Antiseptic. Try it. And your family may have fewer colds, milder colds this season" (the words "Fewer Colds, Milder Colds" are superimposed on the picture) (CX 35C, 141B). This type commercial was run during the 1968-1969 period (RPF 274).

21. In a commercial entitled "Just A Mother," Mike comes out of the snow into Davie's house to go with him to school. Mom, "Did you gargle with Listerine?" Davie, "Yup." Mike, "How come he has to gargle? Does he have bad breath?" Mom, "No, Mike, this is the season when big colds like to catch little boys." Mike, "Boy. They sure get in my house. My mother says there's no invention to stop them." Mom, "She's right, Mike. But we're fighting back. We get lots of sleep and good food and gargle twice a day with Listerine." Mike, "That's a lot of work." Davie, "Yeah, but I don't miss much school." * * * Mike, "Is your mother a doctor?" Davie, "No, she's just a mother." The announcer closes, "This colds season, fight back with Listerine Antiseptic" (a bottle of Listerine is shown above the words "Fight Back!") (CX 35B, CX 142A). This type commercial was run from November 1969 through March 1970 (CX 39).

22. In a commercial entitled "Rain," a mother is shown at home. She speaks, "My oldest son is somewhere out there in the rain. He's supposed to be coming home from school and I can tell you right now he isn't wearing his hat or galoshes. Oh, I made sure he had them on when he left this morning. But this afternoon I found them in the front yard. That's my son. I know you're thinking how can I sit here so calmly while he's out getting wet and cold. Well, I'll tell you worrying won't keep him dry and as for colds? Nothing's going to stop 'em. But at least this year, I have a system. Plenty of sleep and good food, of course. And this cold-season, he gargles twice a day, everyday, with Listerine Antiseptic. Look, I'm not asking for miracles * * * but if it'll help keep him in school, I'll be happy." The announcer concludes, "This cold-season, fight back with Listerine Antiseptic." (CX 37C, 143C). This type commercial was run from October 1970 through March 1971 (CX 39).

23. In a commercial entitled "Snow," two boys are looking out of a window. The following dialogue takes place: Pete, "Look, Ma, it's snowing." Rick, "Last one outside's a big ape." Mother, "Hold it, before you guys go anywhere, you're gonna gargle with Listerine." Pete, "I haven't got bad breath." Mother, "I know. I know. But everytime it snows, it seems you guys catch colds." Rick, "Yeah, but so do you and Dad." Mother, "And we can't stop 'em, but this year we're gonna fight back with lots of sleep, good food and Listerine twice a day." Pete, "That means I can't stay home from school." Mother, "Exactly, that's the whole idea. Now, last one to the bathroom is a big ape." * * * The announcer concludes, "This cold-season fight back with Listerine Antiseptic" (the words "Fight Back" are superimposed on the picture with a bottle of Listerine) (CX 37E, 143E). This type commercial was run from October 1970 through March 1971 (CX 39).

24. In a commercial entitled "Rain" (Rev.), a mother is shown at home. She speaks, "This morning I told my son please keep your hat and galoshes on. I should know better. I just can't keep him dry. Oh I still worry about the colds. Because nothing is going to stop them. But this year, I have a system * * * plenty of sleep and good food, of course. And this cold season he gargles twice a day every day with Listerine Antiseptic. Look, I'm not looking for miracles. All I want is a fighting chance." The announcer concludes, "This cold season, fight back with Listerine Antiseptic." (the words "Fight Back" are superimposed on the picture with a bottle of Listerine) (CX 38, 144A). This type commercial was run from October 1971 through March 1972 (CX 39).

C. Labels

25. Listerine labels have read, "Listerine Antiseptic Kills Germs By Millions On Contact. For Bad Breath, Colds and resultant Sore Throats" and

"For colds and resultant sore throats, gargle with Listerine Antiseptic full strength at the first sign of your cold." (CX 49, 50).

26. Since December 1972, following issuance of the complaint in this matter, the label claims have read, "Listerine Antiseptic Kills Germs By Millions On Contact * * * For Relief of Colds Symptoms and Minor Sore Throats due to Colds" (CX 139-O, P).

Representations Made by Respondent

In evaluating what representations have been made, "[t]he important criterion is the net impression which the advertisement is likely to make upon the general populace." Charles of the Ritz Dist. Corp. v. FTC, 143 F.2d 676, 679 (2d Cir. 1944). When an advertisement is susceptible of two or more meanings, one of which is false, the advertisement is misleading under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Murray Space Shoe Corp. v. FTC, 304 F.2d 270, 272 (2d Cir. 1962); Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc. v. FTC, 208 F.2d 382, 387 (7th Cir. 1953), aff'd, 348 U.S. 940 (1955). With these principles in mind, the following findings are made relative to the representations that have been made by respondent as to the efficacy of Listerine for colds and sore throats.

27. The statement that Listerine is "for colds and resultant sore throats" clearly implies that the use of Listerine will cure colds. This is a reasonable understanding of the import of the statement. See, Positive Products Co. v. FTC, 132 F.2d 165, 168 (7th Cir. 1942); D.D.D. Corp. v. FTC, 125 F.2d 679, 681 (7th Cir. 1942). The statement in CX 34 (140F) that "those [colds] we do catch, don't seem to last so long" is a clear claim of termination or cure of colds by the use of Listerine.

28. In addition, those advertisements that state that you can help with Listerine or that Listerine provides a fighting chance or a means of fighting off colds or fighting back are reasonably subject to the construction that a cure is represented. All that such words could be understood to be directed at are the prevention or cure of colds or the amelioration of cold symptoms. To the extent that the advertisements containing such statements may be understood by some not to claim cold prevention, the representations as to cure or amelioration come through that much more strongly.

29. The complaint charges respondent with having represented that the use of Listerine will prevent colds and sore throats. Respondent admitted representing that the use of Listerine, as directed, will cause fewer colds, but denied representing that its use would totally prevent colds or sore throats. Further, respondent contends that, starting in November 1969, its advertisements no longer represented that the use of Listerine would result in fewer colds. The charge here considered encompasses the prevention of some colds and sore throats and representations as to total prevention need not be shown. Respondent's answer, therefore, constitutes an admission that the representation alleged was made.

30. While a representation of total prevention need not be shown, respondent's advertisements may well be understood to represent total prevention or prevention to a substantial degree—even to a degree approaching total.

31. The statement that Listerine kills germs by millions on contact and that it is for colds and resultant sore throats, together with the directive to gargle with Listerine twice a day (even in the absence of cold symptoms) is a representation that Listerine will prevent colds and resultant sore throats.

32. Statements to the effect that Listerine will not cold-proof (CX 10, 20, 26, 27, 140A), you can't stop or prevent colds (CX 17, 32, 140F, 141B, 142A, 143C, 143E, 144A), we can't promise to keep your family cold free (CX 140A, 140C), there is no guarantee to keep colds away (CX 140E) are pro forma statements of no absolute prevention followed by promises of fewer colds (CX 10, 20, 26, 140A, 140C, 140E, 140F, 141B). The message that gets across is that Listerine will prevent colds. Perhaps it won't prevent all in the sense of cold-proofing or being an absolute guarantee, but it will, for all practical purposes, prevent colds. Perhaps in the reader's own family, it will prevent all colds.

33. The instructions to fight off colds or fight back with Listerine, since the user has a fighting chance with Listerine (see, e.g., CX 20, 29, 140A, 140C), help buttress the belief that the particular reader can put up the good fight and prevent colds in her family. In CX 140F, it is stated to the mother who uses Listerine, "Oh, yes, and your family always seems fine." This is deemed an absolute cold prevention representation.

34. The advertisements run after November 1969, while they no longer specifically promise fewer colds, also represent that Listerine will prevent colds to a significant, if not total, extent. As in advertisements placed prior to November 1969, the pro forma statements to the effect that nothing will stop colds imply that nothing will stop all colds. However, the instruction remains to use Listerine daily in the absence of a cold, thus representing that Listerine should be used to prevent colds.

35. In CX 17 and CX 144A, the representation is made that the reader has a fighting chance by using Listerine. In CX 142A and CX 144A, Listerine is represented as a means of fighting back. In CX 143C and 144A Listerine, in conjunction with proper sleep and good food, is represented as a system and a means of fighting back. In CX 143E, Listerine is represented as a means of fighting back. In none of these advertisements is the representation limited to a claim with regard to the severity of colds. Hence, the representation is made that Listerine offers a system, a fighting chance or a means of fighting back against getting colds.

36. In CX 32, it is stated that nothing is going to stop the colds-catching season, but that the reader by using Listerine, "can give [her] family a fighting chance." It is thus represented that the use of Listerine affords a fighting chance against catching any colds despite the advent of the colds catching season.

37. In CX 143E, after being told that he is going to fight back with Listerine twice a day, the boy states, "That means I can't stay home from school." And the mother replies, "Exactly, that's the whole idea." This is another total prevention representation.

38. Despite respondent's position that it intended the advertisements after November 1969 to constitute only mildness claims, they come through loud and clear as representing, in addition, that Listerine, to some appreciable extent, will prevent colds. Even if respondent had no intent to make prevention claims, that does not change the fact that such claims were made.[4]

39. Respondent has admitted representing that the use of Listerine as directed will cause colds and sore throats to be less severe than they otherwise would be and that such a representation encompasses the representation that such use of Listerine will relieve or lessen the severity of cold symptoms to a significant degree.

40. It is also found that, by use of the statement "Kills Germs By Millions On Contact" in conjunction with "for * * * Colds and resultant Sore Throats," as well as in conjunction with the other statements described above, respondent has represented that the ability of Listerine to kill germs is of medical significance in the prevention, cure and treatment of colds and sore throats.

41. The above findings as to what representations have been made

[4] One of respondent's officials who was directly responsible for Listerine advertising testified (Tr. 3475-78) that a basic difference between pre-November 1969 and subsequent advertising is the change from "I bet that will keep colds away" in CX 141A to "I bet that will keep you in school" in CX 142C; that the former was a fewer colds claim while the substitute is a mildness claim. It is doubted that the average listener would draw the distinction and would reason that the child would stay in school, not because he didn't have a cold, but only because the cold was more moderate. Similarly rejected is the witness' explanation that listeners would perceive "fight off" as a fewer colds claim, but would understand "fighting chance" and "fight back" used since November 1969 as mildness claims (Tr. 3481). The purported distinctions are much too sophisticated to be realistic.

by respondent are based upon the pleadings and the undersigned's own evaluation of the advertisements in question. Such evaluations are also supported by other evidence in the record.

42. The J. Walter Thompson Company, respondent's advertising agency, in analyzing advertising techniques to be used for Listerine, reported in April 1969 that the public recognizes germs, followed by virus/bacteria, as the cause of colds, and that mouthwash is considered by most people as a means of obtaining symptomatic relief and as a germ killer (CX 97A, B). Respondent has capitalized on these beliefs. The advertising agency evaluated then current Listerine advertising as depicting "a need to prevent colds and sore throats." (CX 97B). The same analysis, of course, would equally apply to similar representations made after November 1969.

43. In reporting a so-called "Burke Test" study on the effect of the use of the phrase "fights back" as a substitute for "fewer colds," a Warner-Lambert interdepartmental memorandum prepared in January 1970, stated (CX 98C):

> "Fight back" is apparently an effective device for inducing consumer perception of Listerine as a colds preventive.

44. A Burke Test is a telephonic survey of 250 female heads of households in each of several selected representative cities to ascertain, on the day after a one-time test commercial is run on television, just what message has been perceived. The viewers are asked what they recall and verbatim answers are taken. These tests have been shown to be reliable by extended use and reliance upon them by respondent and other major package goods manufacturers. Standard procedures are utilized to insure the validity of reports based upon the interviews (Tr. 1110-43).

45. Burke Tests in evidence (CX 82-89) report on the following advertisements: "Boxer," "Rubber Stamp," "School Bus" (CX 34, 140A, C, F); "Relentless" (CX 1), "Survival Kit" (CX 34, 35); "Keeps You Dry" (CX 35, 141A), "Just A Mother" (CX 36, 142A); and "Rain" (CX 37, 143C). These tests show that of those contacted and who were deemed to have had an opportunity to view the test commercials, substantial percentages perceived the general message that Listerine was effective against colds and sore throats and, more specifically, prevented colds and sore throats and caused fewer colds and sore throats. This high recall is even more significant in view of the fact that the surveys were made on the basis of a one-time showing of the commercial, and the percentages were of individuals who had an opportunity to view the commercial, but who, in fact, may not have watched or listened to it. With repeated exposure, it is to be anticipated that respondent's message would get across to more listeners and viewers. Commission exhibits 82L, M, Q, 83J, 85-O, P, 86I, 87M, N, O, P, Q, 88I, K, L, and 89I contain examples of verbatim responses to Burke Test interviews that show the viewers' understandings that the Listerine commercials make cold and sore throat prevention claims.

46. Respondent has relied heavily on Burke Test results in evaluating the effectiveness of relaying messages or copy points to the public (Tr. 3488, 3507, 3519; CX 93C, 95A). "Use to prevent colds" was such a copy point of the commercial "Keeps You Dry" (CX 141B) and this copy point got across at a high level (CX 141B, 92D).

47. In summary, the findings as to what respondent has represented are based upon the pleadings and the undersigned's own evaluation of the advertisements in question. They are also found upon the basis of the facts recited in Findings 42-46.

Respondent (RPF 253) asserts that a company's intent in presenting an advertisement is probative of the actual meaning of, and the impression conveyed by, that advertisement, and that it exercised good faith to insure the truthfulness of its advertising. To the contrary, here, where the issue is the truth or falsity of respondent's representations, good faith and lack of intent to deceive is irrelevant. National Dynamics Corp., 82 F.T.C. 488, 553 (1973). An unintentional misrepresentation and lack of knowledge as to the falsity of a representation is no defense to a charge of misleading advertising. Gimbel Bros. Inc. v. FTC, 116 F.2d 578, 579 (2d Cir. 1941). As stated in Ford Motor Co. v. FTC, 120 F.2d 175, 181 (6th Cir. 1941), "The question [of whether an advertisement is false or has the capacity or tendency to mislead] does not depend upon the purpose of the advertisement nor upon the good or bad faith of the advertiser."

The Truth of Warner-Lambert's Representations as to the Efficacy of Using Listerine as Directed for the Prevention, Cure and Relief of Colds and Sore Throats and Cold Symptoms

For the reasons and on the basis of the findings stated below, the undersigned finds that the use of Listerine will not prevent or result in fewer colds or sore throats, will not cure colds or sore throats and will not cause colds or their symptoms, including sore throats, to be less severe than they otherwise would be; and that the ability of Listerine to kill germs is of no medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds and sore throats.

In support of the allegations of the complaint, Commission counsel produced highly qualified and eminent physicians and pharmacologists who stated their opinions as to the efficacy of Listerine and gave sound bases therefor. This is in contrast with the opinions given by respondent's experts which were founded on weak and unreliable bases. Some of their tenuous and unfounded theories reflect, in part, long-standing connections these witnesses have had with respondent. Respondent, and some of its expert witnesses, in large part, rely upon the results of the Reddish and St. Barnabas tests or studies that were conducted on behalf of respondent. These tests are inadequate to constitute probative evidence in support of respondent's cold claims as to Listerine. Consequently, to the extent respondent's experts have relied upon these tests for their expert opinions, their opinions are of little or no weight. Other tests and matters relied upon by respondent provide little of probative value in this case.

48. The common cold is caused by virus particles being inhaled into the nose. These virus particles become attached to cells in the nasal pharynx. They enter the cells where they multiply. Some viruses cause the cells to rupture allowing the viruses to spread to other cells. Other types of viruses spread directly from cell to cell by a budding process. Thus, the cells are damaged causing the patient to perceive that he has a cold. Cold viruses do not involve the oral cavity (Gwaltney 384-86; Hornick 477-78; Seal 546-48, 591; Proctor 606-07, 654; Parrott 898-99; Sanders 852-53, Kilbourne 1053-54, 1089-90).

49. Whether or not one gets a cold is not affected by diet, rest or exposure to the elements (Gwaltney 394, 396; Hornick 479, 481; Proctor 631; Parrott 907).

50. A common cold is a viral infection of the upper respiratory tract which manifests itself as a combination of symptoms including, to varying degrees, stuffy nose, runny nose, postnasal drip, burning sensation in the nose, sore throat, sneezing, coughing, burning eyes, fever, general malaise, muscle ache, and mild headache. Not all symptoms are always present (Gwaltney 380; Hornick 475; Seal 544-45; Sanders 836; Parrott 894; Kilbourne 1054; Knight 1095; Sadusk 3201).

51. Bacteria play very little part in the common cold. Apart from viruses, cold type symptoms may be caused by the bacteria called Beta Hemolytic Streptococci or Group A Hemolytic Streptococci, more commonly referred to as a strep throat, and another organism somewhere in between a virus and a bacteria called microplasma pneumonia. These agents may cause at most 5 to 10 percent of the occurrences of cold-like symptoms. These ailments, however, must be treated with specific medicinal agents. In the case of strep throat, failure to treat properly may result in rheumatic fever, valvular heart disease and kidney infections, which are very serious to the point of being life-threatening. Microplasma pneumonia is a lingering ailment if antibiotics are not used. It would be inappropriate to treat patients with strep throat or microplasma pneumonia with Listerine or with anything other than the specific medications that should be prescribed (Gwaltney 380-81, 384-85, 438, 453-54, 486, 493-94; Proctor 610; Rammelkamp 767-71, 799-800; Sanders 836-40, 870; Parrott 896-97, 900-01, 918-19; Knight 1925-26, 2037-40, 2048).

52. The foregoing finding buttresses all of the other evidence to the effect that common colds are caused by viruses and those other agents which cause cold-like symptoms should be ignored in this case.

53. The duration of a cold is the same whether it is treated or untreated. It is self-limiting in the sense that if you do nothing for it, it will go away on its own (Hornick 476; Seal 549-50; Haggie 1810-11).

54. The use of Listerine will not prevent or result in fewer colds or sore throats (Gwaltney 391; Hornick 479; Seal 556; Proctor 617; Schwartz 642; Rammelkamp 781-82; Sanders 832-38; Parrott 901; Modell 1011; Kilbourne 1057). Respondent has admitted that Listerine will not totally prevent colds (Ans., par. 6).

55. The use of Listerine will not cure colds or sore throats (Ans., par. 6; Gwaltney 389; Hornick 479; Proctor 618; Parrott 905).

56. The use of Listerine will not cause colds or sore throats to be milder nor will it relieve or have a beneficial effect on cold symptoms (Gwaltney 392, 448, 451; Hornick 483-85; Seal 556-57; Proctor 618; Schwartz 692-93; Rammelkamp 782; Sanders 859-60; Parrott 906-07; Modell 1005-12; Kilbourne 1057-58).

57. Gargling may give transient relief to a sore throat to the extent that it may remove the debris that has accumulated. It also may provide a soothing effect for a short period of time. Gargling, however, may reach only the forward portion of the throat, but not the posterior pharynx. Any type of material removed would soon be replaced. This relief, however, is provided by any type gargle, warm for soothing effect, and Listerine does not add to these transient benefits (Gwaltney 395, 446-47; Hornick 483; Seal 557, 566; Proctor 616-17; Schwartz 682-83; Rammelkamp 777, 781-83; Sanders 860, 862; Parrott 906-07; Modell 1011, 1038-39). Thus, any relief to a sore throat by gargling with Listerine is not peculiarly attributable to Listerine. Further, the relief so afforded is not to any significant degree.

58. Colds are not caused by bacteria. Bacteria in the oral cavity play no role in cold symptoms. The ability of Listerine to kill millions of germs on contact, therefore, is of no medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds or sore throats (Gwaltney 397, 453; Hornick 486, 488-89; Seal 551-53; Proctor 609, 616-18; Rammelkamp 776-77; Sanders 836; Parrott 918-19; Kilbourne 1058; see also Knight 2048).

The above findings, to the extent not grounded on admissions, are based primarily upon the opinions of physicians who have spent most of their medical careers in the field of respiratory diseases, who have achieved high positions and eminence in that field, both in research and practice, and who have maintained a current and thorough knowledge of what is known and what has transpired in this field. Also relied upon are the opinions of two highly qualified pharmacologists. As previously indicated, the undersigned has observed and been impressed with the demeanor and forthrightness of these experts and the sound bases for their opinions. To the extent not already incorporated in the above findings, some of these factual bases are as follows:

59. Dr. Sanders' explanation, in part, as to the factual bases of his opinion of the lack of efficacy of Listerine in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds and sore throats is illustrative:

> * * * Obviously, I have been taught, I have read a great deal. I have had a lot of experience with patients and patient care. We have been very, very concerned about viral and bacterial respiratory infections. * * * We have been through any number of decades of attempts to prevent or treat these kinds of infections by topical applications of preventive agents to surfaces of highly active microbial agents like the penicillins or the tepacillins or the various other highly potent anti-microbial agents. In addition, a variety of other agents with known anti-bacterial activity of high potency have been applied topically and have just been not effective in preventing infections (Tr. 838).

* * * * * * *

> I begin with my teaching wherein I hear these things taught in lectures and so forth as I go through medical school, internship, residency—I continue to read—I am involved in patient care. I inquire of patients what they have done, what they have not done in attempts to prevent, treat, and so forth, and with this kind of information, you formulate an opinion, and the opinion, as well as the weight of scientific evidence, says that topically applied agents have no role in prevention or treatment of colds. My colleagues, my peers, patient experience, it is a combination of those things (Tr. 850-51).

60. There is no acceptable rationale for the gargling of Listerine to be of any benefit in curing or ameliorating a cold (Gwaltney 393; Proctor 621-23; Kilbourne 1058).

61. Cold viruses enter through the nose, sometimes through the eye. They do not enter through the mouth. Experiments attempting to infect people through the mouth have been unsuccessful (Gwaltney 385-86; Seal 546-47; Proctor 618, 654, 660).

62. The site of a cold infection is confined to the nose and nasopharynx (Gwaltney 384; Hornick 477; Seal 568-69).

63. Viruses penetrate cells very quickly once they contact the cell walls. Viruses live in and do damage to cells. Viruses propagate rapidly within cells and spread almost immediately to other cells as they are released upon killing the cells they have invaded (Seal 576, 578; Proctor 607, 655; Sanders 853).

64. Children have six to eight colds a year. Adults have two to three. Viruses may be distinguished as lipids (which include influenzas, parainfluenzas and coronas) and nonlipids (which include rhinoviruses, adenoviruses and enteroviruses). Rhinoviruses account for some 30 percent of adults' colds (Gwaltney 383, 432-33). The ingredients of Listerine have little or no virucidal effect on rhinoviruses (Gwaltney 393).

65. There is no known compound taken orally that will alter the natural history of a cold. There are no drugs which will cure the common cold (Rammelkamp 781-82; Parrott 902). Only two agents are known to prevent colds—a rhinovirus vaccine administered in the nose which acts against the particular strain involved and an antiviral substance made from the body called interferon. There is also a drug called amantadine which is limited in its effect to certain influenza viruses. It is not commonly used because its efficacy is questionable (Hornick 474; Seal 550; Parrott 901, 922).

66. In order for a product to be efficacious with respect to a cold it must be able to interfere with the activities of the virus. This is much more complex than merely trying to kill a bacteria or a virus. Hence, over the past 10 to 15 years, experiments with various substances known to be capable of killing viruses in solutions have been found ineffective (Hornick 516-17). There is no known way a cold can be aborted or the course of the infection changed. There is no known substance, certainly not those in Listerine, capable of affecting the pathogenesis of a cold. Gargling with Listerine offers no mechanism for affecting the course of a cold or lessening its duration (Proctor 618; Kilbourne 1055, 1057-58).

67. Antibodies have been shown by studies to be valueless against viruses that cause colds. This includes antiviral and antibiotic agents. Penicillin and sulfanomides breathed directly into the nose, the nasopharynx and the lungs proved valueless, even though taken systemically, they are helpful in killing off pathogenic material. The use of antibiotics is useless in the prevention or treatment of a cold in any respect (Hornick 480, 516-17; Proctor 619-20; Sanders 838, 852-53, 872-73).

68. Not only have antibiotics been found valueless, but their indiscriminate use should be avoided because it disturbs the ecological balance and may cause the regrowth and spread of resistant microorganisms. Also it may cause the disappearance of impeding ones. Thus, there may be the overgrowing and invasion of undesirable bacteria which may become resistant to antibiotics when they are subsequently required. Secondary infections thus may be incurred by the indiscriminate use of antibiotics (Sanders 872-73). Antibiotics are not used to treat colds (Seal 590).

69. The mechanism of gargling makes it virtually impossible for the gargle to reach the nasal passages or the lower respiratory tract. When gargling, the palate closes off the nasal passage and nasopharynx and the glottis closes off the entrance to the lower respiratory tract. The gargle is confined to the mouth chamber. Hence, Listerine would not reach the site of infection or manifestation of symptoms in any medically significant concentration. Any vapors that might reach the site where the action is would not be in therapeutic concentration and, in any event, would soon be swept away. Thus, the gargling with Listerine would be ineffective in preventing or producing fewer cold infections or in relieving or reducing the severity of cold symptoms (Gwaltney 393, 448; Hornick 483; Seal 554-56, 571, 573; Proctor 616-19; Rammelkamp 787; Sanders 854; Parrott 904).

70. Even if gargling with Listerine caused its ingredients to reach the nose and nasopharynx, they would not penetrate the cells where the action of the viruses would be taking place. Hence, Listerine would still be ineffective in this regard (Hornick 481-82; Parrott 904). If Listerine's ingredients were in a concentration strong enough to be effective and reached the infected cells in therapeutic strength and did and could penetrate the cells, the cells would be killed. This would be undesirable as it would destroy the protective covering of the lining of the nose and throat and so provide portals of entry for various bacteria (Hornick 482-83).

71. Colds are sometimes followed by secondary infections caused by bacteria known as secondary invaders. Instances are sinusitis and otitis media (middle ear infection) where drainage from the sinuses or middle ear is impaired by the cold, and bacteria which are already in those sites get the opportunity, because of the lack of drainage, to cause trouble. Another secondary infection is peritonsillar cellulitis. The ingredients of Listerine, however, would not reach the resting places of the secondary invaders. Listerine could not reach the sinuses, the middle ear or the deep crypts of the tonsils or adenoids or other deep-seated places where such bacteria might be. Listerine, therefore, would be ineffective to prevent, cure or alleviate such secondary infections (Seal 552-54, 572; Proctor 614-15, 618; Rammelkamp 772-74, 811-12; Sanders 842, 844).

72. While Listerine kills millions of bacteria in the mouth, it also leaves millions. It is impossible to sterilize any area of the mouth, let alone the entire mouth. There are significant numbers of bacteria in various tissues, tissue folds and crypts which Listerine can't reach. For example, there is more flora in the crevices of the teeth than on the roof of the mouth. The bacteria grow back quickly or the voids are quickly replaced by other bacteria. The use of Listerine has only a transient effect on the flora (Hornick 488-89, 523-24; Seal 554; Proctor 620; Sanders 847, 881-83).

73. To the extent that Listerine may kill millions of bacteria in the mouth, it would do so only ahead of the soft palate. This would have nothing to do with the throat, nose or the posterior pharynx. Consequently, the killing of germs in the mouth would have nothing to do with preventing, curing or relieving colds or coughs or cold symptoms (Hornick 483; Seal 554; Rammelkamp 777). The bacteria in the normal flora of the mouth play no role in the causation of colds or in the symptoms of colds. Thus, killing some of those bacteria would have no effect on the prevention, cure or symptoms of colds or coughs (Sanders 846-47, 879-80; And see Findings 48, 51, 52, 58 and 62, supra).

74. Methyl salicylate is a derivative of salicylic acid, which is used as a systemic analgesic (Schwartz 682). Methyl salicylate is generally used in a liniment for analgesic purposes, but it must be in sufficient quantity so it can be absorbed. Even when used topically as a rub-on, there would have to be up to five times as much methyl salicylate as there is in Listerine to be effective as an analgesic. Used as part of a gargle, the amount of methyl salicylate is insufficient and the time of the gargle is too brief to be of any analgesic benefit. After the gargle, the amount left in vapor form would be insignificant and would soon be washed away (Modell 1004-07, 1014-18; Schwartz 683-84).

75. Methyl salicylate acts as a counter-irritant by increasing the blood flow. Even if the methyl salicylate in Listerine were in a high enough concentration and reached the area of the sore throat, which it does not (other than for a very small portion thereof), it would increase the blood flow. This would be counter-soothing because a sore throat, in large part, is the result of too much blood flow (Schwartz 682-83).

76. Menthol, when inhaled as a vapor in high concentration, would act as a coolant and decongestant. The relief, however, would be transient, ceasing almost immediately after the stopping of the inhalation. The amount of menthol in Listerine, however, is so low that any quantity that might reach the cold-affected areas would be insufficient to have any significant effect (Schwartz 684-86, 712-13; Modell 1009, 1028). Menthol, can also have an anesthetic effect if applied in sufficient concentration to the mucous membrane. Even when applied directly to the affected area, as contrasted to what might reach that area by gargling, there would have to be a concentration of from two to five times as much menthol as there is in Listerine (Modell 1009, 1025-26).

77. Thymol has been used as an expectorant, but is not now recognized as being effective for that purpose. It has also been used as an antibacterial agent (Schwartz 678, 690). Thymol has also been used to relieve congestion of the respiratory tract. When so used, however, it is generally applied directly as a steam vapor. Any relief is transient. Even when so applied directly for nasal congestion and inflammation, to be effective, two to five times as much thymol as there is in Listerine is required. The amount present in Listerine is insufficient, particularly since the gargle is for a relatively short period of time and gargling does not afford the direct application to the affected parts (Schwartz 678-79; Modell 1008, 1029).

78. Eucalyptol is related to thymol. It too has been discredited as an expectorant agent. Eucalyptol and thymol have been applied directly to the nose to relieve nasal congestion. Eucalyptol could act as a topical analgesic if applied directly and if about five times as much were used as is found in Listerine. Dentists use eucalyptol as a topical anesthetic but, when so used, the product is placed directly in the tooth cavity. Again, to relieve nasal congestion, a direct steam vapor application would be required in concentrations two to five times that of Listerine. Application by means of a gargle is too brief and the concentration of what is being gargled is too weak, even if all of it were to reach the desired site (Schwartz 688-90; Modell 1010, 1029-30).

79. Respondent contends that the pharmacologists called by complaint counsel, Drs. Schwartz and Modell, testified as to the effects of the individual active ingredients in Listerine but failed to take into account the cumulative effects of such ingredients. To the contrary, Dr. Schwartz made it clear that everything he testified to with respect to the individual ingredients applies collectively to the entire preparation and that if all of the Listerine gargled could vaporize, it would still not be an effective dosage (Tr. 710, 712). Dr. Modell similarly had in mind the cumulative effects of the various active ingredients of Listerine when he testified to its lack of efficacy (Tr. 1010-11, 1023, 1037).

80. This record does not establish the percentage of the active ingredients of Listerine that vaporize when that product is gargled and what portion of such vapors reach the nose and nasopharynx. Taking into account, however, the insufficient concentration to start with and the loss of ingredients by such normal activities as smoking, drinking and eating, it is obvious that only a small percentage of such insufficient quantities would vaporize and reach the nose and nasopharynx.

Clinical Studies

Before discussing the opinion testimony of the experts produced by respondent, it would be well to consider the clinical studies conducted on behalf of respondent. This is because much of respondent's experts' opinions were based upon their results, particularly the results of the St. Barnabas study. Preliminary to discussing the studies, it is important to understand what has been termed the placebo effect of medicines on users and the bias that is built into a study if the control group, those who are not taking the agent being tested and who are being compared with those being tested, is not provided with a "placebo" agent that simulates the product being tested. Another built-in bias to be considered is that of the investigator if he knows which of the persons he is examining are receiving the tested medication and which are not.

81. People who are given medication for an ailment frequently feel better because they think they should, even though the product has no therapeutic value. There are very few people who are not susceptible to this phenomenon (Seal 562, 566; Proctor 659; Rammelkamp 785). As Dr. Proctor testified, "Even with severe pain, you can substitute sugar for morphine and about 30 percent of the people will be relieved of their pain." (Tr. 659). And as Dr. Rammelkamp explained, "[Y]ou see paralysis even stopped where you just give an injection of salt water." (Tr. 783). This is known as the placebo effect. The placebo effect is always present when medication is taken (Shirkey 2635).

82. Because of the placebo effect, it is important, when attempting to conduct a meaningful clinical study, that the control group be given a placebo which simulates in appearance and taste the product being given to the test group. By this procedure, no one in the study group knows whether he is taking the medication in question or the placebo. In this manner, the placebo effect is neutralized between the test and control groups, and any recorded difference between the two groups can more reliably be attributed to the medication being tested. The importance of utilizing a placebo and of the subjects not knowing whether they are taking the tested medication or the placebo is extremely critical when conducting a cold test. This is because colds are subjective ailments, being related in terms of relative degrees of severity by the subjects, and the ailment is self-limiting and improves even without medication. Narrative descriptions of cold symptoms are not too reliable, particularly when the subject must recall the severity of symptoms for any past period. Also, the differences to be measured are very small. This makes a cold study a very difficult and tricky one to conduct and calls for rigid controls including the use of a proper placebo and lack of knowledge on the part of the subjects as to whether they are in the test or control groups.[5] (Gwaltney 407, 408; Hornick 476, 497, 499, 502; Seal 549-50, 562; Rammelkamp 783-84; Haggie 1794, 1808-11; Knight 2051; Shirkey 2637, 2655-56; Nitzberg 2816-20, 2823; Lamm 2935; Carson 3055-56, 3585-86, 3589; Bogarty 3072-73, 3115-16; Sadusk 3206, 3209, 3217-26, 3277; Jawetz 3698-99, 3742; Charache 3838-39; Wehrle 3995, 4011, 4013-15, 4037-39; Lasagna 4108, 4126, 4130-31, 4134, 4160, 4162; CX 162G-T). Without such precautions, it is clear that the test results will reflect bias in favor of the tested agent.

83. Another bias that must be avoided is that of the investigator who is recording the results as narrated to him by the subjects or as observed by him when he conducts his examination. Every investigator has his own biases. It is important that the investigator not know whether the subjects are taking the test agent or are in the control group. Otherwise, he will subconsciously try to give his employer the answers the employer wants (Gwaltney 407; Haggie 1794; Knight 2051; Lamm 2934, 2937; Sadusk 3206; Carson 3589, 3601; Jawetz 3698-3701; Wehrle 3995, 4013-15, 4037-39; Lasagna 4126, 4133-34; CX 162G-I). As Dr. Knight reported to respondent (CX 162G-H):

> * * * In the absence of double blind controls, however, there is no way to exclude the possibility of some bias. There is a tendency of both patients and experimentalists to see a favorable effect of medication in any experiment.

As respondent's statistical expert testified (Lamm 2934):

> * * * [T]he important thing in this type of study is that your investigator be blind.

And, as one of respondent's expert medical witnesses testified (Sadusk 3228-29):

> If the doctor knew [which subject that came to him was a control and which was a test]—and this would indicate that the doctor was dishonest because he would actually ask each person—the experiment, of course, would not be valid.

With these basic requirements in mind, we now consider the two major studies conducted on behalf of the respondent and upon which the respondent relies.

(1) The St. Barnabas Test

84. A clinical study purporting to show the efficacy of Listerine on the common cold was conducted at the St. Barnabas Catholic School, Bronx, N.Y., during the four year period 1967-1971. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of twice daily rinsing and gargling with Listerine on the incidence, duration and severity of the common cold and its symptoms. It was conducted during the 26-week cold season of each year, i.e., November to April. Four 26-week interim reports were compiled which include statistical analyses (CX 51; RX 81, 83, 84).

[5] For example, investigators at the National Institutes of Health have questioned a cold study they conducted regarding the use of Vitamin C because they discovered that a significant number of subjects guessed correctly whether they were in the placebo group or the group taking Vitamin C (Hornick 501).

85. The St. Barnabas School administration and parents of the students agreed to participate in the test. The St. Barnabas School consisted of an all girl high school (grades 9 to 12) and an elementary school, with boys and girls from grades 3 to 8 participating in the study. The two schools were in separate buildings. Two medical practitioners participated, one assigned to the elementary school and one to the high school. Dr. Benjamin W. Nitzberg, a board certified pediatrician with an active pediatrics practice in Roslyn Heights, N.Y., served as the elementary school examining physician. Dr. David Granger, another pediatrician, served as examining physician in the high school (CX 51D; RX 81C, 83P; Haggie 1792; Baron 2708-09; Nitzberg 2784-88, 2804). Prior to the fourth year of the study, the high school population was dropped. For that year, Dr. Nitzberg continued as the examining physician in the elementary school, and Dr. Granger served as "back-up" in the event of Dr. Nitzberg's absence (RX 84H).

86(a). The study was conducted in a coded and randomized fashion. The subjects were re-randomized each year. Randomization was in accord with a standard statistical procedure based on the Rand Table of Random Numbers. Each year, about 750 elementary school children participated so that there were some 3,000 elementary school subjects over the four-year period. Counting the high school students, there were about 4,000 subjects. Many students participated more than one year and so could be subjects a multiple number of years up to four. Such children could have been in the control group some years and in the test group in other years.

86(b). During the first two years of the study the subjects, both elementary and high school students, were randomly assigned to either a treatment group which rinsed twice daily with Listerine antiseptic or to a control group which used no mouthwash at all. In the second two years, the control group gargled with a water rinse colored to be similar to the color of Listerine (Nitzberg 2789-90, 2796-97; Lamm 2870-73, 2924, 2949).

87. The gargling by the control group during the third and fourth years of a water rinse colored the same as Listerine did not afford the study a true placebo. It did not keep the subjects unaware of which were gargling with the test material. The placebo did not at all match the strong and unique taste and smell of Listerine. It cannot be considered an acceptable placebo (Sadusk 3205-06, 3226-27, 3276; Bogarty 3115-16; Carson 3055-56; Baron 2748; Lamm 2935, 2971).

88(a). During the first two years of the study, when the control group was given nothing, those in the test group knew that the effect on colds of the gargled substance was being tested. Many complaints were received from parents because their children were not placed in the gargle group (Nitzberg 2828, 2830-31). This is an example of the bias in favor of using a medication. This bias was also carried over into the third and fourth years of the study, particularly since many of the same students participated in multiple years and would carry their biases with them.

88(b). It is also obvious that many of the children knew what product was being tested. The school "smelled of Listerine. It was like walking into a Listerine factory. As you opened the door it permeated the school" (Nitzberg 2802). When the children gargled at home during the first two years, and on weekends and holidays throughout the study, their parents would certainly examine what was being used and would smell the product. The bottle contained the identification, "Warner-Lambert Research Institute" (RX 79D; Baron 2707). Also, it is likely that Listerine was being or had been used in many of the subjects' homes, so the children and their parents could identify the test product furnished to them. Further, many of the children and their parents had been subjected to Listerine colds advertising claims on television and elsewhere (Charache 3839), so they were further biased in favor of expecting favorable results as represented.

89. It is unlikely that this knowledge acquired by many of the subjects about the test product would not have been passed on to their fellow students. Thus, it must have been common knowledge throughout the entire four years of the study that Listerine was being tested as a cold remedy and who was using Listerine and who was not.

90. It is clear, therefore, that the St. Barnabas study results lack probative value to show that the use of Listerine is efficacious for colds and cold symptoms; that the results were heavily biased in favor of the product being tested since the subjects knew whether or not they were in the test group and indeed appear to have known the identity of the product being tested and what results were expected (Charache 3839; Jawetz 3719).[6]

91. All subjects assigned to the Listerine regimen were instructed to rinse and gargle with 20 ml. of Listerine for 30 seconds, twice daily throughout the study. In the first two years of the study, on each school day, students in the test group gargled under supervision in their respective classrooms in the morning and were instructed to gargle at home during the evening. During the third and fourth years, both the morning and afternoon gargles were performed in the school during school hours. On days when school was not in session, the students were instructed to gargle at home twice daily, once in the morning and once in the evening (RX 82B-C, 83D; Baron 2704-06, 2710-11; Nitzberg 2790, 2812, 2855-56).

[6] Dr. Lasagna, an expert called by respondent, rejected the first two years of the study because of the lack of a placebo (Tr. 4108, 4130-31, 4160, 4162). His testimony is also given weight in rejecting test results purportedly in favor of Listerine for the third and fourth years of the study since no effective placebo was used in those years and the subjects were not blinded.

92. All subjects, whether members of the test or control group, were instructed to report to the medical office at the first sign of a cold episode. Either the teacher or the child could decide whether the child was to see the doctor. Upon reporting to the medical office, the subjects received their "Monthly Report Forms," which were pre-printed with each student's name, identification number, class and room number. These forms were presented to the examining physician for recording the cold symptoms, their severity, and any concomitant medication the child was taking. The child returned to the physician to be examined each day for the duration of that particular cold episode (RX 81D-E; CX 51E; Nitzberg 2790-91, 2802, 2812, 2814, 2819-21).

93. Initially, the common cold was defined as an acute, self-limiting, upper respiratory infection of from three to seven days duration, accompanied by any or all of the following signs and symptoms: sneezing, nasal discharge, nasal congestion, postnasal drip, cough, watery eyes, minor sore throat, headache, fever and chest congestion. Subjects who presented themselves with symptoms which, in the opinion of the examining physician, were suggestive of a complicated cold were excluded from the study during that period in which the complications persisted and were referred to their own family physician for specific treatment. Symptoms not indicative of a cold were also excluded, including ear infections, allergic rhinitis, tonsilitis, septic sore throat, pronounced cough, chronic bronchitis, otitis media and diarrhea (RX 82D; CX 51D; Nitzberg 2792, 2797, 2839, 2843-44, 2847-48).

94. Although the definition of cold for purposes of the study was limited initially to episodes of from three to seven days duration, the physician collected and reported the indicated information for each day the subject reported to him with a cold. Thus data was collected from the first day until the subject no longer reported (Baron 2719; Nitzberg 2801-02). In addition to recording on a daily basis an estimate of the overall severity of the cold, in each of the first two years the examining physician also evaluated and recorded the severity of the following cold-related symptoms: 1. Nasal Discharge 2. Nasal Congestion 3.

Postnasal Drip 4. Watery Eyes 5. Sneezing 6. Sore Throat 7. Headache 8. Cough

Records also were kept to indicate various types of concomitant medication taken by the subjects, e.g., nosedrops, aspirin, cough drops, etc. (RX 78, 81J, 83W, 84U).

95. Those subjects reporting with a cold on Mondays or the day after a holiday were queried by the physician regarding the extent and intensity of the cold and symptoms present on Saturday and Sunday or the holiday, and these data were recorded on the report forms. Absent students were asked about their absence to determine if it was due to a cold. The investigation always went back 48 hours to ascertain when the cold had started. The incidence of cold episodes was not recorded during extended vacations, such as the Christmas holidays (RX 81; CX 51; Nitzberg 2792, 2799, 2800-01, 2835, 2853).

96. Cold episodes occurring in the same subject more than 48 hours following cessation of previous symptoms were considered as new cold episodes (RX 81E, 83S, 84A; CX 51E).

97. Starting with the third year, six additional symptoms (ear infection, sinusitis, malaise, conjunctival erythema, hoarseness and muscle aches) were added. This meant that the examining doctor had to examine for, request information about, evaluate and then record the estimated severity of fourteen symptoms rather than eight. During the first two years, the rating scale for the overall severity of a cold and the various symptoms ran from 0-3 (0 = no symptoms; 1 = mild; 2 = moderate; 3 = severe). Starting with the third year, the scale was expanded to 0-6 (0 = no symptoms; 1 = mild; 2 = mild to moderate; 3 = moderate; 4 = moderate to severe; 5 = severe; 6 = extremely severe). The common cold was redefined as having a 1-10 day duration (RX 83D-E, 84N-Q; Baron 2718-19, 2723-25; Bogarty 3072-73, 3075).

98. In preparing a report on the four years of study, the conversion of the 0-3 scale used during the first two years to the 0-6 scale used in the last two years was made as follows:

	1967-1969		1969-1971
Extremely Severe	(no rating)		6
Severe	3	=	5
Moderate to Severe	(no rating)		4
Moderate	2	=	3
Mild to Moderate	(no rating)		2
Mild	1	=	1

(RX 85B; Lamm 2890, 2932)

99. The children gargled at 9:00 a.m. (RX 81D; CX 51D). Dr.

Nitzberg began his examination of the children, including an examination of their throats, at 10:00 a.m. During the first two years, this took about one hour. During the last two years, because of the increased number of symptoms to check, this took about an hour and one half. Dr. Nitzberg examined about 30 children a day. On Mondays, he would see more (Nitzberg 2811, 2826). Listerine can be smelled on the breath for one and one half to two hours after gargling (Sadusk 3215; Krantz 1867, 1879, 1901).[7] As respondent's medical expert Dr. Sadusk testified, if the doctor examined the subjects within an hour or two of their having gargled, he would know which ones had gargled with Listerine (Tr. 3228-29). It is thus obvious that Dr. Nitzberg, who knew that Listerine was being tested for its value with regard to colds (Nitzberg 2809), also knew which of the subjects he was examining had been gargling with Listerine.

100. Since the examining physician was not "blind" as to which subjects had been using Listerine, the test results reflect bias in favor of the use of Listerine. The necessity to avoid such bias has been recognized both by experts presented by complaint counsel and by those presented by respondent (Finding 83). Here, neither the subjects nor the investigator were "blind" and the test results are biased in favor of Listerine on both counts.

Respondent has argued that the test results should be accepted, contending that the test was the best that could be conducted in light of the peculiar characteristics of Listerine which make it impossible to prepare a true placebo. Without passing upon what more reliable tests could be developed, suffice it to say that merely because an unbiased study cannot be conducted, the results of a patently biased one has little or no probative value.

101. There are still other factors that detract from the St. Barnabas test's reliability. For example, Dr. Nitzberg's practice of recording the scores for the subject on the same sheet that contained prior days' recordings (Nitzberg 2824) would tend to bias his scores by the knowledge of what he had done previously. He would not be making an independent judgment each day as he should (Hornick 500; Wehrle 4045-46).

102. Dr. Nitzberg spent only one and one half to two minutes with each child to record the scores on eight to fourteen observed and related symptoms as well as the severity of the overall cold itself. This included the requirement to examine and question the child with regard to each pertinent symptom (Nitzberg 2820). Dr. Shirkey, one of respondent's experts, estimated, "You might be able to do it nicely in five minutes" (Tr. 2670). Dr. Wehrle, an expert introduced by complaint counsel, estimated that it would take at least 15 minutes as of the third year of the study (Wehrle 4041-44). Upon consideration of the testimony, a study of the form to be filled out and an evaluation of the scope of information to be elicited from the subjects and the examination to be conducted by the doctor, it is found that the time spent by Dr. Nitzberg on each subject was inadequate.

[7] Respondent advertises that Listerine lasts for hours (CX 1, 7, 11, 13, 15, 28, 30).

103. Recognizing that the St. Barnabas test results are biased in favor of Listerine, even those results do not substantiate respondent's claims for the product and, indeed, discredit some of them.

104. Based upon the 0-6 rating schedule, a comparison of the average overall severity of colds and symptoms recorded over the entire four year period of the study, shows the following differences that are statistically significant (RX 85C, 93A):

	Listerine Group	Control Group
Overall Severity	2.191	2.305
Symptom Severity
Nasal Discharge	2.341	2.457
Nasal Congestion	2.657	2.787
Postnasal Drip	2.015	2.178
Sneezing	1.811	1.946
Sore Throat	1.321	1.466
Cough	1.920	2.112

The differences for the following symptoms or factors were found to be either in favor of the control group or not of statistical significance in favor of Listerine: ear infection, sinusitis, malaise, watery eyes, headache, conjunctival erythema, hoarseness, muscle ache, duration of colds, number of colds and days absent from school (RX 85C).

105. Statistical significance, or the standard of statistical reliability, refers to a mathematical computation whereby it is determined that a difference found between two groups is not caused by chance—that there is indeed a difference. This does not indicate the size of the difference or how much benefit is to be expected because of the difference. If a large enough sample is used a very, very small difference can be found to be statistically significant (Lamm 2881, 2885-86, 4315-16; Sadusk 3162-63; Lasagna 4151, 4163). In the St. Barnabas test, a large sample was used, over 3,000 subjects, and, as previously found, to the extent the differences were not caused by chance they were, at least in large part, caused by the biases of the subjects and the medical investigator. Therefore, the statistically significant differences found may not be held attributable to gargling with Listerine.

106. In any event, the existence of a statistically significant difference does not mean that the difference is medically significant or meaningful. There is a difference between statistical significance and medical significance (Bogarty 3132-33; Sadusk 3261-62; Jawetz 3707; Lasagna 4095, 4127, 4151).[8]

107. Statistical differences developed by respondent's St. Barnabas test cannot be read as evidencing therapeutic or medical significance. The differences cannot be evaluated to show such a medical result (Sadusk 3264[9]; Wehrle 4018-21, 4067-68; Lasagna 4116-17, 4139, 4148-49; Gittelsohn 4183-85). In fact, the small differences indicate that there is no therapeutic or medical significance (Wehrle 4018-21, 4067-68; Jawetz 3706-07, 3711-12; Charache 3848-49; Lasagna 4116-17, 4148-49). One could not differentiate between a person suffering from a cold at the average level of severity reported for the Listerine test group and a person suffering a cold at the average level of severity reported for the control group (Sadusk 3258-59, 3262-63; Lasagna 4116-17, 4129).

108(a). The meaninglessness of the differences developed between the test and control subjects is demonstrated by the minimal differences claimed by respondent. Bearing in mind that the average cold symptom severities are in terms of a 0-6 scale, it is observed that the averages for both the Listerine and the control groups for overall severity, nasal discharge, nasal congestion, and postnasal drip fall between 2 and 3, making them all fall in the mild to moderate range. For sneezing and sore throat, the averages for both groups are between 1 and 2, making them fall in the mild to mild to moderate range. For cough they are both essentially a 2, giving both groups an average severity of mild to moderate.

108(b). The minimal nature of the alleged differences is further demonstrated by the specific differences developed by the test: Overall severity—.114; nasal discharge—.116; nasal congestion—.130; postnasal drip—.163; sneezing—.135; sore throat—.145; cough—.192. Thus, on a rating scale of 0-6, not one of the alleged improvements is as much as two tenths of a point. Indeed, the results in most of the categories are closer to the one tenth of a point differential. It is obvious that these claimed differentials for milder cold symptoms do not begin to approach significant levels.

109. As already noted, any difference, if a large enough number of subjects is studied, can be found to be statistically significant. On the other hand, it is not common for a medicinal preparation to work sometimes and not at other times. If a product is capable of relieving symptoms, it should do so year after year (Parrott 921; Jawetz 3718;

[8] Dr. Lasagna referred to a study he had conducted for the Federal Trade Commission comparing five proprietary analgesic compounds wherein he found that differences "although sometimes statistically significant were not terribly important." (Tr. 4096).

[9] Dr. Sadusk would interpret the study as indicating that three or five people of 100 would have less severe symptoms by taking Listerine, but he was unable to tell from the test results how much less severe the symptoms would be. Hence, there is no showing that even the few people claimed to be helped were helped significantly.

Charache 3878-79; Wehrle 4034-45). However, as of the end of the first year of the St. Barnabas study, there were no statistically reliable or significant differences with regard to the severity of colds overall or for any symptoms (Lamm 2880). For the fourth year, only one symptom (sneezing) showed a statistical significance in favor of Listerine (Lamm 2971; RX 84). Indeed, in no two years of the study was there a statistically significant difference in favor of Listerine users with respect to the same symptom (Lamm 2972). This in itself demonstrates the lack of medically significant differences.

110. Over the four years of the St. Barnabas study, Listerine users had slightly more colds than the control group (RX 85D; Lamm 2950). This confirms the opinion evidence of experts produced by complaint counsel that gargling with Listerine will not prevent or result in fewer colds (Carson 3053, 3057-58; Sadusk 3265-66). Such a finding has been previously made and is reaffirmed at this point as supported by respondent's own St. Barnabas test.

111. Over the four years of the St. Barnabas study, the colds of Listerine users lasted slightly longer than those in the control group (RX 85D; Lamm 2950-51). This result from a study so biased in favor of Listerine in itself establishes as a fact that the colds of Listerine garglers do not last a shorter period of time than the colds of non-users. There were also more days of total cold symptoms in the Listerine group than in the control group (Charache 3894) and, based on records kept only for the first two years of the study, students in the Listerine group were absent more days than students in the control group (RX 85D).

112. Of all the elements measured, the duration of a cold, the number of colds and the number of days absent reflect the least subjective matters and, hence, are more reliable. In none of these aspects was Listerine reported to be of any benefit (Gittlesohn 4204).

113. The results narrated above pertain to the elementary school subjects who participated in the St. Barnabas test. It is to be recalled that students in the St. Barnabas all girls high school were also included in the test for the first three years, but were dropped after the third year. It is significant that the results of the third year for the high schools girls did not show a single element in which there was a statistically significant result in favor of the group using Listerine. Indeed, on overall severity, ear infection, nasal discharge, nasal congestion, postnasal drip, headache, sneezing, conjunctival erythema, hoarseness, muscle ache, cough, number of colds and days absent, the results favored those in the control group (RX 83N).

114. In an effort to salvage something out of the St. Barnabas study, respondent has analyzed the symptom days under the 0-6 unit ratings as follows:

Combined 4-year Data (1967-71); Elementary School

(Taken from RX 86.)

115(a). This analysis shows that more Listerine users had mild cold days (rating of 1) than did non-Listerine users, while less Listerine users had severe cold days (rating of 5) than did non-Listerine users. This analysis of the results of the St. Barnabas study, however, reflects the same biases in favor of the Listerine group that have already been found. The results, therefore, cannot be attributed to the use of Listerine. Also, when non concomitant medication was taken, Listerine users had more severe cold days than did those in the control group (RX 88D). Further, even under these biased results, Listerine users had 435 days of number 5 rated colds compared to 593 days for non-Listerine users in that category; and under categories 4, 3 and 2, the number for both groups are substantially the same. Even in category 1, the figures favor Listerine users only by 4,339 to 3,743.

115(b). As respondent's expert witness Dr. Lasagna testified concerning this analysis, he could not tell how much better any of the Listerine users who might otherwise have been in category 5 might be. "My interpretation is if someone asked what would happen if I gargled with Listerine with a cold, I would say you have some chance of feeling better, a little better, you might not feel better at all." (Tr. 4150). This is far from the significant relief promised in respondent's advertising.

116. A curious aspect of this breakdown is that in categories 1-3, the number of days of overall severity correlate roughly with the number of days of severity of the six symptoms that are listed (nasal discharge, nasal congestion, postnasal drip, sneezing, sore throat and cough). In category 5, however, many fewer days of overall severity are estimated than days of severity for the individual symptoms. The ratio in favor of the individual symptoms ranges from three to one to five to one. On the other hand, in the next less severe category 4, many more days of overall severity are reported than there are days of symptoms. The ratio in favor of days of overall severity over days of individual symptoms ranges from three to one to eight to one. This disparity between categories 4 and 5 cannot be explained away by the suggestion that the lower the severity of the cold overall the more numerous the days of lower rated symptoms. The correlation between days of overall severity and days of symptoms under categories 1, 2 and 3 disproves such a suggestion.

117(a). Also, while this analysis of the test results purports to show that Listerine users had only 73 percent as many category 5 days (severe cold days) as those in the control group, according to the same analysis, they had 92 percent as many category 5 nasal discharge days, 91 percent as many category 5 nasal congestion days, 91 percent as many category 5 postnasal drip days, 89 percent as many category 5 sneezing days, 88 percent as many category 5 sore throat days, and 83 percent as many category 5 cough days. On the other hand, in the less severe category 4, Listerine had 97 percent as many overall cold days as those in the cold group, but 91 percent as many nasal discharge days, 93 percent as many nasal congestion days, about the same number of postnasal drip days, 67 percent as many sneezing days, 77 percent as many sore throat days and 85 percent as many cough days.

117(b). Thus, in the more severe category 5, Listerine users are reported as having an appreciably smaller percentage of overall cold days in comparison to the control group than is shown when comparing individual symptoms of the two groups. On the other hand, in the less severe category 4, where Listerine users are reported as having about the same number of days as those in the control group, the comparison of individual symptom days is more favorable to Listerine. These inconsistencies cast still further doubts upon the validity of the study.

118. Another curious aspect of the breakdown of the number of days of severity under the severity table is exemplified by the fact that under category 3, there are 3,833 days of nasal discharge for Listerine users. Under category 4, the number of days drops to 266, but under category 5, it jumps to 2,307 days. Similar patterns are reported both for Listerine users and those in the control group for each of the six symptoms tested. As Dr. Charache testified (Tr. 3884), such a pattern is medically unlikely. Such skip areas should not appear.

119. Respondent (RPF 177-85, 187-88) has relied upon other compilations of mean scores of severity and days of severity comparing Listerine users and others participating in the St. Barnabas study. These further compilations, however, are basically additional means of presenting the same results that have already been considered, and no further discussion is deemed necessary.

(2) The Reddish Cold Tests

120. The Reddish Cold studies took place during the winter seasons from 1932 to 1942. They were conducted, to a large extent, in respondent's own factories with respondent's own employees as the subjects. There were 2,500 subjects over the 12 years. Some participated in more than one year. About 600 of the tests were performed on employees of respondent and another 900 were performed on employees of a subsidiary of respondent. Another 500 were conducted on employees of a company that manufactures Listerine cough drops. Half of the subjects gargled with Listerine twice a day. The other half were specifically instructed not to gargle with anything. An exception was made for a small number in the control group for 1938-1939, who gargled with a saline solution. In 1935-1936, some gargled with tap water (RX 103D, F, Z-17-19, 48, 55, 109, 234-36, 239-40, 469, 481-82).

121. In assigning the subjects to the test and control groups, persons were placed in the test group because they preferred to gargle for their colds. Conversely, many were placed in a control group as they did not want to bother to gargle (RX 103, Z-105-06). This procedure of election defeated the purpose of random selection. The placement of persons in the test group who believed they would be helped by gargling obviously increased the placebo effect in favor of the test group results. The doctor in charge of the study also had a predetermined belief that Listerine was good for colds (RX 103Z-232-33).

122(a). No definition of a cold was provided to the investigators. The different nurses over the years at the different plants where the tests were being conducted used their own judgments which, of course, could vary from investigator to investigator. Thus, pharyngitis could be counted as a sore throat and pneumonia, influenza and sinusitis could be counted as a cold or as cold complications. Their judgments would similarly vary on whether to categorize the cold as severe (RX 103Z-116-17, 184-85, 255, 323, 353).

122(b). Dr. Reddish, who was in charge of the study, believed that the average cold lasted about ten days to two weeks and that a normal cold could last 25 days without there being any complications (RX 103Z-185, 247). Thus, the record contains numerous examples of ailments well in excess of ten days that were counted as colds, e.g., 25 days, 38 days, 35 days, 31 days, 38 days, 17 days, 20 days, 28 days, 23 days, 21 days, 32 days, 21 days, 25 days, 26 days, 33 days, 25 days, 24 days, 21 days, 36 days, 25 days, 23 days, 43 days, 50 days and as high as 69 days (RX 103Z-246, 259, 343, 345, 373, 404, 459, 484, 485, 492, 503, 509, 510, 511, 512, 515, 516, 517, 520, 540; Charache 3818). These examples are by no means exhaustive. Complaint counsel ceased examining as to the length of individual colds at the request of the hearing examiner (RX 103Z-532).

123. Common colds do not last more than ten days (Hornick 479; Seal 549; Proctor 607; Charache 3818). Even respondent's own St. Barnabas study originally defined the common cold as lasting from three to seven days and subsequently revised the definition to include up to ten-day colds. It is not clear, therefore, just what illnesses in addition to the common cold were included in the Reddish study. What is clear is that, in large measure, the results reflect ailments other than the common cold.

124. It is recognized, of course, that the Commission relied, in part, on the Reddish tests in its dismissal without prejudice of the complaint in Dkt. 4232 in 1944. However, such tests would be unacceptable to the scientific community today. The standards for evaluating clinical tests are different today (Jawetz 369-80). As Dr. Knight, expert witness for respondent, reported to the respondent in June 1970:

> Whatever the opinions concerning the mode of action of Listerine in the 1935-1942 experiments, those experiments must be considered incomplete in light of present knowledge of the etiology of common cold (sic). I believe that present opinion would hold that satisfactory evidence for efficacy is no longer provided by these early studies. (CX 162G-H).[10]

125. The Reddish studies are meaningless. Colds weren't defined. No effort was made to define or evaluate symptoms or signs. No objective basis for judging was employed. Each observer was on his own. Pneumonia, sinusitis, bronchitis, high fever and various other conditions now excluded from the definition of a cold were covered including lingering ailments of up to 69 days. Except for a very short period of time, no placebo was used for the control subjects. This was an important bias in favor of Listerine since at that time, gargling was thought by many to be effective in the treatment of colds. Subjects could and did choose which group they would be in, thus exercising their biases at the very outset. Dr. Reddish and the various observers were biased in favor of Listerine while the tests were being conducted. Many of the subjects were employees of respondent (Knight 2052; Jawetz 3697-3700; Charache 3817-21, 3823-32; Wehrle 4006-14).

[10] Dr. Haggie, who at the time of the commencement of the St. Barnabas study was respondent's vice president for Consumer Products Research (Tr. 1703), persuaded Warner-Lambert's management to conduct the more recent study for the following reason: Essentially my position was that some 20-odd years had elapsed since the Reddish Studies—And what would we find in a modern study. Would we find additional support or would another study raise some doubts?

126. The lack of a placebo, the ability of the subjects to choose which group to be in, the use of subjects who were employees of respondent, and the predetermined beliefs of the investigators all combined to create a very strong bias in favor of the Listerine test group. These biases, together with the other defects of the test, make the test results meaningless (CX 162G-H; Jawetz 3697; Charache 3817, 3823). The Reddish study would not be acceptable for publication in a medical journal under today's method of evaluating studies of this nature (Charache 3835). As Dr. Wehrle testified, "This series of studies is perhaps the poorest example of clinical research I have been privileged to review. * * * It is a lousy study." (Tr. 4013-14).

Respondent's Expert Witnesses

As previously noted, discussion of the opinion testimony of experts produced by respondent has been delayed until after consideration of the two major clinical studies upon which respondent relies. This is because respondent's experts based their opinions in large part upon the results of the St. Barnabas study. The following discussion of the testimony of respondent's witnesses is not to be taken as an exhaustive rationale for accepting the opinions of witnesses who testified in support of the complaint over those who testified on behalf of respondent. That determination was made upon the basis of the entire record and the opportunity to observe those witnesses who appeared before the undersigned. The following discussion merely points up some of respondent's expert witnesses' testimony.

127. Dr. Haggie was a vice president of Warner-Lambert from 1962 until his retirement in January 1971 (Haggie 1701-04, 1788). In his various capacities, Dr. Haggie was involved in all scientific and medical affairs associated with all the consumer products of the company, including Listerine (Haggie 1703). Dr. Haggie was responsible for the approval of Listerine advertising from 1962 until his retirement (Haggie Tr. 1704). Dr. Haggie, therefore, can hardly be considered an impartial witness. Dr. Haggie's education and experience is in the field of chemistry. He holds a Ph.D in organic chemistry (Haggie 1698). Dr. Haggie is not a pharmacologist. He performed no clinical testing, but "farmed out" clinical testing to experts in the field (Haggie 1699).

128. Recognizing that Dr. Haggie was a chemist and not a pharmacologist, the undersigned allowed Dr. Haggie to express his opinion with respect to Listerine on the basis of what he had read and limited to his own field of expertise (Tr. 1782). One reason for allowing him to express his beliefs was that an expert witness for the complaint had interpreted respondent's advertising, basing his interpretation in part upon what he conceived to be respondent's intent (Mendelsohn 1308-10, 1318).[11] In order to rebut that testimony as to intent and also as bearing upon the scope of any order that might issue, Dr. Haggie was allowed to testify as to his understanding of the efficacy of Listerine (Tr. 1787). Dr. Haggie's opinions were based, in large part, upon the results of the Reddish and St. Barnabas studies (Tr. 1727, 1732, 1784, 1815). As already found, however, those studies furnish no basis for concluding that Listerine is efficacious for colds and sore throats. Dr. Haggie's opinion was also founded in part upon his belief that the secondary invasion by bacteria is part of the etiology of the common cold (Tr. 1795), a belief that has been rejected (see Findings 51 and 58).

129. Even Dr. Haggie agreed that Listerine would not cure colds or eliminate symptoms (Tr. 1787, 1810) and that the St. Barnabas test was not as double blind as he would like to have seen it (Tr. 1794).

130. Dr. Krantz is a pharmacologist who has been a paid consultant for respondent on an annual retainer for over ten years (Tr. 1828, 1851-52, 1872, 1906). While he testified that all of the active ingredients of Listerine (menthol, eucalyptol, thymol and methyl salicylate) were virucidal (Tr. 1857, 1877), he admitted that none of these ingredients were listed in the United States Pharmacopeia or in his own textbook as virucidal (Tr. 1876-77, 1898).[12] Dr. Krantz readily testified that if one were to gargle with Listerine every 2 hours, practically every type of a cold would be prevented. His only basis for making this claim for cure of the common cold was that he and his wife could smell Listerine for up to two hours after use (Tr. 1867, 1879, 1901-02). While he was unaware of the quantity of Listerine's ingredients that would reach the nasopharynx (Tr. 1882), he testified that so long as one could smell Listerine at all, it would kill cold viruses and so prevent colds (Tr. 1902-03).

131. Dr. Krantz' willingness to ascribe to Listerine the cure for the common cold makes his testimony suspect. Further, Dr. Krantz' opinion that gargling with Listerine would be beneficial is flatly contradicted by statements in his own textbook, Krantz, Carr and LaDu, The Pharmacologic Principles of Medical Practice (7th Ed. 1969), at p. 819:

> The use of gargles accomplishes little. In the act of gargling the fauces are completely closed, and the medicaments in the gargle do not reach beyond the anterior pillars of the > throat, whereas the areas of infection are posterior to this region. It is far better to place such cleansing gargles in an atomizer and spray the throat with them. In this way some palliative effect can be attained. (CX 161B).

Despite his averred belief in the benefits of Listerine, Dr. Krantz never taught his students to use Listerine for the treatment of colds (Tr. 1874).

132. Of the four active ingredients in Listerine, Dr. Krantz rated thymol as the least volatile and least likely to get into the nasal area. He would not expect very much thymol, if any, to get there (Tr. 1881-82, 1904-05, 1908). This was confirmed by Dr. Rieger's test (RX 73; Tr. 2506, 2508; see Finding 205).

133. Dr. Knight has been a paid consultant of the Warner-Lambert Company for the past three years at $5,000 per annum. In addition, respondent has issued grants to Dr. Knight's medical school and to Methodist Hospital in Texas to support viral research of considerable interest to Dr. Knight for the past four years in the sums of $37,000, $50,000, $60,000 and $60,000. This grant money has been used to finance all of the studies Dr. Knight performed on Listerine (Knight 1922, 2001-02).

134. Dr. Knight performed in vitro tests on Listerine and its ingredients and a series of tests using white mice (RX 40-43). As Dr. Knight testified, "None of the tests have been in man. So, I have nothing—there is nothing I can say about man." Also, none of Dr. Knight's tests have been directed at the relief of cold symptoms (Knight 2045). In vitro tests on Listerine have only the most marginal relevance to the issues in this proceeding. The only in vitro tests that have any relevance are those performed with Listerine dosages comparable to that used by the consumer as recommended on the label. And the dose of Listerine gargled by the consumer is a far cry from what, if any, dosage actually reaches the nasal passage.

135. Respondent's exhibits 40 and 41 contain results of the effect of Listerine and some of its ingredients on certain viruses at various time intervals. Exhibit 41 contains data only on thymol and in 11 cases out of 14, the concentrations of thymol were approximately twice those found in Listerine (Knight 1960, 1963, 2008; RX 41F). The experiments with Listerine (RX 40) show that no significant results occurred after application of Listerine for 30 seconds (Knight 1946), the recommended amount of time for gargling. The first significant results in RX 40 occurred after a five-minute application of the full dosage. In RX 41, the tests only on thymol, no results were measured until 30 minutes after application of thymol to the virus solution.

136. Respondent's exhibit 42 is a chart showing the titer of mycoplasma pneumoniae after exposure of five minutes and 30 minutes to thymol in different concentrations and alcohol in different concentrations. Again, this is much longer than the 30 second gargle whereby Listerine is used. Further, Dr. Knight testified that Listerine would be an inappropriate treatment for mycoplasma pneumoniae in humans (Knight 2038).

137. Dr. Knight conceded that Listerine would not inhibit the growth of non-lipid enveloped viruses even in vitro (Knight 2006). This, according to Dr. Knight, would leave the rhinovirus, which causes 40 percent of adult colds and 10 percent of children's colds, and the adenovirus, which causes 15 percent to 20 percent of colds in children and 5 percent of adult colds, unaffected even in in vitro tests (Knight 1957, 2005-07, 2055).

138. Dr. Knight testified that the experiments reflected in RX 41 could not be extrapolated to the use of Listerine in human beings as a gargle, do not prove that Listerine would inhibit the lipid-enveloped viruses in human beings, and would not prove that fact even if the concentration of thymol was comparable to the dose in Listerine (Knight 2008-10).

139. Dr. Knight agreed that the results of his test tube experiments depended upon and varied with the concentrations used, but that he did not know in what concentrations the active ingredients of Listerine would reach the nasopharynx (Knight 2014-15). Dr. Knight's tests showed that thymol has the major antiviral activity of all of the constituents of Listerine and that methyl salicylate has a minimal effect (Knight 1953, 1955, 1957, 2003-04, 2021). As indicated above, most of his tests used thymol. Yet, Dr. Krantz, also one of respondent's expert witnesses, testified that thymol was the least volatile of the four active ingredients in Listerine and he would not expect very much thymol, if any, to reach the nasal area (Finding 132). This was confirmed by Dr. Rieger's test (RX 73; Tr. 2506, 2508; see Finding 205). Thus, Dr. Knight's in vitro tests which show the virucidal properties of the active ingredients of Listerine have even less probative value. Even if we were to assume that Listerine had virucidal properties, this would be of no significance for, over the past 10 to 15 years, experiments with various substances known to be capable of killing viruses in solution have been found ineffective for colds (Finding 66).

140. Respondent's exhibit 43A-W records the results of Dr. Knight's experiments with Listerine, thymol and other ingredients of Listerine, utilizing white mice. Of ten experiments only two (experiments 1 and 3) came out in favor of Listerine. In the other experiments, the results with Listerine were negative. There was an "excess of deaths" in mice inhaling 100 percent Listerine for 4 days, (Experiment 8, RX 43U; Knight 1979-80), a "moderate excess of deaths in animals given 100% Listerine small particle aerosol for 2 days in comparison to untreated controls," (Experiment 9, RX 43V; Knight 1981), and "Lack of effect of 50% Listerine or a mixture of thymol, menthol, methyl salicyclate as in 50% Listerine in mice infected with influenza A Hong Kong 68." (Experiment 10, RX 43W; Knight 1982). Further, the experiments using thymol, which Dr. Knight testified was "conceivably the only substance for real significance" in Listerine (Knight 2004), indicated that, "thymol, through a wide range of concentration, was ineffective." (Knight 1978, 1979, 1982; RX 43Q, R, S).

141. In several of the experiments, the mice were treated with Listerine prior to being infected with influenza and some were treated after being infected. Yet, in none of them did Listerine prevent infection (Knight 2010-12). Dr. Knight's experiments measured the difference in mortality rates caused by pneumonia between mice treated with Listerine and those untreated. However, he doubted that Listerine would reduce the mortality rate in man as far as influenza is concerned (Knight 2012). The mice experiments "wouldn't prove anything about what might have happened in man," and Dr. Knight was unable to state that Listerine would prevent infection in man (Knight 2026). Dr. Knight also testified that none of his mice experiments would be publishable because "it's an incomplete investigation." (Knight 2033).

142. The mice were forced to inhale specific amounts of the test materials into the lungs by use of a machine called a nebulizer (Knight 1974). In contrast, when one gargles, the larynx is closed so the substance does not get into the lungs (Knight 2027-38). The only thing Dr. Knight's test purported to show was a difference in mortality caused by pneumonia in mice infected with influenza (Knight 2010-11). This is in no manner related to any issue in this case.

143. Dr. Knight did testify that Listerine could be beneficial for cold symptoms. This opinion was based on the results of his test tube studies, his mice tests and his reading of the results of the Reddish and St. Barnabas studies (Tr. 1991-94, 1999). When pressed, however, he conceded that his tests did not establish this; and that none of his tests were directed at the relief of symptoms. He did not know if merely being able to smell Listerine meant it was present in an effective dosage. He retreated to the position that there were threads of evidence upon which one could put together a theoretical basis for the efficacy of Listerine, but that there were also threads of evidence to the effect that Listerine was ineffective (Tr. 2045-48).

144. Dr. Knight's qualified opinion, based as it is upon his test tube and mice studies, which lack probative value, and the Reddish and St. Barnabas studies, which prove nothing favorable with respect to the use of Listerine, is clearly entitled to little or no weight.

145. Dr. Noller gave no opinion as to the efficacy of Listerine. His testimony (Tr. 2070-2101) related to tests he had conducted which purported to show the efficacy of menthol as a nasal decongestant. He applied menthol in a vaseline base either just below the nostril or inserted into the nostril. (His testimony was inconsistent as to just which he did—Tr. 2105, 2145-46, 2157-58). Dr. Noller also applied menthol by rubbing ointment on the chest of the patient and directing a stream of menthol to the nose by use of a vaporizer (Tr. 2113-14, 2118). These procedures, however, are of little or no weight in evaluating the value of gargling Listerine for use as a nasal decongestant. Further, Dr. Noller's inconsistencies in testifying as well as his vague and evasive responses to inquiries (see, e.g., Tr. 2087-89, 2119) detract from his reliability as a witness.

146. Dr. McNamara is a microbiologist who was employed by respondent in its Department of Dental Science from 1962 to 1973 (Tr. 2212). Dr. McNamara did not qualify as a virologist (Tr. 2219-20). Relying upon various tests, studies and articles (RX 51-64), this witness expressed his opinion that Listerine, gargled as directed, would kill in humans any pathogen with which it might come in contact, that it has substantivity wherever it reaches and that the killing of pathogens other than viruses would prevent complications caused by secondary invaders (Tr. 2222-36).

147. Dr. McNamara's opinion that Listerine would kill all pathogens is, of course, disproved by Dr. Knight's tests that Listerine would not kill or inhibit the growth of non-lipid enveloped viruses. Further, the ability to kill pathogens in the mouth has already been found to be irrelevant to the prevention or treatment of colds. Cold complications have been found to be caused by secondary invaders inaccessible to the ingredients of Listerine. And, notwithstanding any virucidal claim for Listerine, experiments over the past 10 to 15 years have shown the application of known virucidal agents to be ineffective.

148. To a large extent, Dr. McNamara's testimony and the tests and articles he relied upon were limited to showing what Dr. McNamara relied upon as a responsible official of respondent for purposes of considering the scope of an order to cease and desist should one be issued. The following exhibits fall in that category: RX 51, 52, 54, 55, 58, 59 (Tr. 2230-31, 2236, 2249-50, 2257, 2280, 2287-88). And RX 62, upon which Dr. McNamara also relied, was rejected as an exhibit (Tr. 2296).

149. RX 53 is an in vitro study conducted by Dr. McNamara which purports to show that Listerine killed certain bacteria in a test tube. Again, as discussed with regard to Dr. Knight's testimony, this does not show what would happen in the human mouth, and the ability to kill bacteria is irrelevant when considering possible effects on the common cold. Dr. McNamara conceded on cross-examination that bacteria do not cause the common cold or affect cold symptoms such as runny nose (Tr. 2345).

150. A portion of RX 55 was subsequently admitted following the testimony of the doctor who performed the test. It is entitled to little weight because of admitted unresolved statistical errors. The other portion of the test report was rejected, in part, because the doctor in charge of the test concluded that "The significance of findings using this method is therefore questionable" (RX 55C, P; Tr. 2252, 2255, 2257; Frances 3362, 3371-72, 3375).

151. RX 56 is a test introduced to show that Listerine is retained in the mouth after gargling (substantivity). It was conducted on hamsters' cheeks, not on humans (Tr. 2263). Also, the test was not of Listerine, but of thymol and eucalyptol (McNamara 2320). Dr. Krantz rated thymol as the least likely of any ingredient in Listerine to get into the nasal area. This was confirmed by Dr. Rieger's test (RX 73; Tr. 2506, 2508; Findings 132, 205). Further, the test did not quantify the amount of the ingredients actually retained (McNamara 3226).

152. RX 57 is a report of a test conducted for the Federal Trade Commission by the Food and Drug Administration. Six volunteers swished and gargled 25 ml. of Listerine for ten seconds, then expectorated. They then immediately rinsed the mouth twice with 25 ml. of 25 percent strength alcohol in exactly the same manner. Measurements were made of the expectorations after both alcohol garglings to determine the amount of the active ingredients of Listerine collected in the two alcohol garglings. Two to three percent of the original concentrations were collected. Respondent (RPF 74(b)) contends that, as reported by the Food and Drug Administration official in charge of the test, the substantially lower percentage recovered after the second alcohol gargle indicates there was a binding of the ingredients to the cheek membranes which the alcohol could not recover. To the contrary, the test results equally, and indeed more probably, indicate that after fully expectorating the Listerine in the mouth, the first alcohol gargle got most of what remained so that the second gargle gathered a much smaller residual amount. Indeed, Dr. McNamara's interpretation of the test was that the two to three percent that the alcohol obtained was what had been absorbed in the tissue when gargling with Listerine (Tr. 2329, 2331).[13] And, of course, the residual amounts would wear off even more quickly than usual if the subject were to eat or drink (McNamara 2331-33). The witness did modify his position by stating that additional rinses might have gathered more of the ingredients (Tr. 2330).

[13] No witness was presented who was involved in the test.

153. RX 60 is a test conducted by Dr. McNamara to see whether a group of microorganisms would develop resistance to Listerine. This adds nothing of probative value. RX 61 is a journal article which does not relate to the common cold and similarly lacks probative value. RX 63 and 64 are in vitro antibacterial studies and afford little basis for Dr. McNamara's opinion for the reasons previously stated with regard to in vitro studies.

154. Dr. McNamara conceded that there are sites in the oral cavity which contain large quantities of bacteria, including pathogenic bacteria, where Listerine cannot reach (McNamara 2339-42, 2349-50); and that bacteria killed by Listerine would rebound to the point that, for periods of up to an hour, more bacteria can be present than there were originally (McNamara 2345-46).

Dr. McNamara's testimony, therefore, contributes little in support of respondent's position.

155. Dr. Ritchie is a physician who had been employed by the Health Department in Scotland and later in England (Ritchie 2361-64). It was his opinion that, while most colds are caused by viruses, virus-caused symptoms usually last two days, rarely as long as three days. This he called the promodal stage. The remaining term of a cold, according to Dr. Ritchie, is caused by the patient's own nasopharyngeal bacteria. He called this phase of the cold the sequela (RX 65, 66, 67; Ritchie 2376, 2387, 2410-11, 2413-14, 2416-17, 2426). Based on tests which he conducted, Dr. Ritchie was of the opinion that antibiotics could prevent or lessen the severity of the sequela portion of a cold. From this he reasoned that the use of disinfectants such as Listerine would have the same effect (Tr. 2412, 2427-31). In addition to viruses, Dr. Ritchie was of the opinion that such things as wet feet, cold clothing, general chill and dust lowered the body's resistance to its own normal bacteria so that a cold would ensue (Tr. 2411-12).

156. Dr. Ritchie's opinion of the role bacteria play in the etiology of the common cold is completely contrary to findings already made based upon the testimony of both complaint counsel's and respondent's witnesses (Findings 51, 58). His theory that wet feet, cold clothing, general chill and dust trigger bacteria-caused colds is directly contrary to the otherwise unanimous view that colds are caused by viruses (Finding 48).

157. Further, if one were to accept Dr. Ritchie's testimony and experiments at face value, it would appear that, despite the inability of the medical profession to do so, he found the cure for the common cold in the 1930's. For it was then, according to Dr. Ritchie, that by a weekly injection of a vaccine made from each subject's own sputum, he prevented practically all colds for his clerk, several others and then members of the Birkenhead, England, departmental staff and the police department (Ritchie 2371-72).

158. Inexplicably, when Dr. Ritchie repeated the tests in 1948, his reports (RX 65, 66) no longer reflected any prevention of colds. Rather, all subjects caught colds, but the colds lasted only two days (Ritchie 2373-76). After a time, instead of using the subject's sputum as the vaccine, Dr. Ritchie used antibiotics chosen specially for each subject's types of bacteria (Ritchie 2378-79).

159. Dr. Ritchie's test results are inconsistent in that first he purportedly found an absolute prevention and then went on to find merely a means of curing colds after two days. Not only are Dr. Ritchie's theories as to the role of bacteria in colds contrary to sound and uniformly accepted medical opinion, but studies conducted through the years by competent and eminent authorities have shown that antibodies such as those used by Dr. Ritchie are useless in the prevention or treatment of a cold in any respect. Further, the indiscriminate use of such antibodies should be avoided because of the resultant harm and immunities that may be caused (Findings 67 and 68).

160. Dr. Ritchie's belief that reactions to dust and other non-viral elements cause colds leads to the probability that conditions that were not colds were included in his studies. He also included chronic cold sufferers, which he defined as "people who took colds for a long time" (Ritchie 2372). Common colds, however, do not last for more than ten days (Finding 123).

161. In addition to his own studies (RX 65 and 66), Dr. Ritchie relied upon a similar study conducted by a Dr. McKerrow (RX 68). However, in a 1973 article written by a Dr. Banks and Dr. Ritchie, it is conceded that the "evidence submitted * * * [by Dr. Banks', Dr. Ritchie's and Dr. McKerrow's studies] does not reach statistical significance" (RX 67G), meaning that the results could be due to chance alone.

162. Dr. Ritchie's tests involved administering an autogenous vaccine made from the subject's sputum subcutaneously and later having the subject suck such antibiotics as penicillin, various forms of tetracycline including terramycin, aureomycin and chloramphemicol (Ritchie 2371-73, 2379-81, 2397, 2418). There is simply no basis for carrying over the results obtained from such methods of application of such products to the gargling of Listerine.

163. In view of all of the foregoing, neither Dr. Ritchie's testimony nor the tests upon which he relied have any probative value in this case. Respondent has admitted that Listerine will not prevent all colds and is not a cure for the common cold. Therefore, to the extent respondent attempts to rely upon and apply Dr. Ritchie's tests to the use of Listerine, it is being inconsistent with its own admissions.

164. Dr. Shirkey has been a paid consultant for respondent for the past nine years (Tr. 2592-93). Dr. Shirkey had no opinion on whether the use of gargling Listerine would prevent colds. In his opinion, it would not cure colds, but it would provide relief for some cold symptoms (Tr. 2607, 2616, 2628, 2667-69, 2674). It is clear, however, that Dr. Shirkey relied, in large part, upon the reported results of the St. Barnabas study in reaching the opinion that Listerine would provide such symptomatic relief (Shirkey 2605-07, 2615-16, 2645, 2659, 2660-61, 2662, 2673-76).[14] He testified that if it were demonstrated to him that the St. Barnabas studies were unreliable, he would change his testimony (Tr. 2662). As has been found, the St. Barnabas studies are unreliable upon which to base an opinion that Listerine is efficacious for the treatment of colds.

165. Dr. Shirkey stressed the safety of Listerine and at the same time recognized the value of the placebo effect of over-the-counter preparations such as Listerine for colds, a self-limiting ailment (Tr. 2619, 2627, 2633, 2635-37, 2643, 2674). Dr. Shirkey summarized his position as follows:

> We have got some studies which show that it has some value which I hope would be expanded to show more value or show that it doesn't do anything, one or the other, but at this point in time as a Pediatrician and with this kind of background interested in kids, I think the preparation Listerine, what it claims for treating the symptoms of the common cold, I hope they are not wiped out because I would hate to see the results when something else fills its place which is less safe and I don't know anything that is as safe as this.
> That is my whole reason for coming here. (Tr. 2675; emphasis added)

166. Thus, Dr. Shirkey himself has expressed dissatisfaction with the tests to the point that he would want further tests to show Listerine has more value or that it has none. His support of cold claims for Listerine because of its relative safety and placebo effect is of no probative value in resolving whether respondent's representations are false and deceptive.

167. Dr. Carson is a pharmacologist who is affiliated with an independent research company (Tr. 3012-13). He has served as a consultant to respondent for the past eight to ten years (Tr. 3026). Dr. Carson described the pharmacological properties of the active ingredients of Listerine (Tr. 3028-29). Based upon studies that he had conducted, he gave his opinion that Listerine's active ingredients were pharmacologically and therapeutically effective dosages to provide relief for cough and nasal congestion (Tr. 3032-34).

[14] Having stated, "We do the best we can with what we have got and right now, we are in a pretty sad situation and we have got something that is safe and has some efficacy," Dr. Shirkey was asked, "We have had it all these years. How come we haven't found out about it?" Dr. Shirkey answered, "Because the studies have only been done; * * *" (Tr. 2676).

168. To support his opinions with respect to the efficacy of Listerine for the relief of coughs, Dr. Carson relied, in large part, on RX 97. This was an experiment he performed for respondent in 1965, using only nine subjects (RX 97E), the purpose of which was "to determine the effectiveness of the aerosol room vaporizer when tested by a modification of the directions on the printed label of the product." (RX 97C). In addition to menthol, thymol and eucalyptol (ingredients contained in Listerine), the aerosol room vaporizer then tested also contained camphor and dipropylene glycol (RX 97A; Carson 3568, 3597). There was no way of determining what part of the results of RX 97 were attributable to camphor and there was no way of separating the results (Carson 3568; Shellenberger 2201-03). Dr. Carson testified that he thought camphor "played a role" in the results (Tr. 3597). Listerine contains no camphor (CX 48, in camera).

169. The tests reported by RX 97 were performed in the following manner:

> * * * Tests were carried out in a room which was completely sealed from outside air currents. The subjects were exposed in this room following aerosolization of the test formulation into the atmosphere and subsequent inhalation through a handkerchief treated with the aerosol. The subjects were challenged by a citric acid aerosol approximately two hours before the test for control purposes, and at seven intervals through the next two hours in order to evaluate the effectiveness of the antitussive agent * * *.
> The subjects were exposed for 3 minutes in a closed room 8' x 10' and approximately 8' high in which the contents of a can had been expressed for 10 seconds. At the end of the 3-minute period each subject was given a large-sized folded handkerchief into which the aerosol was expressed for a 10-second period at a distance of 12". The subjects were then instructed to hold the impregnated handkerchiefs against their nostrils for 30 seconds. (RX 97C-D)

The procedures utilized in this experiment differed from those normally employed in this kind of test:

> It will be noted that in contradistinction to the procedure described in the appendix, it was necessary to challenge the subjects at shorter intervals than are ordinarily employed. It was realized that the shorter than usual intervals between the citric acid challenges might have an undesired effect on the responses but they were unavoidable since the object of this study was to evaluate the early responses. (RX 97D; emphasis added)

170. On direct examination, Dr. Carson testified that the dosages of the ingredients inhaled in RX 97 would be lower than those gargled with Listerine; and that his calculations were based on the amount of aerosol sprayed into the closed room and the inspiration rates of the subjects (Tr. 3036-38). On cross examination, Dr. Carson admitted he had forgotten a very important element in his calculations—the additional amount of aerosol inhaled by applying the impregnated handkerchief directly to the nostrils, a factor which Dr. Carson agreed should have been taken into consideration (Tr. 3554-55). The test report itself clearly revealed that the "effectiveness [of the material tested] was reinforced by inhalation of additional aerosol sprayed into a handkerchief." (RX 97E).

171. Dr. Carson agreed that his RX 97 study, which tested the results of a product upon coughs artificially induced in healthy people, was preliminary and exploratory; that "[i]f you wanted to evaluate the antitussive claim, one would go to a clinically ill group." (Tr. 3568-69).

172. RX 97, therefore, provides no reasonable basis for Dr. Carson's testimony as to the efficacy of Listerine. The number of subjects was limited; the active ingredients differed from those in Listerine; the method of application differed from that of Listerine; the test procedure itself differed from that normally utilized with recognized possible undesired results; the strength of ingredients which reached the critical portions of the respiratory tract was not reliably compared with that portion of Listerine's active ingredients which reaches the critical areas; and the test itself was admittedly preliminary and exploratory in that it purported to test the effect of a product upon coughs artificially induced in healthy people.

173. Dr. Carson also relied on a clinical report entitled, "Antitussive Effect of Aerosolized Medication on Experimentally Induced Cough in Man" (RX 50). The purpose of RX 50 was "to determine the effectiveness of an aerosolized preparation containing camphor, eucalyptol, thymol, menthol, triethylene glycol, dipropylene glycol and alcohol as an antitussive agent under experimental conditions" (RX 50A; emphasis added). Both Dr. Carson and Dr. Shellenberger, through whom the article was introduced, agreed that there was no way of telling what part of the results were attributable to camphor and that the results could only be attributed to the product as a whole (Shellenberger 2201-02; Carson 3568). Listerine does not contain camphor, triethylene glycol or dipropylene glycol (CX 48, in camera). RX 50 was conducted in a manner similar to RX 97, except that a handkerchief impregnated with the medication was not used (RX 50C). The amount of the test material that would be inspired by the subject was not calculated (CX 50; Carson 3567-68). This exhibit, therefore, provides no more reasonable basis for Dr. Carson's opinion testimony as to the efficacy of Listerine than does RX 97.

174. Dr. Carson also relied on RX 47, an article entitled, "A Bronchomucotropic Action in Rabbits From Inhaled Menthol and Thymol," by E. M. Boyd and E. P. Sheppard. The study reported in RX 47 was performed on healthy rabbits who inhaled the test material "through a T-cannula ligated into the trachea" (RX 47B-C). The animals inhaled the test material for four to six hours during which time the respiratory tract fluid upon which the results were based was collected (RX 47C). RX 47 indicates that eucalyptus oil, which Dr. Carson testified would have a similar effect to that of eucalyptol (Tr. 3575), had no effect at doses recommended for use in man (RX 47B). Dr. Carson agreed with this conclusion, "Yes, remembering the conditions of this test which is steam inhalation" (Carson 3575). This comment implies that the result with respect to menthol and thymol in RX 47 are also dependent on "conditions of this test" which involved steam inhalation, not gargling.

175. Thymol produced no significant changes in volume output of respiratory fluid at any dose studied. Menthol had no effect in doses up to and including 27 mg/kg (RX 47C-D). Even under Dr. Carson's calculations, only 4.4 ml. of menthol would be available after gargling Listerine for 30 seconds (Carson 3557-58). In RX 47, the inhalation was from four to six hours.

176. Thymol produced significant changes in the specific gravity of respiratory tract fluid at doses of 81 and 243 mg/kg (RX 47D). These doses far exceed the amount of thymol available in gargling one ounce of Listerine for 30 seconds (CX 48, in camera; Carson 3038-39). The authors of RX 47 concluded that the therapeutic significance of the inhibition of respiratory tract fluid, if any, remains obscure (RX 47G-H). Again, as he did with regard to RX 97, Dr. Carson admitted that the test reported in RX 47 was preliminary and in order to draw conclusions for the effect of a drug in man, clinical tests in man are required (Tr. 3575-76).

177. RX 47, therefore, provides no more reasonable basis for Dr. Carson's opinion testimony as to the efficacy of Listerine than do RX 97 and RX 50.

178. Dr. Carson relied to some extent (Tr. 2188-89) on RX 48, an article entitled "On the Expectorant Action of Volatile Oils" by E. Boyd and G. Pearson, published in 1946. RX 48 reports the results of the expectorant action of various ingredients, only one of which (eucalyptol) is found in Listerine. The drug was administered by stomach tubes to guinea pigs (RX 48B). This procedure, of course, is entirely different than gargling. Although the results of the 1946 experiment showed some expectorant action of eucalyptol, these results were completely contradicted by Dr. Boyd's more recent article, RX 47B-H, which was written in 1969, and upon which respondent and Dr. Carson also rely. RX 48, therefore, provides no reasonable basis for Dr. Carson's opinion testimony as to the efficacy of Listerine.

179. Dr. Carson also relied on decongestant studies he had done on Pertussin. The ingredients of Pertussin are similar to those of the products tested in RX 97 and RX 50. Pertussin contains camphor. The studies on Pertussin involved room dispersion and a hankerchief method of administration of the test material (Carson 3576-77). It is clear, therefore, that the Pertussin studies are irrelevant to this case and provide no sound basis for Dr. Carson's opinions concerning the efficacy of Listerine.

180. While Dr. Carson testified at length concerning, and relied upon, the ingestion of medicinal properties into the stomachs and lungs of animal subjects, he limited his opinion on the efficacy of Listerine for coughs to irritant induced coughs (Carson 3601).

181. Dr. Carson relied upon the volatile nature of the active ingredients of Listerine (Tr. 3592-93). However, he conceded that there was a fall-off for every volatile product and that he did not know the fall-off point for the ingredients of Listerine (Tr. 3603). The witness was unable to quantify the amount of Listerine's ingredients he asserted would reach the sites of cold infection (Tr. 3572-73). His testimony in no way weakens that of the experts who testified that, apart from the ineffectiveness of Listerine's ingredients, they would not reach the critical areas in therapeutic concentration.

182. Dr. Carson relied, in large part, upon the results of the St. Barnabas test (Tr. 3047-48, 3051-52, 3057). As previously found, this test affords no basis for an opinion that gargling with Listerine is efficacious for colds. Further, Dr. Carson would equate statistical significance with clinical significance (Tr. 3605). See Finding 105 to the contrary. Even Dr. Carson evaluated the St. Barnabas test as establishing that the use of Listerine will not result in fewer colds (Tr. 3057-58).

183. Dr. Sadusk, from mid-1967 until November 1971, was vice president of Parke, Davis & Company and later its group vice president for Medical and Scientific Affairs. Parke, Davis was acquired by respondent in 1970 (Sadusk 3172-73, 3178-79, 3180). After the merger, he became senior vice president of Warner-Lambert and its director of Medical and Scientific Affairs until February 1974, at which time he became an employee-consultant to the company (Sadusk 3180-81).

184. Dr. Sadusk testified that he would recommend Listerine for the relief of cold symptoms. This opinion was based upon the safety of the product and the results of the St. Barnabas study (Sadusk 3211, 3268). As former Medical Director of the Food and Drug Administration, he would have approved a label claiming relief of overall severity of colds, nasal discharge, nasal congestion, post-nasal drip, sneezing and sore throat—the elements for which the four-year St. Barnabas study showed statistical significance in favor of Listerine. He would not have approved a label that said "for the relief of cold symptoms" since that would indicate all symptoms, nor would he have approved a label which read "for colds." All of this testimony was based on the results of the St. Barnabas study (Sadusk 3268-72). Inasmuch as the St. Barnabas study does not demonstrate that Listerine is efficacious for colds in any respect, Dr. Sadusk's testimony that Listerine is efficacious in certain respects is entitled to no weight.

185. Further, it is clear that Dr. Sadusk, who testified that he was familiar with the St. Barnabas test and had carefully studied its results and the manner in which it was conducted (Tr. 3204, 3210-11), had, at the very least, overstated his familiarity with the tests. For example, he thought the children determined the overall severity of their own colds and that they gargled at home before going to school. He was also vague and uninformed in other respects, including the fact that Dr. Nitzberg examined the children while the odor of Listerine was still on their breaths (Sadusk 3215, 3225, 3229-33). Dr. Sadusk simply assumed that the timing was set up properly so the examining doctor could not smell the breaths of the subjects (Sadusk 3230-31). The record, however, establishes the contrary (Finding 99).

186. Dr. Sadusk conceded that, if by smelling the breath of the children, the investigating doctor could tell which group they were in, "the theoretical objection might be rendered that he might be biased" (Tr. 3230); that, "[i]f the doctor knew—and this would indicate that the doctor was dishonest because he would actually ask each person—the experiment, of course, would not be valid" (Tr. 3228).

187. Dr. Sadusk testified on direct examination that the fact a placebo was not used in the St. Barnabas test would make no essential difference because (1) there was a control group and (2) "many of the symptoms of the common cold are obviously objective in nature and not just subjective" (Tr. 3205). However, on cross examination, Dr. Sadusk testified that every symptom examined in the St. Barnabas test was either completely subjective in nature or a combination of subjective and objective elements (Tr. 3217-25). This was also the evaluation of the examining doctor (Nitzberg 2816-18). Under Dr. Sadusk's own testimony, it is clear that a placebo was necessary in the St. Barnabas test, but that there was none.

188. Dr. Sadusk appears to have equated statistical significance with clinical significance (Sadusk 3211, 3268-69). To the contrary, statistical and medical significance are different matters (Finding 106). Bearing on this very point, Dr. Sadusk testified that a doctor could not tell the difference between a student with a 2.5 severity cold and one with a 2.6 severity cold, although the differences were statistically significant (Tr. 3259).[15] Dr. Sadusk also testified that the statistics show that only three to five people out of 100 would be benefited by using Listerine, but he could not testify how much less severe their colds would be from the data (Tr. 3260, 3264).

189. Dr. Sadusk would not recommend Listerine for the prevention of colds or for fewer colds. On the basis of the St. Barnabas test results, he would have to state that Listerine does not prevent colds; that the test disproves any theory upon which it could be reasoned that Listerine would prevent colds (Tr. 3211-12, 3265-66).

190. Dr. Lasagna's opinion as to the efficacy of Listerine for colds was based upon the results of the St. Barnabas test. His opinion, however, was quite guarded and his brief for the benefits of Listerine was rather weak:

> My interpretation is if someone asked what would happen if I gargled with Listerine with a cold, I would say you have some chance of feeling better, a little better, you might not feel better at all.* * *
> * * * * * * *
> No, I don't know how anyone could promise them relief. You could say it looks as though you have a chance to feel better, you might feel better if you use this. (Tr. 4150-51)
> I think they [the consuming public] cannot expect a guarantee of improvement. I would like to see the advertising phrased in such a way that they get the same impression I have from the study which is if you gargle with Listerine regularly there is a chance that you will feel somewhat better when you have a cold. (Tr. 4154)

He agreed that, on the basis of the St. Barnabas test, "all we can say is Listerine might help some elementary school children sometimes." (Tr. 4164).

191. This is a far cry from the significant relief from symptoms that respondent promises. However, as we have seen, the St. Barnabas test affords no basis for concluding that Listerine affords any relief from colds, so that there is no foundation even for Dr. Lasagna's guarded opinion.

192. Dr. Lasagna was critical of the first two years of the St. Barnabas test because no control substance was used. He conceded that this was a potential for bias that would distort the results of the test in favor of the group taking Listerine (Tr. 4108, 4130-31, 4160, 4162). He was very much concerned, therefore, with the reliability of any of the test results which pooled data relating to the first two years with those of the second two years (Lasagna 4109). However, the control substance used in the third and fourth years was not an acceptable placebo and the subjects knew, in those years, who were using the test material (Findings 87, 88, 89 and 90), so that bias in favor of Listerine was present in the third and fourth years as well as in the first two years. RX 114, a tabulation for the last two years upon which Dr. Lasagna relied for his opinion, therefore, is no more reliable than the test results which include the first two years and to which Dr. Lasagna objected. Indeed, Dr. Lasagna agreed that the control substance used in the last two years may have been inadequate as a placebo (Lasagna 4132-33). And, of course, the bias of the investigating doctor was present all four years, since he knew who was using Listerine (Findings 99 and 100).

[15] Neither could a doctor tell the difference between two subjects, one with a 2.170 severity cold and one with a 2.262 severity. These figures represent the results of the four years of the St. Barnabas study and the differences are statistically significant (Sadusk 3262-63; RX 85D).

193. As already found (Findings 105, 106), instances of statistical significance do not necessarily indicate medical significance. Dr. Lasagna agreed with this distinction (Tr. 4095, 4127, 4151). Dr. Lasagna also testified that he could not examine a table of mean severity scores for Listerine and the control group and tell whether the Listerine users would feel discernibly better; that one could not tell what such mean figures represent (Tr. 4116-17, 4139, 4148, 4149). RX 114, which showed results for only years three and four, was prepared at Dr. Lasagna's request (Tr. 4119) in order to avoid his criticism of including data for the first two years. This exhibit, however, compares mean severity scores for the Listerine and control groups and is meaningless under Dr. Lasagna's own evaluation of such comparisons.

194. The only document relating to the St. Barnabas study, other than RX 114, for which Dr. Lasagna could have any feeling, was RX 86, which reported the number of days the participants in the test had various degrees of severity of symptoms and of the cold overall (Lasagna 4149). This exhibit, however, incorporated information covering the first two years of the study, which Dr. Lasagna felt should not be used (See Finding 192). There is, therefore, no basis for Dr. Lasagna to have expressed an opinion as to the efficacy of Listerine, since neither RX 86 nor RX 114 meet Dr. Lasagna's own stated requirements.

195. From the foregoing, it is clear that, to the extent the opinion testimony of experts called by respondent controverts the opinions of experts called by complaint counsel, there is no reasonable basis for such opinions; and that the opinions of experts called by complaint counsel are, to a large extent, supported by the testimony of experts called by respondent.

Additional Tests Relied upon by Respondent

In addition to the testimony of its expert witnesses and the St. Barnabas and Reddish studies, respondent has introduced, and relies upon, a number of other studies and writings which, it asserts, support its position. Many of these studies and reports have already been discussed and discounted in the course of discussing and evaluating the testimony of experts called by respondent. There is no need to restate the findings already made with respect to such exhibits. The additional exhibits, therefore, will be discussed to the extent deemed pertinent and not already covered above.

196. A number of the studies relate to the alleged antibacterial properties of Listerine. Since a cold is an infection caused by virus particles inhaled into the nose which enter into and damage the cells there, the antibacterial properties of Listerine are, for all practical purposes, irrelevant. Bacteria play no part in the common cold, and the ability of Listerine to kill millions of bacteria in the oral cavity is of no medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds or sore throats. Listerine does not reach the site of infection or manifestation of symptoms in medically significant concentration and the tests and writings relied upon by respondent do not tend to show otherwise. Listerine will not reach the sites of secondary offending bacteria and will not attack bacteria in deep-seated tissue folds and crypts. There are many other areas in the oral cavity which Listerine will not affect. Numerous tests conducted in the ongoing research on the common cold have demonstrated the lack of efficacy of using virucidal and antibiotic agents in the prevention or treatment of colds.

197. Apart from the irrelevance of Listerine's antibacterial effect, the tests relied upon by respondent provide no evidence as to the concentration of Listerine's ingredients that reach the critical sites nor the period of time they remain in particular concentrations. Respondent's tests fail to contribute any information tending to show that the ingredients of Listerine reach the critical sites in sufficient concentrations to kill such viruses as may be exposed or to perform the other therapeutic accomplishments claimed for them by respondent.

198. Respondent (RPF 74D) relies upon a test (RX 44) done under the supervision of Dr. Knight for the proposition that when thymol contacts a cell of the upper respiratory tract, it will attach to and penetrate that cell and that the concentration in the cell of thymol would be much greater than in the surrounding medium. The red blood cells in the test, however, were suspended in a buffered liquid solution

(Knight 1988). The test, therefore, provides no evidence as to thymol's effect on cells surrounded by the normal constituents of the upper respiratory tract. As Dr. Knight conceded, "The concentration, with gargling, may have very little relationship to the concentration that would be present in—within the cells that we're supposed to examine" (Tr. 2016). The direct application of thymol by suspending the cells in a liquid solution, therefore, has no bearing upon what happens to the thymol in Listerine when it is gargled. Listerine does not reach the nasal pharynx in liquid form (McNamara 2343-44). And thymol is the least volatile of all of the active ingredients in Listerine and very little, if any, reaches the nasal pharynx (Findings 132, 205).

199. Respondent (RPF 74A) relies on a test (RX 69, 70, 71) conducted by one Norman Oksman, a Warner-Lambert employee, to establish that, after gargling with Listerine, the product's ingredients are retained in the subject at the following percentages of the quantities gargled:

Eucalyptol	36%
Menthol	33%
Methyl Salicylate	27.5%
Thymol	23.4%

In this test, ten subjects rinsed and gargled with 15 ml. of Listerine, which is one-half the ordinary dose. They immediately expectorated into a beaker, including two extra spits. The amounts of the active ingredients were quantified and compared with the amounts in a 15 ml. quantity of Listerine. The average differences between what is contained in a 15 ml. amount of Listerine and what was found in the beaker provides the percentage figures reproduced above.

200. At the very outset, the following question occurs. Why, if respondent wanted to ascertain the percentages of Listerine ingredients retained by users, did it have the test subjects gargle with only one-half of the ordinary dose? One answer that immediately suggests itself is the possibility that the larger the quantity gargled, the larger the percentage of that quantity that can be readily expectorated. The fact that the test was conducted with only one-half of the normal quantity does not indicate what percentage would have been retained under usual gargling conditions.

201. The data does not establish what was retained in the mouth after gargling. Some could have escaped through the mouth while gargling and some could have been swallowed (Oksman 2461-63). Further, the test was conducted immediately after gargling and expectorating three times in rapid succession. There is no evidence, therefore, as to the length of retention and how quickly whatever was retained after that short period of time was expelled in the course of eating, drinking, talking or otherwise (Oksman 2463-64). This does not purport to be a substantivity test (Oksman 2464). It neither establishes that the amounts retained are in therapeutic quantities nor that they reach critical sites. To the contrary, the active ingredients in Listerine are in insufficient concentration to be of therapeutic value even if they were applied directly to the critical areas (Findings 74-80). Respondent's exhibits 69, 70 and 71 show that at least 64 percent to 76 percent of those already insufficient quantities are disposed of immediately after gargling.

202. In the test reported by RX 73, ten subjects gargled with 20 ml. of Listerine. Immediately after gargling, one nostril was plugged and a tube connected with a device known as a gas chromatograph was inserted into the other nostril. This device drew air from the nostril by use of a suction pump and recorded peaks of when various elements were detected. The results were: ethanol—.8 minutes; eucalyptol—3.2 minutes; menthol—7.1 minutes; methyl salicylate—9 minutes; and thymol—13.8 minutes. The conclusion in the test report was that "alcohol, eucalyptol, menthol, methyl salicylate and thymol were detected in the nasal passage during a 0-10 minute interval after gargling with Listerine Antiseptic" (RX 73; Rieger 2475-79).[16]

203. An immediately noted inconsistency is that the test report states that "sampling of the nasal passage was continued for 10 minutes" (RX 73B), whereas the very same test report recites that the thymol peak was at 13.8 minutes (RX 73A). The results are not totally objectively obtained by machine. In order to ascertain what ingredients were registering, it was necessary for respondent's employees to smell the vapors in the machine and make subjective determinations. These determinations were often based upon what was expected (Rieger 2482, 2500-04). Thus, we have employees of respondent in a position to make subjective judgments in line with what respondent would like to develop. The machine itself was created for a different purpose and was adapted by respondent's employee, Mr. Rieger, for the tests he conducted. He had no previous experience in conducting this type of test (Rieger 2489-90).

204. The vapors were drawn from the subjects by a vacuum pump, with vacuum pressure level set at 300 mls. per minute. It could have been set at 30 utilizing a longer period of time. Thus, the vapors could have been pulled from the oral cavity through the nasal cavity into the machine. It cannot be concluded that the vapors were in the nasal

[16] Mr. Rieger testified that he had also performed tests on a small number of subjects where air was collected between 10 and 20 minutes after gargling. He stated that the ingredients were noted and that after 20 minutes, the method failed (Tr. 2485-86, 2505-06). No such tests were offered into evidence.

cavity. The machine collects only air. It provides no information as to the materials in the mucous membrane of the nose (Rieger 2484, 2494, 2500).

205. The machine was very sensitive and reacted to small quantities in terms of parts per million. A very small amount of an ingredient would register on the machine. The test did not measure the quantities of any ingredient (Rieger 2478-79, 2494-97, 2505). According to Mr. Rieger, the test showed that thymol was the least volatile of any of the active ingredients of Listerine (Tr. 2509).

206. RX 73, therefore, both because of the matters noted with respect to the manner of conducting the test and because it supplies no information as to the quantities of any ingredients that are alleged by respondent to reach the nasopharynx, provides nothing material to the issue of this case.

207. RX 75 is the report of a test conducted by Mr. Konigsbacher, vice president of a company that has run various tests for Warner-Lambert (Konigsbacher 2514, 2520). In the test in question, six employees of the testing company were trained to smell thymol, eucalyptol, menthol and methyl salicylate. They gargled with Listerine and also with a control. While gargling with Listerine, they were able to detect the odors of its four active ingredients (RX 75; Konigsbacher 2540).

208. The panelists were also trained to recognize the odor of Listerine as a whole (RX 75E; Konigsbacher 2537), and some of them may have known that Listerine was being tested because of its characteristic odor (Konigsbacher 2538-39). The general level of test competence and performance is discussed with each panel member when he is not doing well. They are quite competitive in their ability to do well (Konigsbacher 2541). The test report is dated September 19, 1973, well after the present litigation commenced, so that it is probable that the panelists were aware of the litigation and the issues involved. As employees of a company engaged by respondent, they may well have exercised bias in favor of Listerine, particularly since they are trying to do "well."

209. The currently accepted theory is that all odor receptors are in the nose. There are only four taste senses—salt, sour, bitter and sweet (Konigsbacher 2530, 2536, 2544, 2547, 2565). It is apparent, therefore, that for the body to experience all of the other sensory perceptions from what is eaten or imbibed, the odor receptors in the nose must be extremely sensitive to the slightest stimulus. Therefore, the ability to smell thymol, eucalyptol, menthol and methyl salicylate while gargling Listerine is no indication that the ingredients move into the nose[17] or that they are there in therapeutic quantity. The test reveals nothing as to how long the odor endures or in what strength it is present (Konigsbacher 2547-48, 2556). The test, therefore, lacks probative value.

210(a). Respondent (RPF 74G) relies upon the results of tests performed by Dr. Hunter (RX 108P-R, Z-26) for the proposition that Listerine penetrates into crypts, folds and crevices of the oral membranes and into the upper layers of the epithelial tissues; that it reaches the tonsils and tonsillar crypts, the hypopharynx, the oropharynx, and a portion of the nasopharynx in liquid form. These results, which were introduced during the trial involving Listerine thirty years ago, are totally and conclusively contravened by the testimony of today's experts, including that of respondent's own expert microbiologist, Dr. McNamara (Findings 57, 69, 71, 72, 154).

210(b). Dr. McNamara testified that there are several sites in the oral cavity where large amounts of bacteria reside, but where Listerine cannot penetrate to make contact; that Listerine cannot penetrate to the full depth of dental plaque, which he described as "the organic film that covers the teeth, and all the soft tissues in the mouth;" that there are tremendous amounts of bacteria in this dental plaque, and that Listerine certainly does not reach all of them; that there are millions of bacteria per gram in the crypts of the tongue that Listerine could not penetrate to contact; that Listerine cannot penetrate deeply into the crypts of the tonsils to contact the bacteria that reside there; that Listerine would not reach the nasal pharynx in liquid form; and that Listerine does not penetrate into tissue cells (McNamara 2339-44).

211. It is, therefore, found that the use of Listerine will not prevent or result in fewer colds or sore throats, will not cure colds or sore throats, and will not cause colds or their symptoms, including sore throats, to be less severe than they otherwise would be; and that the ability of Listerine to kill germs is of no medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds and sore throats. These findings are based upon consideration of the entire record. Upon such consideration, it is clear that the overwhelming weight of probative evidence compels such findings.

Discussion of Other Contentions of Respondent Bearing upon Finding 211

Respondent (RPF 222, 223) appears to challenge the probative value and substantiality as evidence of the opinions of medical experts called by complaint counsel because they had not conducted actual tests on Listerine or had no personal experience with it. This challenge of the opinions of experts in the field who were otherwise highly qualified to give such opinions is baseless. Reilly v. Pinkus, 338 U.S. 269, 274 (1949). Such testimony has been held to constitute substantial evidence even where witnesses who had personally observed the effect of the product have testified to the contrary. Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 185 F.2d 58, 62 (4th Cir. 1950). Here, all of the evidence has been weighed and has been found not merely substantial, but overwhelming in establishing the above findings.

[17] Mr. Konigsbacher's reported conclusion that the thymol, eucalyptol, menthol and methyl salicylate in Listerine migrate into the nasal passage during gargling was stated to be tentative (RX 751).

Respondent (Memorandum 12-21) argues that what it asserts are the standards utilized by the Food and Drug Administration in approving a new drug must be applied in this case. These standards are termed the "substantial evidence" test, i.e., there need only be substantial evidence consisting of adequate and well-controlled investigations upon which qualified experts can fairly and responsibly conclude that the drug has the effects claimed for it. This, according to respondent, must be accepted as justifying a claim even though the preponderant evidence would establish that the claim is false. The responsible minority opinion based upon such tests would control.

Respondent's argument is untenable because the basic question in this proceeding under the Federal Trade Commission Act is whether the claims made for Listerine have the tendency and capacity to mislead the consuming public. This is a question of fact to be determined under the normal standards of the Federal Trade Commission Act, not under standards established by the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. Respondent's argument has, in effect, already been rejected by the Commission in its order denying respondent's interlocutory appeal from the ruling of the administrative law judge striking portions of respondent's answer, when the Commission stated, "The complaint in this case, unlike that in Pfizer, [In the Matter of Pfizer, Inc., (81 F.T.C. 23 (1972))] does not charge as a separate violation that respondent 0 did not have a reasonable basis for its claims. It alleges that respondent's claims are false, misleading and deceptive. Whether or not respondent had a reasonable basis for making such claims is therefore totally irrelevant." (82 F.T.C. 749, 752 (1973)).

Even if the standards contended for by respondent were applicable here, it still could not prevail, for it has failed to meet the "substantial evidence" test. As found above, the Reddish and St. Barnabas tests, upon which respondent relies, do not constitute the "adequate and well controlled investigations upon which qualified experts can fairly and responsibly conclude [that Listerine] has the effects claimed for it."

Respondent (RPF 246-51) contends that the efficacy of Listerine as a cold remedy is demonstrated by consumer satisfaction. It relies primarily upon survey data for its conclusion that there is consumer satisfaction. In evaluating any such data, it must be noted that Listerine is the only mouthwash sold with respect to which cold claims are made. Having been sold as a cold remedy, there is the resultant placebo effect, particularly since colds are self-limiting and improve without medication (Findings 81, 82). The contention of consumer satisfaction, as derived by respondent from its surveys, cannot begin to approach in probative value the overwhelming weight of the expert testimony adduced by complaint counsel. Upon an overall evaluation, it is entitled to very little, if any, weight. Indeed, as held in Erickson v. FTC, 272 F.2d 318, 322 (7th Cir. 1959), "* * * [T]he fact that petitioner had satisfied customers is not a defense to Commission action for deceptive practices." Accord, Feil v. FTC, 285 F.2d 879, 883 n.5 (9th Cir. 1960).

Respondent's reliance (Reply 45) upon Evis Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 287 F.2d 831 (9th Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 824 (1961), is misplaced. In Evis, a case which involved the efficacy of a water softener, the Commission relied upon experts whose testimony was based upon experiments and laboratory tests performed upon the device in question. They did not know the theory upon which the device purportedly worked; they did not know the composition of the metal; and they were not acquainted with the claimed special processing thereof. In performing their experiments, they did not follow instructions of operation which, according to evidence adduced by the company, was important to achieve desired results. Further, the Commission relied upon a purported admission to the effect that 3,000 dissatisfied users could be called. This was construed by the court to mean that of 100,000 purchasers, 3,000 dissatisfied ones could be called.

It was only under such circumstances that the court in Evis ruled that the Commission had failed to adduce substantial evidence in the face of the sworn testimony of satisfied consumers, subject to cross examination, many of whom were themselves qualified experts in the field. The situation in Evis is a far cry from that in the case at hand.

The Bearing of "Future Facts" upon the Foregoing Findings

Respondent (RPF 318-20; Memorandum 22-25) contends that under the Commission's order in Lambert Pharmacal Co., 38 F.T.C. 726, 730

(1944), a finding of violation may not be made without a showing of "future facts"[18] and that no such future facts have been developed that would warrant a resolution of the issues against respondent. Respondent appears to argue that it is incumbent upon complaint counsel to introduce different types of evidence than what was introduced in the prior proceeding; that since the expert opinion evidence offered by complaint counsel in the prior proceeding was not deemed sufficient, they cannot now prevail on the basis of opinion evidence.

Respondent's position has, in effect, been ruled upon by the Commission when it denied respondent's motion for interlocutory appeal (82 F.T.C. 749 (1973)). There, the Commission held that it was unnecessary for the complaint to allege "future facts." Its opinion quoted at length from Manco Watch Strap Co., 60 F.T.C. 495 (1962), where, following the principles enunciated in FTC v. Raladam Co., 316 U.S. 149 (1942), it was held that dismissal of a complaint for failure of proof did not preclude a finding of violation in a subsequent proceeding based on like allegations, but covering a subsequent period of time; that the later record constituted new and different facts upon which a finding of violation may be made.

In the instant case, the undersigned has considered all portions of the prior record that have been incorporated into the present record, either by introduction as exhibits or by means of official notice. Consideration has also been given to the vast amount of new evidence introduced. The overall record, therefore, is a new one and presents new facts, not limited by the prior record. It is partly because of this situation that the undersigned has gone into some detail in discussing the testimony of witnesses produced by both sides and the tests introduced by respondent. By "future facts" the Commission meant future knowledge and facts that could be established in the future. In the undersigned's opinion, the facts found above have clearly and overwhelmingly been established.

In the Commission's dismissal of the prior complaint, it took note of the views of many medical practitioners that the use of a product such as Listerine would assist in resisting invasion of pathogenic cold-causing organisms (38 F.T.C. at 739). This is clearly not the view of knowledgeable medical men today, and respondent's own St. Barnabas test establishes that the use of Listerine will not cause fewer colds. In its prior opinion, the Commission relied, in large part, upon the Reddish tests as constituting clinical support of the representation that the use of Listerine resulted in fewer and less severe colds and the complications thereof (38 F.T.C. 740, 741, 746, 749). The Reddish tests, however, would be unacceptable to the scientific community today and must be disregarded on the basis of the entire record (Findings 120-126). Another "former fact" upon which the Commission relied was that bacteria play a very important role with respect to the common cold including complications caused by secondary invaders (38 F.T.C. at 744). It is clear, under the present record, that bacteria play no part in the common cold (Findings 51, 58, 67), and that Listerine would be ineffective to prevent, cure or alleviate infections caused by secondary invaders (Finding 71).

[18] In Lambert Pharmacal Co., it was ordered "That the complaint herein be, and the same hereby is, dismissed without prejudice to the right of the Commission to institute further proceedings should future facts so warrant." 38 F.T.C. at 730.

Finding 212, which follows, further disposes of respondent's position relative to the necessity to show "future facts."

ADDITIONAL FINDINGS OF FACT

212. Much has been learned about colds in the last 30 years (Gwaltney 397-98, 403-04; Hornick 490-91, 515; Parrott 908). There were clues, generally accepted as valid, prior to the 1940's that common colds were caused by viruses, but 30 years ago bacteria were not ruled out as a cause of colds. Most people thought that bacteria were somehow involved and it was popular to inject toxins from killed bacteria to try to prevent colds. When antibiotics were developed after 1942, there was a time when most colds were treated with antibiotics (Seal 590; Proctor 622; Rammelkamp 785, 787). Today, the theory that bacteria play a part in the common cold has been ruled out (Findings 51, 58, 67). The record, therefore, clearly demonstrates that there are "future facts" even under respondent's position.

Representation that Tests Support Listerine Cold Claims

213. In advertisements published in periodicals and newspapers during the period extending from Dec. 27, 1968 to Feb. 22, 1969, and then again on Sept. 13, 1969 (CX 10, 26A-B), the following statement appears:

> Tests over a 12-year period proved that people who gargled with Listerine twice a day had fewer colds than those who did not (CX 9, 25).

It has been stipulated that the phrase "Tests over a 12-year period" refers to the Reddish tests conducted between 1930 and 1942; and that final approval by Warner-Lambert for dissemination of CX 9 was given on Aug. 15, 1968 (CX 139C).

214. CX 51, the interim report covering the results of the first year of the St. Barnabas study, was issued on Sept. 18, 1968, after final approval for dissemination of CX 9 for the 1968-1969 "colds" season.

The second interim report, which covered the second year of the study, was not issued until Mar. 16, 1970, subsequent to the last publication of the representation in question (CX 139D). In the late summer or early fall of 1969, Dr. Haggie, who was then respondent's vice president for Consumer Products Research (Tr. 1703), received the top-line results of the second year of the St. Barnabas study which showed what overall results were going to be reported (Tr. 1770).

215. The results of the first year of the study and the top-line results of the second year both showed no statistically significant difference between the Listerine group and the control group insofar as fewer colds were concerned (Haggie 1771). Dr. Haggie recommended to management officials that advertising claims for fewer colds be suspended pending a resolution of the differing results between the Reddish and St. Barnabas studies (Tr. 1770-71, 1774). The recommendation was accepted to the extent of stopping the representation that appears in Finding 213 (Haggie 1777-78).[19]

216. A representation that tests prove a claim is a representation as to the most recent tests available. Respondent had the first year of the St. Barnabas study, which did not substantiate the claim, prior to its 1968-1969 colds season advertising. It received, in addition, the top-line report of the second year of the St. Barnabas study, which also failed to substantiate the claim, around the time of the last publication of the representation.

217. The circumstances under which respondent acted were most unusual. The representation referred to a test which had been run for a period of 12 years. The test in question had been found by one Commissioner to constitute a measure of clinical support for the claim of fewer colds (38 F.T.C. at 740) and by another not shown to be incorrect and untenable (38 F.T.C. at 749). It was, in large measure, because of the Reddish test that the complaint in Dkt. 4232 was dismissed. Under these circumstances, respondent cannot be said to have acted unreasonably when it waited until it received an indication of what the second year of the St. Barnabas study would show before it abandoned reference to the Reddish tests in its advertising. Upon receipt of top-line results of the second year of the St. Barnabas study, respondent acted promptly to cease reference to the older study. The last such reference was made in an advertisement placed on Sept. 13, 1969, long before the instant complaint was issued on June 27, 1972.

218. Under the particular and unusual circumstances surrounding the dissemination of the challenged representation and its withdrawal, it is found that respondent was not engaged in a separate and distinct

[19] Dr. Haggie's testimony was actually broader—to the effect that all "fewer colds" claims were stopped. An evaluation of respondent's advertisements has shown that this was not done (See Findings 31-38, 40).

violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as alleged in Paragraphs Nine and Ten of the complaint, by referring to the results of the Reddish studies when it did.[20] This finding in no manner detracts from the other findings of misrepresentation.

CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATE ORDER

Complaint counsel request issuance of an order that would require respondent "in connection with the labeling, advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of Listerine or any other non-prescription drug product in commerce" to cease and desist representing that the product will cure colds or sore throats, will prevent colds or sore throats or will cause users to have fewer colds than nonusers. The record is clear that there is no product that will prevent or cure colds or sore throats. The misrepresentation to be proscribed, therefore, is not peculiar to Listerine or any mouthwash product, but would be equally false if made for any nonprescription drug product. Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act empowers the Commission to proscribe the use of unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices. The unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive practice is that of falsely representing a prevention or cure for colds and sore throats. While the representation was made in connection with a particular mouthwash product, it would be equally false with respect to any nonprescription drug product. Since respondent is engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution in commerce of a number of nonprescription drug products, an order proscribing such representation in connection with any nonprescription drug product is deemed warranted and in the public interest.

Complaint counsel also seek an order requiring respondent to cease and desist from "misrepresenting the efficacy of * * * [Listerine or any other non-prescription drug product] or the benefit to be derived from the use of any such product." Such a proscription is deemed to be unwarranted and unauthorized in the instant matter. This case involves misrepresentations as to one product only—Listerine mouthwash—and, as to that one product, only one type of misrepresentation—the product's efficacy for colds. The following excerpt from American Home Products Corp. v. FTC, 402 F.2d 232, 237 (6th Cir. 1968), is equally applicable here:

> We are also of the opinion that the order must be modified by striking the provision which prohibits petitioner from disseminating any advertisement "In connection with the [20] While the Reddish tests were performed on adults and not children, the Commission's opinion in Lambert Pharmacal Co., 38 F.T.C. 726, was not limited to a discussion of the effect of Listerine on adults. Hence, complaint counsel's position (CPF 19, 69, 70; Memorandum 14-15, 32-33) that it was false and deceptive to have included a reference to the Reddish tests in advertisements claiming benefits for children is rejected.

> offering for sale, sale, or distribution of any 'drug' * * * which misrepresents directly or by implication the efficacy of such drug." An order of the Commission must bear a reasonable relationship to the unlawful practice found to exist. * * * [cases omitted]
> The proceedings in this case dealt exclusively with representations as to the efficacy of Preparation H; no other drug was involved. It was not established that petitioner is a habitual violator of the Federal Trade Commission Act, even though it is not a first offender. The effect of this provision of the Commission's order is to admonish petitioner not to violate the law again. Such an order would, in practical effect, transfer the task of enforcing the Federal Trade Commission Act, as regards this petitioner, to the district courts under 15 U.S.C. §56. This is not within the contemplation of the Act.

Accord, Grove Laboratories v. FTC, 418 F.2d 489, 496-97 (5th Cir. 1969).[21]

ITT Continental Baking Co., Dkt. 8860, Oct. 19, 1973 [83 F.T.C. 865], upon which complaint counsel rely (Memorandum 26-29) is inapposite. There, the Commission approved an order proscribing the misrepresentation of nutritional values of "all food products" rather than limiting the proscription to Wonder Bread, bread or baked goods. There, the deceptive practice found was that of making unwarranted nutritional value representations concerning food products. The deception was not uniquely suited to bread or bread products. Here, respondent's very business is that of developing and promoting the sale of over-the-counter drugs that are efficacious for various purposes. There is no basis in this record for requiring respondent to engage in that business at peril of civil penalties.

Having found that, because of the circumstances under which respondent referred to its Reddish studies and then stopped making such references, respondent had not misrepresented that tests supported its claim of fewer colds, there is no basis for issuing an order relating to such a practice.

Corrective Advertising

The requirement of corrective advertising, in an appropriate case, is within the remedial powers of the Commission. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 81 F.T.C. 398, 466-67, 473 (1972); ITT Continental Baking Co., Dkt. 8660, Slip. Op. 31, Oct. 19, 1973 [supra]; Campbell Soup Co., 77 F.T.C. 664, 668 (1970). In recognition of the Commission's position that it has such authority, respondent (Reply 59), while denying its existence, reserved argument on this issue for presentation to the Commission if necessary. The following findings bear upon the question of whether it would be appropriate and reasonable to require corrective advertising in this case.

[21] The present case is even more compelling in favor of respondent in that it has never previously been adjudged to have made misrepresentations in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

FINDINGS PERTAINING TO CORRECTIVE ADVERTISING

219. Listerine has been on the market since 1879. Throughout its history, the product has been represented as being, inter alia, beneficial in certain respects for colds, colds symptoms and sore throats. Listerine has been advertised directly to the consuming public as a cold remedy since 1921. Since prior to 1938, Listerine labeling has included the claims regarding colds and sore throats as set forth in CX 49 and CX 50 (See Finding 25). These claims have been made continuously since prior to the effective date of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act of 1938, up to and including the date of issuance of the complaint on June 27, 1972 (CX 139A-B).[22]

220. The record shows that over the past ten years, respondent has spent large sums of money in all major media for advertising Listerine as a remedy for the prevention and cure of colds and sore throats and as an ameliorative for cold symptoms (Findings 8-46; CX 40A-B, 41A-B, 42A-B, 44, 45, 46, all in camera). The vast majority of these expenditures were spent on network and spot television, covering all parts of the day and evening but particularly on prime time network television (CX 40A-B, 45, 46, in camera). Spot television commercials covered practically all the major media centers in the United States (CX 41A-B, in camera). Listerine "colds" print advertising was disseminated in major magazines and newspapers throughout the country (CX 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, 18, 21A-E, 24A-D, 26A-B, 29A-E, 31, 33A-H).

221(a). Advertising acts both in creating a belief in consumers and in reinforcing a belief once it has been created. It has a large role in creating and shaping beliefs with respect to a new product. Its role with an older, established product such as Listerine is more to reinforce established beliefs and act as a reminder. It serves to keep people from changing their attitudes. It still influences some new beliefs. There are always new people coming into the market, e.g., people who were not users who grow up and form households (Rossi 1451, 1453; Bass 1533, 1560, 1607-12, 1619-21; Achenbaum 3389, 3393, 3438-41; Amerman 3455-56).

221(b). Advertising plays a relatively more important role for packaged goods, such as a mouthwash, than for items such as automobiles (Achenbaum 3392-93). Listerine having been advertised as a cold preventative, cure and symptom ameliorative for so many years, it is clear that it has acted both to create and reinforce beliefs in consumers corresponding with respondent's representations concerning that product. It is not plausible that respondent would have spent the millions of dollars that it has over such a long period of time to create and reinforce beliefs about Listerine's use for colds unless it were convinced that the advertisements were effective. Respondent, of course, has taken issue with what claims were made. This, however, has already been found (Findings 27-46). If effective, the advertisements would have created, influenced and reestablished beliefs corresponding with what was represented.

[22] See Finding 26 for description of label claims since December 1972.

222. CX 52-65 are market research reports known as "Product Q" reports on the "Mouthwash Market," produced from the files of respondent. The reports contain marketing, advertising and purchase behavior data on Listerine and competing mouthwashes from 1963 through 1971.

223. The purpose of a Product Q test is to relate a number of different types of information, such as (a) product awareness, (b) product use, (c) brand experience, attitudes and beliefs toward the brand (including the degree to which certain attributes and benefits are liked and the degree to which they are important to consumers) and (d) awareness and familiarity with advertising, to the same people at the same time. That is the same group of people is surveyed at different times as to the same types of information (Levitt 1210-11). As respondent's own advertising agency, J. Walter Thompson Company, reported to respondent: "By collecting continuous data on consumer reaction, Product Q is ideally suited to provide guidance in such vital areas as * * * the basic strengths and weaknesses of Listerine and the competitive brands as perceived by the consumer * * * [w]hat qualities do people look for in a mouthwash * * * [and] [h]ow successful are the current advertising campaigns of different brands on awareness, recall, attitudes, and sales." (CX 80D-E; emphasis added).

224. Each Product Q study utilized a sample of housewives which was drawn from a nationwide consumer panel maintained by the Home Testing Institute (Levitt 1224-25). The demographic characteristics of the sample used in each of the tests in evidence parallel "what the population at large looks like as reported by the census data." (Levitt 1225). The sample of each test is representative of the total United States in areas of residence, market size, family income, age of housewife, education of housewife and size of family (Levitt 1225-26). The results of the Product Q tests, therefore, represent the opinions of millions of American housewives. The percentages expressed in the Product Q reports would vary only 5 or 10 points in either direction with a band of confidence at the .05 level of significance if a scientifically drawn sample, literally projectable to the entire country, had been employed in lieu of the selected consumer panel samples (Rossi 1420, 1423-27). The Product Q studies, therefore, also provide information on the opinions held concerning Listerine for the United States as a whole.

225. The Product Q studies (CX 52-65) were commissioned by respondent and used by it from 1963 to 1971. Product Q studies have been used during the past 10 years by over 20 different companies including General Foods, General Mills, Sears, Hunt-Wesson Foods, Kimberly-Clark, Scott Paper Company and Uncle Ben's Rice. No other company has used the Product Q service as continuously and as long as respondent (Levitt 1212).

226. Respondent was actively involved in the planning and evaluation of the Product Q reports. It selected the competitive brands and product qualities to be tested (Levitt 1222-23). Tabulations of the raw data were sent to Warner-Lambert for its independent review. Meetings and telephone conversations were held between personnel of the testing company and Warner-Lambert to discuss the data. Final reports were sent to respondent and oral presentations were made (Levitt 1227, 1230; CX 71A). Respondent's officials reevaluated and summarized Product Q data in internal company documents (CX 66-79). Copies of these memoranda were circulated at management levels of respondent and to J. Walter Thompson, respondent's advertising agency (CX 66A, 67E, 68A, 69C, 70B, 72A, 73A, 74B, 75A, 77D, 78D). Respondent had its advertising agency, J. Walter Thompson Company, prepare a report, "Analysis of Product Q With Some Suggestions For Improvement" (CX 80).

227. Each Product Q report originally cost between $4,000 and $5,000. The price currently approximates $12,000 to $13,000 per test (Levitt 1211). Since there were 23 Product Q reports on the mouthwash market between 1963 and 1971, respondent spent well over $100,000 on these marketing studies.

228. Findings 225, 226 and 227 compel the further finding that respondent placed a high degree of confidence and reliance on the Product Q tests and what they showed.

229. The Burke Recall tests (CX 82-89) indicate that a significant number of consumers remember specific copy points in particular "colds" commercials after only one exposure to an advertisement and after a 24-hour time lapse (Findings 44-46). It is not unexpected that, as is evidenced by the Product Q studies, the long-standing and extensive campaign of advertising Listerine for colds has produced a strong image for Listerine as a "colds" product.

230. A number of the categories used in questions posed in Product Q tests are precoded. The quality or description "effective for colds and sore throats" is such a category established prior to conducting a Product Q survey. It encompasses prevention, cure and relief, but the Product Q test cannot be broken down so as to separate or quantify the actual beliefs covered by that category (Levitt 1229-30, 1255; Bass 1583-84, 1604; CX 52Z-48-51).

231. The following table summarizes the results of the Product Q reports, covering 1963 to 1971, to the extent of showing the percentage of consumers exposed to a lot of Listerine advertising who recall "effective for colds and sore throats," "effective for killing germs" and "effective for bad breath" as main ideas of Listerine advertising.[23]

[23] The table is based on answers given by consumers who have seen or heard a lot of advertising for Listerine in response to the following question: "Thinking of the recent advertising you've seen or heard for each brand, which one of the following main ideas do you feel the brand has been advertising: effective for colds and sore throats, not too strong tasting, gives long lasting protection, recommended by dentists, leaves mouth feeling refreshed, effective for bad breath, leaves no unpleasant after-taste, effective for killing germs, pleasant flavor."

232. The above table shows that Listerine's advertising theme "effective for colds and sore throats" has extremely high recall among American consumers, higher even than recall of Listerine's breath advertising upon which many times as much money is spent (RX 100, in camera). As the J. Walter Thompson Company, respondent's advertising agency, reported to respondent, the major distinctive copy points remembered for Listerine are "effective for colds and sore throats" and "effective for killing germs" (CX 80Z-6).

233(a). Although recall of Listerine's "colds" advertising is at all times very high, such advertising is recalled to an even greater degree during the winter months' "cold season" when Listerine "colds" advertising is disseminated. This indicates that the advertising is especially effective during the months in which it is disseminated. At the same time, it is important to recognize that the "colds" theme is highly recalled as recent advertising even during the 6-month period when there is no such advertising. This is most significant in considering the propriety of requiring corrective advertising, particularly in view of the fact that the subjects are being asked to recall the major themes of recent advertising, not of advertising 3, 4, 5 or 6 months ago. It shows the lasting impression of the non-current advertising.

233(b). The following table presents the seasonal variations in recall of selected Listerine advertising themes for 1963 through 1969, derived by averaging the quarterly recall scores for each attribute (Rossi 1439):[24]

234. Listerine's advertising is particularly distinctive when compared to that of its three leading competitors, Scope, Lavoris and Micrin, especially on the attributes "effective for colds and sore throats" and "effective for killing germs" (Rossi 1434, 1440-42, 1448-49; Achenbaum 3407-08; CX 80Z7, 159K). This very distinction in advertising would serve to keep Listerine's advertising messages in the minds of the public after they may have stopped (see Finding 233).

235. Product Q reports measure the percentage of survey respondents who held the belief that Listerine possesses the attribute of being "effective against colds and sore throats." The reports establish that Listerine is perceived by the majority of those surveyed as being effective against colds and sore throats. Below is a table derived from Product Q data (Rossi 1435-36; Levitt 1234-35; CX 159E) which shows the percentage of the total sample who rate Listerine "One of the Best" mouthwashes for the qualities "effective against colds and sore throats," "effective against germs," and "effective against bad breath" for a 7 1/2 year period from 1963 to 1971:

236. The above table does not fully reflect the extent of the belief that Listerine is effective against colds and sore throats—only the percent that rated it "one of the best." Other possible affirmative ratings not included in the above tabulation are "very good," "good" and "fair" (CX 52Z-50, 53Z-43; 54Z-81). This evaluation reflects the belief of the entire population surveyed regardless of whether the responders have ever used Listerine (see, e.g., CX 52Z-50, 53Z-43, 54Z-81, 65Z-23).

237. While the latest Product Q report in the record is for the first quarter of 1971, it may be anticipated that the 59 percent level of those who thought Listerine was one of the best mouthwashes effective against colds and sore throats would prevail today. This is because of the stability of the percentage since 1968 (the percentage not varying more than two points from the 59 percent level) and because this particular belief with respect to Listerine ranks high in comparison with the level of consumer beliefs on other mouthwash properties of Listerine. Also, consumer beliefs are very stable once they come to exist (Rossi 1433; Bass 1549-50, 1554-55; CX 59P).

238(a). The percentage of people who believe that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats is very high in comparison with other brands. While the percentage of those surveyed believing Listerine to be effective for colds and sore throats was 58 percent in 1968, 59 percent in 1969 and 60 percent in 1970, the corresponding figures for Scope were only 7 percent in 1968, 8 percent in 1969 and 7 percent in 1970. During that period, Scope was Listerine's nearest competitor in mouthwash sales (Bass 1547-48, 1550-52; CX 60Z-4, 64Z-4, 139-0). Among those surveyed who had an opinion concerning the attribute, effective for colds and sore throats, 62 percent in 1967 believed Listerine had that attribute and 66 percent in 1968 believed Listerine had it. The levels of belief among the same individuals on Lavoris and Micrin possessing that attribute were 16 percent and 19 percent, respectively, in each year. The figures for Scope were 11 percent in 1967 and 13 percent in 1968 (Bass 1552-53; CX 80Z-11).

238(b). Listerine has the most distinctive brand image among the four competing brands (Listerine, Scope, Lavoris and Micrin). Its distinctiveness is based particularly on the product attributes of "effective for colds/sore throats," "effective for killing germs," and "effective for gum trouble" and, to a lesser extent, "gives long lasting protection" and "effective for bad breath." (CX 159F; Rossi 1433-34; Achenbaum 3408). As respondent's advertising agency summarized the Product Q survey results, "Listerine is perceived as a powerful germ-killer, effective both for bad breath and for colds/sore throats," while "[t]he main negative images[26] for Lavoris, Micrin, and Scope are in the therapeutic field, viz., effective for colds/sore throats, and effective for relief of gum trouble." (CX 80H).

239. The phrase "effective for colds and sore throats" clearly encompasses prevention, cure and relief. The responses under this category, however, cannot be broken down to ascertain what each person had in mind when responding to questions containing that phrase (Finding 230). However, inasmuch as Listerine does not prevent, cure or provide symptomatic relief for colds, the public's belief must, in large part, have come from respondent's extensive advertising over the years. And that advertising has represented that Listerine will prevent and cure colds and sore throats and will ameliorate symptoms and afford symptomatic relief (Findings 27-46). It follows, therefore, that these representations and beliefs are what is reflected by the responses to survey inquiries as to "effective for colds and sore throats."

[26] Negative images are the percentage rating the brand "fair" or "poor" among those with an opinion about the brand (CX 80Z-10; Levitt 1237).

240. Findings 221 and 239, in and of themselves, establish that the widely held beliefs as to Listerine's efficacy for colds have, in large part, been created and reinforced by respondent's advertising. The Product Q tests themselves recognize that the data collected reflects, in part, the success of current advertising (Finding 223). Those surveyed were requested to give their impression on how good Listerine was for colds and sore throats even though they may never have used the product (see, e.g., CX 52Z-50, 53Z-43, 54Z-81, 65Z-23). Respondent's distinctive Listerine "colds" advertising themes are recalled to a high degree even during the 6-month period of the year when there are no "colds" advertisements (Findings 232, 233 and 234).[27] The very high percentage of belief that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats compared with the low percentage of such belief for competitive products (Findings 235-38) reflects the impact of Listerine's distinctive "colds" advertising. Listerine "colds" advertising helps generate increased sales of the product (CX 109A).

241. There is a very close relationship between advertising registration and product image and this is true with respect to Listerine (Bass 1571-73; Rossi 1450; CX 59Z-12, 65E-F, 159F, K, L). As concluded in the latest Product Q report (CX 65E-F):

> Listerine continues to be first on most measures and it continues to grow while Scope remains a distant second; its performance relatively static. However, despite this one sided picture, comparable numbers of respondents claim to recall 'a lot' of advertising for each brand. With this dimension constant and Listerine well ahead of Scope on everything else, it would appear that the quality of Listerine's advertising and/or its media plan are making a vital contribution to the brand's success.
> Also, there is a very close relationship between Listerine advertising registration and the brand's image.
> * * * * * * *
> Therefore, one conclusion appears that a significant change in Listerine ad

---

[27] While 76 percent of the respondents, in a 1968 survey "who recall a lot of advertising," stated that "effective against colds and sore throats" was an advertising claim made for Listerine, only 23 percent associated "effective against colds and sore throats" with Lavoris advertising, 26 percent with Micrin advertising and 12 percent with Scope advertising (Bass 1563-64; CX 80Z-7).

> registration will, in most cases, affect the brand's image in the same direction. (emphasis added)

This analysis demonstrates that there is not only a strong relationship or correlation between Listerine's advertising registration and its product image, but that its product image is largely a result of its advertising.[28]

242. Another factor to be considered, which bears upon the propriety of requiring corrective advertising, is the importance of the belief that has been engendered by the advertising. For, if it is deemed important, people will tend to retain the belief notwithstanding the cessation of the advertising (Bass 1558).

243(a). The quality "effective for colds/sore throats" is important in the consumer's purchase of a mouthwash[29] (Rossi 1455). Over 35 percent of those covered by the Product Q surveys over the 7 1/2 year period from 1963-1971, stated that "effective for colds and sore throats" was "extremely important" in the selection of a mouthwash (CX 159A-B). These statements were in response to the directive: "We have listed some qualities which might be found in various brands of mouthwash. Some of these are probably more important to you than others in helping you to decide which brand to buy. Please rate each quality on its importance to you. Not too important, fairly important, very important, extremely important." (CX 159A).

243(b). Since only those who rated the quality "extremely important" were tabulated in the Product Q studies, there was an undetermined number of additional consumers who rated "effective for colds and sore throats," "very important," "somewhat important" or "fairly important" in their purchase decisions.

244(a). The belief that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats is a determining factor in a significant number of consumers' decisions to purchase Listerine (Rossi 1460; CX 64D, 66C, 80N, 106A, B, 159G). As respondent has advertised: "It is a fact that more families use Listerine during these cold-catching months than any other oral antiseptic." (CX 34, 140B); "For fewer colds, milder colds, more people use Listerine than any other mouthwash." (CX 34, 140F).

244(b). The 1968 Product Q survey reveals that of those who rated as "extremely important" the property "effective for colds and sore throats," 46 percent bought Listerine last, whereas only 34 percent of the entire sample bought Listerine last (CX 80N). Listerine "colds" advertising generates increased sales of the product (CX 109A).

[28] This is also demonstrated by the results of a 1-year advertising campaign on the West Coast where Listerine's image was markedly changed with regard to its taste and flavor, while its image on these characteristics remained unchanged throughout the remainder of the country (Rossi 1450-51, 1453; CX 65Z-12, 159M).

[29] Families with both teenagers and young children are more likely to deem this quality important than other demographic groups (CX 80L, M).

245. Finding 244 is, of course, further substantiation of Finding 243 that "effective for colds and sore throats" is important in consumers' purchases of a mouthwash. It also constitutes a direct showing of the unfair competitive impact of respondent's advertising practices. In that respect, Listerine users use mouthwash in connection with colds and sore throats to a significantly higher degree than the users of the next leading brand, Scope (CX 131J). As developed by the Product Q reports, "effective for colds and sore throats" and "effective for killing germs" are the two product qualities where Listerine has its greatest competitive advantage to the point of being unchallenged (CX 54D, 55C, 57D, Z-2, 58E, Z-9, 10). Even if competitive mouthwashes are not sold as cold remedies, to the extent Listerine is purchased as a mouthwash and a cold remedy, it displaces and competitively injures competitors whose mouthwashes might have been purchased rather than Listerine if the products had been in competition solely as mouthwashes. Listerine advertising injures competition by claiming an attribute it does not possess.

246. Consumer beliefs tend to continue once they are created. Consumers would continue to believe that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats even after the cessation of colds advertising (Bass 1555). Once a belief has been created, the belief lasts much longer than the memory of the copy points of the advertisements that created the belief (Bass 1556-57). In the present case, a very high percentage of consumers recalled "effective for colds and sore throats" as a recent Listerine advertising theme even during the 6-month periods when such advertisements were not being seen (Findings 231, 232, 233); and practically the same high percentage of consumers rated Listerine as "one of the best" for "effective against colds and sore throats" during the 6-month periods when no "colds" advertisements were run (Finding 235).

247. Among the factors that would help maintain the consumer belief that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats, despite the cessation of "colds" advertising, are (1) the continuous advertising of Listerine as a cold remedy for over 50 years and the exhaustive media presentation of such claims for at least the past ten years to the point that it would be difficult to disassociate the name Listerine from the thought that it is presented as a cold remedy (Findings 219, 220, 221); (2) the high recall of copy points of Listerine advertising after exposure to even a single commercial (Finding 229); (3) the high recall of Listerine's advertising theme "effective for colds and sore throats" even during periods when there were no such advertisements (Findings 231, 232, 233); (4) the distinctive nature of Listerine claims "on effective for colds and sore throats" in comparison to the advertising representations of its leading competitors (Finding 234); (5) the high and stable belief that Listerine is "one of the best" mouthwashes "effective against colds and sore throats" as opposed to a lack of such belief with respect to other mouthwashes (Findings 235, 236, 237, 238); and (6) the importance to consumers in selecting a mouthwash that is "effective for colds and sore throats" (Findings 242, 243, 244; Bass 1555; 1558; Rossi 1472).

248. The complaint does not challenge respondent's representation that Listerine kills millions of germs on contact. Respondent remains free to continue this representation in connection with its "bad breath" or other advertisements. This representation, however, has been used by respondent in conjunction with its "colds" advertisements to represent that Listerine is of medical significance in the prevention, cure and treatment of colds and sore throats (Finding 40). In so advertising, respondent has capitalized upon public belief that germs, followed by virus/bacteria cause colds and that members of the public consider a mouthwash to be a means of obtaining symptomatic relief from colds (Finding 41). Because of such public belief and the prior use by respondent of the representation that Listerine kills millions of germs on contact in conjunction with its cold claims, future representation of Listerine as a germ killer, without corrective advertising, would automatically constitute, or remind the public of cold claims even in the absence of any reference to colds.

249. Dr. Bass is a highly qualified authority in the field of marketing research which includes the cause, content and durability of consumer beliefs, attitudes and behavior and their relationship to advertising (CX 160; Bass 1531-41). Upon an analysis which took into account the various factors recited above, and based upon his general experience with respect to the stability of beliefs, Dr. Bass expressed his opinion that the belief that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats would continue at the Product Q reported levels for about two years after "colds" advertising ceased; that even after five years from the cessation of advertising, the belief would still be at a very high level (Bass 1560-61). In giving his opinion, Dr. Bass contemplated that the beliefs as to Listerine's effectiveness against colds and sore throats would vary to include, separately or jointly, beliefs as to prevention, as to it being unlikely to catch a cold and as to relief from cold symptoms (Bass 1553, 1583-84, 1605-06).

250. Dr. Rossi is a highly qualified authority in the design, implementation and analysis of surveys having to do with the ascertainment of public opinion. He has worked with surveys (including consumer panel data) which have measured consumer attitudes and beliefs toward consumer products, trends in purchase behavior and casual relationships underlying shifts in brand preference and usage (CX 158; Rossi 1397-1404). Dr. Rossi testified that, in his opinion, the belief that Listerine was effective against colds and sore throats, as reflected in the Product Q reports, would, in the absence of "colds" advertising, decline at no greater a rate than 5 percent a year (Rossi 1469-72).

251. Respondent has introduced no evidence to controvert the opinions of Drs. Bass and Rossi. Based upon those uncontroverted opinions and other facts recited above, it is clear that an order merely directing respondent to cease and desist from making the unfair, false and deceptive representations would be insufficient to protect the public interest; that the order should also include a provision requiring corrective advertising.

The purpose of requiring corrective advertising is to terminate continuing injury to the public. "This continuing injury may be in the form of lingering effects which a misrepresentation may have on consumers' minds or in the form of a lessening of competitive vigor in the marketplace due to the deceptive practices." Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., 81 F.T.C. 398, 470 (1972). Both aspects of continuing injury are present in this case.

The Commission, in Firestone, held that the order there should not contain a corrective advertising provision. While no clear majority view was stated as to why such an order should not issue, the opinion does recite the conclusions of the hearing examiner as follows (81 F.T.C. at 466):

> Although this is a matter of judgment, it appears that such an order is not necessary or desirable in this case for the following reasons:
> (1) There has been a considerable lapse of time since the advertising occurred.
> (2) There is no reason to believe that many of the tires advertised as safe have enough tread left on them for the owners to believe they are safe.
> (3) The evidence shows that the residual effect of the advertising will be slight indeed by the end of this year even if the evidence offered by SOUP is viewed in the most favorable light.
> (4) Many of respondent's competitors have made safety claims through the use of brand names similar to "Safety Champion" and are under no cease and desist order of any kind.

The instant case differs from Firestone in each of the noted aspects:

1. In the present case, there has been no showing of lapse of time since the advertising occurred. There is no indication that it is not presently occurring.
2. This reason is obviously inapplicable here.

3. The evidence shows that the residual effect of the advertising will be high even after five years from the termination thereof.

4. The representations in question are uniquely those of respondent. Respondent's competitors make no such representations. Indeed, respondent's competitors have been, and will continue to be, at a competitive disadvantage because of respondent's representations until their residual effects are removed by corrective advertising.

In Firestone, the only reasons given for not including a corrective advertising order were those expressed in Chairman Kirkpatrick's separate statement (81 F.T.C. 398, 440). He stressed what he described as the lack of showing "that the particular advertisements challenged by the complaint in this matter were in fact commercials which succeeded in achieving the effect desired by advertisers—i.e., to continue to influence consumers' purchasing decisions long after the advertisements had been perceived by consumers." Among the elements he emphasized were the time elapsed since the advertisements in question appeared (in that case four years), the media of advertising (there, print only), the frequency and length of time run (there, two advertisements printed 68 times in 10 publications between January 1967 and September 1968) (81 F.T.C. at 440). In the instant case, the success of the advertising in question was evidenced by tests perceived by respondent's advertising agency to be "ideally suited" for such purpose (Finding 223). The copy points in question are shown to have registered and to have been retained during periods when such advertisements were not placed. The image created and reinforced by the advertising was also shown to be strong and continuing in nature. The advertisements had not been discontinued. They were not limited to print exposure for less than two years, but included print and prime time television coverage for many years.

Form of Corrective Advertising Order

Having determined that an order requiring corrective advertising is necessary and appropriate in the public interest in this matter, it remains to consider the form of such an order.

Relying upon the opinion testimony of (1) Dr. Bass that there would be little decline in the percentage of consumers who would hold the false "colds" belief as to Listerine two years after the cessation of colds advertising and that a substantial number would still retain that belief five years after the cessation of such advertising and (2) Dr. Rossi that the decline in the false belief would be no more than 5 percent per year, complaint counsel (Memorandum 37-38) seek a five-year maximum period of corrective advertising. Respondent, however, upon demonstration by means of a consumer survey that the false beliefs have been fully dissipated or upon the presentation of other evidence satisfactory to the Commission that corrective advertising is no longer required, could have that period shortened (Memorandum 39-40).

The testimony of Drs. Bass and Rossi, while bearing directly upon the necessity to require corrective advertising and providing an indication of the strength and durability of advertising effects to be overcome, does not provide direct opinion evidence as to the period of time for which corrective advertising would be required to dissipate substantially the advertised-induced false beliefs. Their testimony is as to what may be anticipated in the event "colds" advertising were to stop, not how long it would take corrective advertising to perform its function.

In deciding upon a time period for corrective advertising, it is not necessary to impose a time calculated to remove everyone's belief as to the use of Listerine for colds. Some people will continue to have that belief irrespective of any corrective advertising. One variable that will have an effect upon what is accomplished is the amount of Listerine advertising respondent may see fit to engage in. This, of course, is an unknown. With full knowledge that an exactly appropriate time period cannot be calculated, a period should be selected that would be sufficient to accomplish its purpose. Since the order to engage in corrective advertising is not punitive, it would be preferable to overestimate the time required than to underestimate it. Nevertheless, in reaching a time period, the undersigned has not attempted to overestimate the time required. The time deemed reasonable and necessary, in view of all of the factors previously discussed, is two years.

In view of the two-year period decided upon, which does not appear burdensome at this point of time under any foreseeable circumstances, complaint counsel's suggested escape clause is not deemed appropriate. It would not be deemed appropriate even if a longer period of corrective advertising were required in light of Section 3.72(b) of the Commission's Rules of Practice, which provides a procedure for altering, modifying or setting aside an order upon a showing of changed conditions of fact.

The order specifies the precise language of the disclosure that must be made. This has been done in the instant case since the information to be disclosed is susceptible to this exactitude which is complete and, at the same time, brief so as not to unduly burden respondent. It is not deemed necessary, as urged by complaint counsel (Memorandum 41), that the disclosure recite that the Federal Trade Commission is the source of the correction. Such a recitation would be unduly punitive in nature by requiring respondent to indicate that it has been found to be a law violator.

CONCLUSIONS

1. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondent.

2. Respondent has been, at all times relevant herein, engaged in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The methods of competition herein found to be unfair and the acts and practices herein found to be unfair and deceptive have all been engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

3. Respondent's use of false, misleading and deceptive statements and representations as herein found has had and now has the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of Listerine by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief; and, in the absence of an appropriate order, such members of the purchasing public are likely to continue to purchase substantial quantities of Listerine in the mistaken belief that respondent's past statements and representations regarding the efficacy of Listerine with respect to colds and sore throats are true.

4. The acts and practices of respondent noted above as herein found, were and are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted and now constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

5. Complaint counsel have failed to sustain their burden of proof relative to the allegations of Paragraphs Nine and Ten of the complaint.

6. The following order is warranted both under applicable legal precedent and the facts of the case.

ORDER

PART I

It is ordered, That respondent Warner-Lambert Company, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the labeling, advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of Listerine or any other nonprescription drug product in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or by implication, that any such product will cure colds or sore throats.

2. Representing, directly or by implication, that any such product will prevent colds or sore throats.

3. Representing, directly or by implication, that users of any such product will have fewer colds than nonusers.

PART II

It is further ordered, That respondent Warner-Lambert Company, a corporation, its successors and assigns and respondent's officers, agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the labeling, advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of Listerine or any other mouthwash product in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or by implication, that any such product is a treatment for, or will lessen the severity of, colds or sore throats.

2. Representing that any such product will have any beneficial effect on the symptoms of colds or sore throats.

3. Representing that the ability of any such product to kill germs is of medical significance in the treatment of colds or sore throats or the symptoms of colds or sore throats.

PART III

It is further ordered, That respondent Warner-Lambert Company, a corporation, its successors and assigns, and respondent's officers, agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, do forthwith cease and desist, for a period of two years, from disseminating, or causing the dissemination of, any advertisements for the product Listerine Antiseptic unless it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed in each such advertisement in the exact language below that:

> Contrary to prior advertising of Listerine, Listerine will not prevent or cure colds or sore throats, and Listerine will not be beneficial in the treatment of cold symptoms or sore throats.

In print advertisements, this disclosure shall be displayed in type size which is at least the same size as that in which the principal portion of the text of the advertisement appears and shall be separated from the text so that it can be readily noticed. In television advertisements, the disclosure shall be presented simultaneously in both the audio and visual portions. During the audio portion of the disclosure in television and radio advertisements, no other sounds, including music, shall occur. Each such disclosure shall be presented in the language, e.g., English, Spanish, principally employed in the advertisement.

PART IV

It is further ordered, That the allegations of Paragraphs Nine and Ten of the complaint be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

PART V

It is further ordered, That respondent shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service of this order upon it, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale, resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

BY ENGMAN, Commissioner:

I. Background

Respondent, the Warner-Lambert Company, manufactures Listerine Antiseptic, a mouthwash preparation. It is the purpose of this proceeding to determine whether respondent, through various labels and advertisements, has misrepresented Listerine's utility. Specifically, the complaint, dated June 27, 1972, charged Warner-Lambert with misrepresenting, through various labels, print advertisements and television commercials, that the use of Listerine Antiseptic will cure colds and sore throats, will prevent colds and sore throats and will cause colds and sore throats to be less severe than they otherwise would be. It also alleged that through the use of the statement "Kills Germs By Millions On Contact" respondent falsely represented that

Listerine's ability to kill germs is of medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds and sore throats.[1]

In its answer, respondent denied representing either that the use of Listerine will cure colds and sore throats or that it will totally prevent colds and sore throats, but it admitted representing that the use of Listerine, as directed and in conjunction with a regimen of proper rest and diet, will result in fewer colds and will relieve or lessen the severity of cold symptoms to a significant degree. It further admitted that use of Listerine will not cure colds or sore throats and will not totally prevent colds or sore throats.

After extensive hearings covering thousands of pages of testimony, the administrative law judge (hereafter "ALJ") concluded that complaint counsel had sustained their burden of proof on these allegations. He issued an order which prohibits respondent from making the challenged claims in regard to Listerine, other mouthwashes and other nonprescription drugs (Part I and II). His order further requires respondent to include in all Listerine print and television advertisements during the next two years the following statement:

> Contrary to prior advertising of Listerine, Listerine will not prevent or cure colds or sore throats, and Listerine will not be beneficial in the treatment of cold symptoms or sore throats.

Respondent appealed from the initial decision and order claiming, inter alia, that the ALJ did not fairly and adequately consider the evidence on the record as a whole. It charged that Judge Berman "engaged in a wholly one-sided and unfair consideration of the factual and legal issues in this case, and that, in so doing, he has deprived respondent of a fair hearing." (RB at 9.)[2] We have reviewed the record thoroughly and have found no indication that the ALJ's findings were the products of bias or that he conducted this proceeding in an unprofessional manner. While we do not agree with every finding in the initial decision, there is not a scintilla of evidence that the ALJ treated respondent unfairly.

II. Did Respondent Make the Challenged Representations about Listerine?

We agree with the ALJ's conclusion that respondent did in fact make the challenged representations that Listerine will ameliorate, prevent and cure colds and sore throats. In so concluding, we have taken into account respondent's admissions and the views of experts called by both sides to interpret the ads, but most importantly, we have studied each of the challenged labels, print ads and television commercials ourselves.

[1] The complaint further charged that respondent falsely represented that tests prove that children who gargle with Listerine twice a day have fewer and milder colds and miss fewer days of school because of colds than do children who do not use Listerine. Since complaint counsel have not challenged the ALJ's dismissal of this count, that issue is not before us on this appeal.

[2] The following abbreviations are used in this opinion: IDF - Initial decision of administrative law judge. (cited by paragraph except as otherwise noted); Tr. - Transcript of testimony; CX - Commission exhibit; RX - Respondent's exhibit; RB - Respondent's appeal brief; RRB - Respondent's reply brief; CCB - Complaint counsel's answering brief.

A. The Amelioration Claim

Respondent admitted making amelioration claims, i.e., > * * * that the use of Listerine as directed will cause colds and sore throats to be less severe than they otherwise would be and that such a representation encompasses the representation that such use of Listerine will relieve or lessen the severity of cold symptoms to a significant degree. IDF 39.

These amelioration claims were being made at least as late as January of 1974, as is evidenced by respondent's most recent Listerine labels.[3]

B. The Prevention Claim

Respondent also admitted representing that the use of Listerine as directed and in conjunction with a regimen of proper rest and diet will cause fewer colds. The ALJ concluded that this admission satisfies the complaint's allegation that respondent represented that Listerine will prevent colds. We agree.

However, respondent has qualified its admission by contending that all prevention claims ceased prior to the fall of 1969. (RB 82.) Respondent's assertion is incorrect. Our review of Listerine television commercials aired in 1970, 1971 and 1972 convinces us that prevention claims were being made during that period.[4] In particular, numerous television commercials of the 1970-72 era urged the viewer to use Listerine twice a day all winter long. The message is inescapable: Use Listerine twice a day, every day, in conjunction with proper rest and diet, and you will improve your chance of warding off colds. (CX 142A-D, CX 143C-F, CX 144A-E.) The prevention claim was also conveyed in the post-1969 period by the claim that Listerine users have a "fighting chance" against catching a cold. This "fighting chance" theme appeared in print ads as well as television commercials. (CX 17, CX 32, CX 142A, CX 143C, CX 143E, CX 144A.) Even respondent's own expert psychologist, Donald E. Payne, agreed that CX 144A, a commercial aired in the 1971-72 season, had a prevention message. (Tr. 3661-3662.)

[3] CX 139b and 139o.

[4] We also note that the ALJ found that respondent made prevention claims subsequent to 1969. In support of this conclusion the ALJ noted that consumer surveys which respondent commissioned, called "Burke Tests," demonstrate that substantial percentages of persons who had an opportunity to view the commercials perceived the message that Listerine prevented colds and sore throats. (IDF 45.) Respondent contends that the Burke Test is not "a reliable test for construing advertisements." (RB 83.) In view of respondent's admission that it made prevention claims prior to the fall of 1969 and our finding, based upon our review of the advertisements, that it made prevention claims subsequent to that date, we need no additional evidence in support of the prevention allegation, and therefore, we do not reach the question of whether the Burke Test adds additional support.

The ALJ also concluded that although it need not be shown that respondent made claims of total prevention, respondent's advertisements may well be understood to represent total prevention. Since the relevant allegations in the complaint are satisfied by a finding that respondent made qualified prevention claims, i.e., that use of Listerine in conjunction with proper rest and diet will result in fewer colds, we need not reach the question of whether respondent made claims of total prevention.

C. The Cure Claims

We agree with the ALJ's conclusion that respondent represented that the use of Listerine will cure colds through the following statements:

(1) that Listerine "is for colds and resultant sore throats" (IDF 27, 25, 10.)

(2) that "those colds we do catch don't seem to last as long" (IDF 27.)

In reaching the conclusion that "for * * * colds and resultant sore throats" is a cure claim, we rely primarily on the Listerine labels and wrappers used from prior to 1938 to December 1972 which proclaimed:

LISTERINE
ANTISEPTIC
KILLS GERMS
BY MILLIONS
ON CONTACT
For General Oral Hygiene Bad Breath, Colds and resultant Sore Throats
Minor Cuts, Scratches
Insect Bites, Infectious Dandruff[5]

On this label, the statement "Kills Germs By Millions On Contact" immediately precedes the assertion "For General Oral Hygiene Bad Breath, Colds and resultant Sore Throats."[6] By placing these two statements in close proximity, respondent has conveyed the message that since Listerine can kill millions of germs, it can cure, prevent and ameliorate colds and sore throats.[7] It has also made this representation in numerous print advertisements which emphasized colds and prominently displayed the Listerine label.[8] However, we do not agree with the ALJ's additional finding that advertisements which simply state that "you can help with Listerine" or that "Listerine provides a fighting chance" or a "means of fighting off colds" or "fighting back" but which do not display the label prominently are reasonably subject to the construction that a cure is represented.

[5] Respondent incorrectly contends that the FTC lacks jurisdiction over the labeling of foods, drugs and cosmetics. Stanley Laboratories v. FTC, 138 F.2d 388 (9th Cir. 1943); Justin Haynes [Co. v. FTC, 105 F.2d 988 (2d Cir. 1939), cert. denied, 308 U.S. 616 (1939); Fresh Grown Preserve Corp. v. FTC, 125 F.2d 917 (2d Cir. 1942); Houbigant v. FTC, 139 F.2d 1019 (2d Cir. 1944), cert. denied, 323 U.S. 763 (1944).

[6] CX 49 and 50 demonstrate minor variations on this theme. In December 1972 respondent altered the label to read:

LISTERINE
ANTISEPTIC
Kills Germs By Millions

Respondent's television commercial entitled "School Bus" (CX 34F, 140F) also made the claim that Listerine cures colds. In that commercial a mother extolls the virtues of gargling with Listerine twice a day or at the first sign of a cold stating, inter alia, "I think we've cut down on colds, and those we do catch, don't seem to last as long." We find that the statement, "those we do catch, don't seem to last as long," conveys the message that Listerine cures colds.

III. Are Respondent's Representations about Listerine True?

Respondent admits that "the use of Listerine Antiseptic will not cure colds or sore throats and will not totally prevent colds or sore throats," but it asserts that use of the product "* * * as directed and accompanied by a regimen of proper diet and proper rest has been demonstrated to result in fewer colds, milder colds and milder symptoms thereof, and less severe colds and sore throats." [Answer, Paragraph 6.]

Complaint counsel called numerous medical and scientific experts to the stand. Each of these witnesses had impressive credentials and was well-qualified to testify in this proceeding. It is the consensus of these experts that viruses cause the common cold and that bacteria play very little part. Virus particles enter the body through the nose (or sometimes the eyes), attach to cells in the nasopharynx, ("the back of the nose where the nose turns downward into the pharynx"—Tr. 616)[9] and begin to multiply. The viral activity destroys cells, causing the [7] Respondent claims that the ALJ reached the conclusion that "for * * * colds and resultant sore throats" is a cure claim by relying on a per se rule of construction that "for" means "cure." Respondent has misread the ALJ's opinion. Rather than posit a per se rule, the ALJ emphasized that he rested his opinion on his examination of the evidence in the record. We too rest our conclusion on an evaluation of the evidence.

[8] CX 19, CX 20, CX 23, CX 27. These ads appeared in national publications from 1968 to 1969. We note, in addition, that several advertisements which focus on Listerine's purported breath freshening ability depict a bottle of Listerine and the label thereon. CX 1, CX 7, CX 11, CX 13, CX 15, CX 28, CX 30. To the extent the label is readable in these advertisements, they make the same representation as does the label by itself.

various symptoms of the cold to occur. These symptoms can include stuffy nose, runny nose, postnasal drip, burning sensation in the nose, sore throat, sneezing, coughing, burning eyes, fever, general malaise, muscle ache and mild headache. (ID pp. 16-18 [pp.1417-1418 herein].)

It is also the consensus of the experts called by complaint counsel that Listerine has no efficacy in the prevention of colds and sore throats or in the amelioration of colds symptoms, including sore throats.[10] Several of these medical experts stated that gargling with Listerine could provide temporary relief from a sore throat. We agree with the ALJ that this temporary relief is not the "significant relief" promised by respondent's advertisements. More importantly, the record demonstrates Listerine would be no better than salt water or perhaps simply warm water.[11] Thus, as the ALJ found, any relief to a sore throat by gargling with Listerine is not peculiarly attributable to Listerine. (IDF 57.) It is clearly deceptive to attribute significant medical benefit to a purported medication when, in fact, the same benefit can be obtained from ordinary salt water or perhaps even warm water. Cf. Stauffer Laboratories v. FTC, 343 F.2d 75 (9th Cir. 1965.)

A. The Experts' Reasons for Concluding that Listerine Has No Efficacy in the Prevention of Colds and Sore Throats and in Amelioration of Cold Symptoms

In order to prevent a cold from developing or to lessen the severity of a cold, an efficacious substance must reach the affected cells of the body in therapeutic concentrations. Experts for complaint counsel concluded that gargling with Listerine would not meet these criteria for the following three reasons, each of which is a sufficient ground for concluding that Listerine lacks the claimed efficacy:

Listerine's ingredients, considered together, are present in the bottle in insufficient concentrations to have any utility in the prevention or treatment of a cold or sore throat when gargled (Tr. 712 and 1010-1111).[12]

[10] E.g., Tr. 837-838, 860, 550, 393, 480-81, 617-18, 903-907, 1057-58.

[11] Tr. 395, 446-47, 483, 566-69, 860, 862, 1011-12. It should be noted that Dr. Modell, a pharmacologist called by complaint counsel, testified that the lower the surface tension of a gargle the better it can remove accumulated debris in the throat (a source of irritation) Tr. 1042-43. The record shows that Listerine does have a lower surface tension than salt water. However, the record does not show that this lower surface tension translates into meaningfully greater relief than could be obtained by gargling with salt water.

[12] See also Tr. 1016, 1007 (methyl salicylate) Dr. Sorrell Schwartz, a pharmacologist, claimed that the ingredient methyl salicylate, if present in great enough amounts, would increase blood flow to the throat and that this would have a counter-soothing effect because a sore throat, in large part, is the result of too much blood flow. (Tr. 683.) Since the concentration of methyl salicylate in Listerine is insufficient to have any effect on sore throats, we need not determine

Listerine does not reach the critical areas of the body. As the ALJ aptly summarized:

> The mechanism of gargling makes it virtually impossible for the gargle to reach the nasal passages or the lower respiratory tract. When gargling, the palate closes off the nasal passage and nasopharynx and the glottis closes off the entrance to the lower respiratory tract. The gargle is confined to the mouth chamber. Hence, Listerine would not reach the site of infection or manifestation of symptoms in any medically significant concentration. Any vapors that might reach the site where the action is would not be in therapeutic concentration and, in any event, would soon be swept away. Thus, the gargling with Listerine would be ineffective in preventing or producing fewer cold infections or in relieving or reducing the severity of cold symptoms (Gwaltney 393, 448; Hornick 483; Seal 554-56, 571, 573; Proctor 616-19; Rammelkamp 787 (sic 782); Sanders 854; Parrott 904). IDF 69.[13]

Listerine would not penetrate the infected cells.[14] Again, as the ALJ correctly noted:

> Even if gargling with Listerine caused its ingredients to reach the nose and nasopharynx, they would not penetrate the cells where the action of the viruses would be taking place. Hence, Listerine would still be ineffective in this regard (Hornick 481-82; Parrott 904). If Listerine's ingredients were in a concentration strong enough to be effective and reached the infected cells in therapeutic strength and did and could penetrate the cells, the cells would be killed. This would be undesirable as it would destroy the protective covering of the lining of the nose and throat and so provide portals of entry for various bacteria (Hornick 482-83). IDF 70.

Even when asked to assume that Listerine can kill millions of germs on contact (i.e., that Listerine has bactericidal properties), complaint counsel's experts did not alter their conclusions as to Listerine's lack of whether Dr. Schwartz was correct in asserting that a greater amount would be counter-soothing); Tr. 1008 (boric acid); Tr. 1009-1010, 687-688 (benzoic acid, used for the purpose of obtaining a certain level of acidity); Tr. 1010 (alcohol); Tr. 686, 712, 1009, 1025-26 (menthol); Tr. 678-79, 1008 (thymol); Tr. 688-691, 1010 (eucalyptol); IDF 74, 76, 77, 78, 79 and 80.

[13] See also CX 161B. Dr. John C. Krantz, a witness for respondent, wrote a textbook which lends support for this view. It states that the mechanical action of gargling will not deliver the gargled substance to the infected regions of the throat.

[14] Respondent claims that a test conducted by the FDA, RX 57, demonstrates that after gargling, some of the ingredients in Listerine are substantive with the membrane lining; that is, some binding between the oral cavity membrane and ingredients of Listerine occurred. In that test, each subject swished Listerine in his mouth for ten seconds, expectorated and rinsed his mouth twice with an alcohol solution. A substantially smaller percentage of Listerine was recovered in the second rinse than in the first. This finding led the ALJ to conclude that rather than demonstrate a binding effect the test results more probably "indicate that after fully expectorating the Listerine in the mouth, the first alcohol gargle got most of what remained so that the second gargle gathered a much smaller residual amount." IDF 152. The FDA did not offer the ALJ's interpretation as an alternate conclusion, and we see no reason to reject the FDA's conclusion. However, this test does not demonstrate that Listerine's vapors would have the same binding effect to the membrane in the nasopharynx as would Listerine in liquid form to the buccal membrane. More important, it does not demonstrate that Listerine would penetrate the tissue cells. In fact, respondent's own witness, Dr. Thomas McNamara, has testified that although Listerine may bind to the mucous membrane, it will not enter the tissue cells (Tr. 2343).

effectiveness. The following findings by the ALJ adequately summarize the views expressed by complaint counsel's witnesses:

> Bacteria play very little part in the common cold. Apart from viruses, cold type symptoms may be caused by the bacteria called Beta Hemolytic Streptococci or Group A Hemolytic Streptococci, more commonly referred to as a strep throat, and another organism somewhere in between a virus and a bacteria called microplasma [sic: mycoplasma] pneumonia. These agents may cause at most 5 to 10 percent of the occurrences of cold-like symptoms.
> These ailments, however, must be treated with specific medicinal agents. In the case of strep throat, failure to treat properly may result in rheumatic fever, valvular heart disease and kidney infections, which are very serious to the point of being life-threatening. Microplasma pneumonia is a lingering ailment if antibiotics are not used. It would be inappropriate to treat patients with strep throat or microplasma pneumonia with Listerine or with anything other than the specific medications that should be prescribed (Gwaltney 380-81, 384-85, 438, 453-54; [Hornick] 486, 493-94; Proctor 610; Rammelkamp 767-71, 799-800; Sanders 836-40, 870; Parrott 896-97, 900-01, 918-19; [See also] Knight 1925-26, 2037-40, 2048). IDF 51.
> Colds are not caused by bacteria. Bacteria in the oral cavity play no role in cold symptoms. The ability of Listerine to kill millions of germs on contact, therefore, is of no medical significance in the prevention, cure or treatment of colds or sore throats (Gwaltney 397, 453; Hornick 486, 488-89; Seal 551-53; Proctor 609, 616-18 [19 and 20]; Rammelkamp [775] 776-77; Sanders 836; Parrott 918-19; Kilbourne 1058; see also Knight 2048). IDF 58.
> Colds are sometimes followed by secondary infections caused by bacteria known as secondary invaders. Instances are sinusitis and otitis media (middle ear infection) where drainage from the sinuses or middle ear is impaired by the cold, and bacteria which are already in those sites get the opportunity, because of the lack of drainage, to cause trouble. Another secondary infection is peritonsillar cellulitis. The ingredients of Listerine, however, would not reach the resting places of the secondary invaders. Listerine could not reach the sinuses, the middle ear or the deep crypts of the tonsils or adenoids or other deep-seated places where such bacteria might be. Listerine, therefore, would be ineffective to prevent, cure or alleviate such secondary infections (Seal 552-54, 572; Proctor 614-15, 618, Rammelkamp 772-74, 811-12; Sanders 842, 844). IDF 71.
> While Listerine kills millions of bacteria in the mouth, it also leaves millions. It is impossible to sterilize any area of the mouth, let alone the entire mouth. There are significant numbers of bacteria in various tissues, tissue folds and crypts which Listerine can't reach. For example, there is more flora in the crevices of the teeth than on the roof of the mouth. The bacteria grow back quickly or the voids are quickly replaced by other bacteria. The use of Listerine has only a transient effect on the flora (Hornick 488-89, 523-24; Seal 554; Proctor 620; Sanders 847, 881-83). IDF 72.
> To the extent that Listerine may kill millions of bacteria in the mouth, it would do so only ahead of the soft palate. This would have nothing to do with the throat, nose or the posterior pharynx. Consequently, the killing of germs in the mouth would have nothing to do with preventing, curing or relieving colds or coughs or cold symptoms (Hornick 483; Seal 554; Rammelkamp 777). The bacteria in the normal flora of the mouth play no role in the causation of colds or in the symptoms of colds. Thus, killing some of those bacteria would have no effect on the prevention, cure or symptoms of colds or coughs (Sanders 846-47, 879-80; And See Findings 48, 51, 52, 58 and 62, supra). IDF 73.

B. Respondent's Experts

Respondent sought to refute the prima facie case made by complaint counsel's experts with a battery of ten expert witnesses and numerous studies, clinical as well as nonclinical. Although several of these witnesses offered no support for one or more efficacy claims or substantially qualified their views,[15] the general import of their testimony, taken as a whole, was that Listerine can reduce the number of colds one catches and ameliorate cold symptoms.

Nine of respondent's experts based their opinions to a substantial degree upon laboratory tests and/or clinical studies.[16] We have painstakingly reviewed each of the exhibits introduced for the purpose of establishing Listerine's effectiveness and conclude that they have little or no probative value for this proceeding. We have set forth at length in the Appendix our views as to each of these studies. Since these tests do not provide a sound basis for concluding that Listerine may have the claimed preventive or ameliorative powers, the persuasiveness of those witnesses who relied upon them is greatly diminished.

The tenth witness, Dr. John C. Krantz, Jr., apparently did not rely upon the exhibits in question. However, we accord his testimony little weight, because he was unaware of the quantities of Listerine which would reach the nasopharynx, (Tr. 1882) and his view that gargling with Listerine would be beneficial for a sore throat is contradicted by statements in his own textbook. (CX 161A and 161B, Tr. 1889-95.)[17]

In weighing the evidence we have taken into consideration the fact that the experts called by complaint counsel based their opinions on their general medical and pharmacological knowledge and, in some instances, on their experiences as clinicians. With the exception of Dr. Hornick, none of complaint counsel's witnesses examined the exhibits which respondent presented in support of its assertion that Listerine is efficacious. Failure to provide these witnesses with respondent's tests is inconsequential because, as we have set out in the Appendix, these tests lack probative value. Moreover, the experts called by complaint counsel are well versed in their fields, several having devoted their careers to the task of studying and treating respiratory diseases. If valid tests demonstrating Listerine's efficacy as a cold treatment had been conducted, we seriously doubt that such tests would have remained a secret to all of complaint counsel's medical and pharmacological experts.

[15] Dr. Noller offered no opinion as to Listerine's efficacy. He merely asserted that an ingredient of Listerine, menthol, acts as a nasal decongestant. Dr. Shirkey asserted only that Listerine could ameliorate some cold symptoms, Tr. 2607, 2616, 2628, 2667-69, 2674. Dr. Carson limited his evaluation of Listerine's efficacy to relief for coughing and nasal congestion, Tr. 3032-34, See also Tr. 3057. Dr. Knight on cross examination, "* * * retreated to the position that there were threads of evidence upon which one could put together a theoretical basis for the efficacy of Listerine, but that there were also threads of evidence to the effect that Listerine was ineffective (Tr. 2045-48)." IDF 143. Dr. Lasagna concluded that "if you gargle with Listerine regularly there is a chance you will feel somewhat better when you have a cold," Tr. 4154. Dr. Sadusk would recommend Listerine for relief of cold symptoms, but was not in a position to recommend it for prevention of colds and would not recommend it as a cold cure, Tr. 3211-12.

[16] Haggie, IDF 128; Knight, IDF 143-44; Noller, IDF 145; McNamara, IDF 146; See also Tr. 2306; (Dr. McNamara may have relied additionally upon tests admitted into evidence solely for the purpose of "showing what Dr. McNamara relied upon as a responsible official of respondent for purposes of considering the scope of an order to cease and desist should one be issued." IDF 148); Ritchie, IDF 155; Shirkey, IDF 164; Carson, IDF 167 and 182; Sadusk, IDF 184; Lasagna, IDF 190.

[17] The ALJ noted that many of respondent's experts had financial ties to respondent. In view of the reasons we have expressed for placing little reliance on the testimony of respondent's witnesses, we need not consider the possible effect of their financial ties. Finally, in regard to Dr. Noller, although we agree with the ALJ that his testimony was not a model of clarity, we will attribute the ambiguities in his testimony solely to language difficulties.

This is not the first proceeding in which the Commission has had to choose between experts who based their views on their general medical and pharmacological knowledge and others who based their views at least in part on deficient studies. It is well established that the Commission has authority to rely on the testimony of the former. E.g., J. E. Todd v. FTC, 145 F.2d 858 (D.C. Cir. 1944); Fulton v. FTC, 130 F.2d 85 (9th Cir. 1942), cert. denied, 317 U.S. 679 (1942); Aronberg v. FTC, 132 F.2d 165 (7th Cir. 1942); Justin Haynes & Co. v. FTC, 105 F.2d 988 (2d Cir. 1939).

C. Consumer Satisfaction

Respondent claims that Listerine's cold-fighting ability is demonstrated by the fact that vast percentages of the population consider Listerine Antiseptic to be effective for colds and sore throats "because a consumer's image of a product and his propensity to purchase it repeatedly is substantially dependent upon his experience with it." (RB 74-75, RRB 20.) The record does show that a consumer's "experience" with a product affects his image of the product and his propensity to purchase it. (Tr. 1199-1200, 1673, 3389-90, 3402-03, 3436-38, 3455-56.) The record also demonstrates that many consumers think Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats. (Infra, Sec. V A2.) But this evidence does not, as respondent contends, prove that Listerine works. The flaw in respondent's reasoning is that a consumer may perceive a product to be effective when, in reality, it has no efficacy. In short, he may repeatedly purchase the product out of ignorance. A cold is a self-limiting disease, and therefore a cold sufferer who takes Listerine may wrongly attribute the termination of the cold episode to his gargling with Listerine. (Tr. 2039.) Clearly, unless the patient can perform well-controlled clinical tests, he is not in a position to know whether his improvement was attributable to the medication.

In addition, the cold-sufferer who takes Listerine is likely to experience the placebo effect, the phenomenon in which the patient who takes a medication feels better because he thinks he should feel better even though the product has no genuine therapeutic value.

(Appendix at 6A.) The Commission cannot accept as proof of a product's efficacy a psychological reaction stemming from a belief which, to a substantial degree, was caused by respondent's deceptions. (Infra, Sec. V A2.)

Since there may be a divergence between what the user thinks the product will do for him and what the product actually does (or does not do), evidence of consumer beliefs has little probative value for determining whether Listerine is effective for colds or sore throats.

In support of its contention that consumer satisfaction constitutes persuasive evidence of product efficacy, respondent cites Evis Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 287 F.2d 831 (9th Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 824 (1961). That case does not stand for so broad a rule. In Evis the court merely held that tests conducted by experts who failed to follow the manufacturer's instructions did not constitute substantial evidence of the challenged product's lack of efficacy, and that the Commission erred in failing to consider testimony of user witnesses (many of whom were experts). The court did not hold that evidence of consumer satisfaction is persuasive of a product's efficacy, but merely that the Commission must consider such testimony. In the case at hand we have taken into account the fact that survey evidence shows that many consumers consider Listerine to be effective for colds and sore throats, and for the reasons discussed above, we conclude that this evidence does not demonstrate that Listerine has any efficacy in the prevention or treatment of colds or sore throats.

To summarize, after carefully reviewing the testimony of the experts called by both sides and of the studies admitted into evidence in support of respondent's efficacy claims, we must conclude that the preponderance of the evidence[18] demonstrates that, contrary to respondent's advertising claims, the use of Listerine, as directed, will

[18] This Commission has consistently used a preponderance of the evidence test in evaluating the truthfulness of product claims. Respondent asserts that in evaluating a drug's effectiveness we must follow, instead, the "substantial evidence" standard set forth in the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S.C. §355(d), which the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare must apply when he considers a new drug application. We cannot agree. Of course, we would take into account an evaluation by the Secretary that substantial evidence supported the claimed efficacy, but we find no indication in either the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act or our own Act that Congress intended that we automatically defer to the Secretary's determinations.

However, the question of which standard to apply is not crucial to the outcome of this proceeding because respondent has not met even the more lenient standard prescribed by §355(d). That section requires that an application for a new drug be denied if "there is a lack of substantial evidence that the drug will have the effect it purports or is represented to have under the conditions of use prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the proposed labeling thereof." Sec. 355(d) defines "substantial evidence" as: "evidence consisting of adequate and well-controlled investigations, including clinical investigations, by experts qualified by scientific training and experience to evaluate the effectiveness of the drug involved, on the basis of which it could fairly and responsibly be concluded by such experts that the drug will have the effect it purports or is represented to have under the conditions of use prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the labeling or proposed labeling thereof."

The FDA's relevant regulations specify that "essentials of adequate and well-controlled clinical investigations" include the necessity "to minimize bias on the part of the subject and the observer." Sec. 314.111(a)(5)(ii)(a)(3). The Supreme Court has noted that "[L]ower courts have upheld the validity of these regulations, and it is not disputed that not prevent or cure colds or sore throats or ameliorate cold symptoms. Accordingly, respondent has violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

IV. The Prior Proceeding

In 1940 the Commission issued a complaint challenging cold and sore throat claims for Listerine which it later dismissed "* * * without prejudice to the right of the Commission to institute further proceedings should future facts so warrant." 38 F.T.C. 730 (1944). Respondent argues that the complaint in the present proceeding must be dismissed because complaint counsel have not come forward with "future facts." Respondent has misconstrued the 1944 order. In previously expressing our position on this question, Warner-Lambert Company, 82 F.T.C. 749, 752 (1973), we stated:

> The future facts which would warrant a new proceeding are those upon which the Commission's decision to issue a complaint are based and, as we have previously held, respondent is precluded from inquiring into our mental processes leading up to that decision. In the Matter of the Seeburg Corporation, 70 FTC 1818.

Respondent also contends that the Commission relied upon the Reddish Study in dismissing the 1944 complaint, and therefore the ALJ's findings relating to the deficiencies in the Reddish Study "constitute an impermissable [sic] relitigation of matters long ago settled." (RB 67.) Although in his separate statement Chairman Freer said that the Reddish tests > * * * afford some basis for the respondent's conclusion that the use of Listerine in practice actually mitigates or shortens colds and their complications, the Commission's order belies respondent's assertion that the validity of the Reddish tests was settled in the prior action. Had it been of the they express well-established principles of scientific investigation." Weinberger v. Hynson, Westcott & Dunning, 412 U.S. 609, 619 (1973). As is discussed in the Appendix, respondent did not take adequate precautions to minimize bias on the part of either the subjects or the investigators in its clinical tests of Listerine. Thus, respondent has not satisfied even the substantial evidence standard.

Respondent also contends that (RB at 39): "* * * in the case of old (pre-1938), well-established drugs such as Listerine Antiseptic, Congress further concluded that their history of consumer acceptance was in itself substantial evidence of efficacy and established for those drugs a presumption of efficacy and an exemption from the preclearance procedures established in the 1962 Drug Amendments." 21 U.S.C. §321(p); see, Weinberger v. Hynson, Westcott & Dunning, Inc., supra at 614.

Neither §321(p) nor the cited case suggest that a "history of consumer acceptance was in itself substantial evidence of efficacy" or that old drugs are presumed to be efficacious. On the contrary, Congress viewed this grandfather clause merely as a "transitional" provision for implementing the 1962 Drug Industry Act (S. Rep. No. 1744, 87th Cong., 2nd Sess., Part II at 7-8 1962). FDA was given the statutory mandate "to review all marketed drugs for their therapeutic efficacy, whether or not previously approved * * *" Weinberger v. Hynson, Westcott & Dunning, Inc., 412 U.S. 609, 614 and, as the Supreme Court has noted, "[i]n May 1972 FDA adopted a procedure for determining whether particular OTC products, not covered by NDA's are safe products, not ineffective, and not misbranded." Weinberger v. Bentex Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 412 U.S. 645, 650 (1973). Thus, no presumption of efficacy arises from the fact that Listerine has been on the market since 1879.

view that the Reddish tests proved that Listerine was effective for the treatment of colds, the Commission presumably would have dismissed the complaint with prejudice. Instead, it dismissed the complaint "without prejudice to the right of the Commission to institute further proceedings should future facts so warrant."[19] The dismissal of a Federal Trade Commission action "without prejudice" does not work an estoppel to a future determination of the merits of that action. Hastings Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 153 F.2d 253 (6th Cir. 1946), cert. denied, 328 U.S. 853 (1946).

V. The Remedy

A. Corrective Advertising

The ALJ imposed on respondent the duty to engage in corrective advertising. Specifically, for two years respondent shall not disseminate any advertisement for Listerine unless the advertisement clearly and conspicuously states: Contrary to prior advertising of Listerine, Listerine will not prevent or cure colds or sore throats, and Listerine will not be beneficial in the treatment of cold symptoms or sore throats.

1. Authority to Issue a Corrective Advertising Order

The Commission has previously noted its authority to issue corrective advertising orders.[20] It also has ordered affirmative relief to dispel the lingering effects of misrepresentations[21] and has accepted numerous consent orders which require corrective advertising.[22] In concluding that the Commission's statutory mandate encompasses the

[19] In explaining his reason for so doing Chairman Freer said:

> In my opinion the issues raised by paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of the complaint involve in their determination the adoption of one of two opposing medical or scientific opinions in respect to which our decision would settle only the legal right of the respondent to continue to make the challenged representations and not the underlying controversy. Should we so resolve those issues (both as to interpretations of the advertisements and as to the medical or scientific opinions) as to require an order to cease and desist, the respondent can, and no doubt will, appeal. In that appeal, however, the door will be closed to any weighing of the evidence by the court, since "the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive." Should we, on the other hand, so resolve the several issues of interpretation of language and of medical or scientific opinion in such a manner as to dictate an outright dismissal of the complaint, the respondent might, and probably would, raise the defense of res adjudicata to any proceeding which the Government might decide to institute at some future time when and if the medical profession learns more about and reaches a greater degree of unanimity concerning the cause of and cure for dandruff, bad breath and colds or sore throats.
> Hence, while not unmindful of the forcefulness of the arguments on the one hand for an order to cease and desist and on the other for outright dismissal, I feel that a dismissal without prejudice is warranted by the probability (almost certainty) that neither an order to cease and desist nor an outright dismissal would settle with finality or help greatly in the final settlement of the underlying medical and scientific controversies, although either disposition would be interpreted as having settled these matters once and for all. 38 F.T.C. at 741-42.

authority to order corrective advertising, we have been mindful of the wide latitude courts have afforded the Commission in fashioning appropriate relief.[23] Illustrative of this wide latitude are orders requiring divestiture, L. G. Balfour Co. v. FTC, 442 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. 1971); ordering compulsory licensing of a patent on a reasonable royalty basis, Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc. v. FTC, 401 F.2d 574 (6th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 920 (1969); limiting the purchases of certain products between respondents, Luria Bros. & Co., Inc. v. FTC, 389 F.2d 847 (3d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 829 (1968); and requiring affirmative disclosures in advertisements and on products, J. B. Williams Company v. FTC, 381 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967), Keele Hair & Scalp Specialists, Inc. v. FTC, 275 F.2d 18 (5th Cir., 1960), Ward Laboratories, Inc. v. FTC, 276 F.2d 952 (2nd Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 827 (1960), Waltham Precision Instrument Co. v. FTC, 327 F.2d 427 (7th Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 992 (1964).

Simply stated, the common thread linking these cases is the principle that the Commission has authority to order the relief necessary to adequately protect the public from the effects of a law violation. Thus, if a deceptive advertisement has played a substantial role in creating or reinforcing in the public's mind a false and material belief which lives on after the false advertising ceases, there is clear and continuing injury to competition and to the consuming public as consumers continue to make purchasing decisions based on the false belief. Since this injury cannot be averted by merely requiring respondent to cease

[23] We said in Firestone, 81 F.T.C. at 467-68:

> The courts have repeatedly recognized that to deal with the ever expanding scope of unfair and deceptive practices, the Commission must be permitted wide latitude in fashioning effective relief, In Jacob Siegel Co. v. FTC, 327 U.S. 608, 612-13 (1946) the Court stated:
>
> > The Commission is the expert body to determine what remedy is necessary to eliminate the unfair and deceptive trade practices which have been disclosed. It has wide latitude for judgment and the courts will not interfere except where the remedy selected has no reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist.
> Again in FTC v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 473 (1952) the Supreme Court reiterated this view:
> > Congress placed the primary responsibility for fashioning such orders upon the Commission, and Congress expected the Commission to exercise a special competence in formulating remedies to deal with problems in the general sphere of competitive practices. (Footnote omitted.)
> The court pointed out that if the Commission is to carry out the objectives envisioned by Congress "it cannot be required to confine its road block to the narrow lane the transgressor has traveled," but must be able "to close all roads to the prohibited goal." Ruberoid, supra at 473.
> Such wide latitude in determining remedy has been deemed necessary so that the Commission can effectively carry out the statutory policy of the Federal Trade Commission Act to protect consumers and maintain competitive vigor in the marketplace. As the Ninth Circuit stated in Carter Products, Inc. v. FTC, 268 F.2d 461, 498 (9th Cir. 1959):
> > Shaping a remedy is essentially an administrative function. Congress has entrusted the Commission with the responsibility of selecting the means of achieving a statutory policy—the relation of remedy to policy is peculiarly a matter for administrative competence.
> The Seventh Circuit recently reflected this same view in L. G. Balfour Co. v. FTC, 442 F.2d 1,24 (7th Cir. 1971):
> > The Commission must be accorded latitude in forming its orders for "the Commission alone is empowered to develop that enforcement policy best calculated to achieve the ends contemplated by Congress and to allocate its available funds and personnel in such a way as to execute its policy efficiently and economically." Moog Industries, Inc. v. FTC, 355 U.S. 411, 413, 78 S. Ct. 377, 379, 2 L. Ed. 2d 370 (1958)."

disseminating the advertisement, we may appropriately order respondent to take affirmative action designed to terminate the otherwise continuing ill effects of the advertisement.

Respondent claims that Heater v. FTC, 503 F.2d 321 (9th Cir. 1974), rejected the proposition set forth in Firestone that the Commission has authority to terminate continuing injury to the public.[24] Respondent has misread Heater. In that case the court simply held that the Commission lacked authority to order a respondent to refund to customers monies obtained from them through deceptive practices. Neither the holding in Heater nor the court's rationale support respondent's assertion that the Commission lacks authority to order corrective advertising. In fact, the Heater court explicitly distinguished the Commission's order in that case from a corrective advertising order:

> Our holding denies retroactive impact to a Commission decision, at least insofar as private rights and liabilities are involved * * *
> We recognize that divestiture and corrective advertising orders support the Commission's position that it has power, in order to remedy the continuing effects of violations of the Act, to order acts imposing economic costs properly attributed to conduct occurring before the conduct is declared illegal. Moreover, we recognize that there is no economic difference in the impact of those orders and a restitution order—in each case the offender loses the benefits of money expended in reliance on the legality of conduct later found illegal. Nevertheless, the two cases must be treated differently because Congress, out of reasonable fair notice consideration, chose to leave the cure of private injuries caused by violations of the Act to whatever common-law remedies existed. 503 F.2d 321, 324-25 n. 13.

We thus conclude that Heater is no authority for the contention that the Commission lacks authority to issue a corrective advertising order to dispel the continuing effects which a deceptive advertisement has on the consuming public.

Moreover, the continued sale of a product under false pretenses is itself a violation of the FTC Act,[25] which, in the case of lingering false beliefs created by discontinued advertisements, can be remedied only by dispelling the false belief.

[24] In considering the Commission's authority to issue an order designed to terminate the continuing effects of a deceptive advertisement, the Commission said in Firestone:

> ANA and respondent contend that a corrective advertising order is retrospective and therefore unlawful because it seeks to dissipate the effects of illegal conduct. In our view, however, such an order is quite obviously not retrospective if its purpose and effect is to terminate continuing injury to the public. This continuing injury may be in the form of lingering effects which a misrepresentation may have on consumers' minds or in the form of a lessening of competitive vigor in the marketplace due to the deceptive practices. Under such circumstances, the appropriate relief is that which will terminate the continuing injury to the public. 81 F.T.C. at 470.

2. Applying the Corrective Advertising Standard to the Case at Hand

The record demonstrates that respondent's deceptive advertisements have created false beliefs which are likely to continue to exist and influence consumer decisions to purchase Listerine.

Consumer Beliefs. Market research reports, known as "Product Q" reports,[26] which were commissioned by respondent over a seven-year period at a cost of over $100,000, demonstrate that the majority of those surveyed believe that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats. Specifically, the percentage of those persons surveyed who rated Listerine as "one of the best" in the category "effective for colds and sore throats" rose from 43 percent in 1963 to 59 percent in 1971, averaging 53.8 percent for the entire period. This figure includes the entire population surveyed, Listerine users as well as nonusers. 53.8 percent is itself a substantial portion of the survey population, but that figure probably understates the percentage who believes Listerine has some effect on colds and sore throats because it includes only those who believe that Listerine is "one of the best" mouthwashes for that characteristic. It does not include responders who rated Listerine as "very good," "good" or "fair" for the category "effective for colds and sore throats." (IDF 236.)

Although the data for the precoded category "effective for colds and sore throats" was not refined into more specific beliefs, the ALJ concluded that this category encompasses prevention, amelioration and cure claims. (IDF 230.) On the one hand respondent takes issue with the ALJ's interpretation, but on the other hand, it appears to argue, in support of its amelioration and partial prevention claims, that consumers perceive Listerine to be an effective remedy. (RB 74-75.) More important, the record adequately supports the conclusion that "effective for colds and sore throats" includes prevention and amelioration beliefs. (Tr. 1553.) However, on the basis of the record before it, the Commission is unconvinced as to cure beliefs. We thus find that a substantial portion of the consumer public holds prevention and amelioration beliefs but we can draw no conclusion about cure beliefs.

Effect of Listerine Advertisements on Consumer Beliefs. Respondent has advertised Listerine to consumers as a cold remedy since 1921. Not only have Listerine packages and labels contained cold efficacy messages, but also respondent has spent large sums to advertise Listerine on television and in print media as effective for colds and sore throats. (IDF 219-220.) Common sense indicates that this extensive cold efficacy advertising campaign (including labels and packages) has contributed substantially to Listerine cold and sore throat efficacy beliefs and that current advertising performs the dual functions of maintaining beliefs created by prior advertisements and creating beliefs in consumers entering the market.

[26] For discussion of the nature of Product Q reports see IDF 222-227.

Record evidence supports what common sense suggests:

(1) Dr. Peter Rossi, a witness for complaint counsel, testified that (Tr. 1451):

> Indeed, the evidence here is consistent with the idea that it is the advertising of Listerine as registered in the memories of consumers which produces the distinctive patterning of the brand image for that brand; and, indeed, the advertising for Micrin does the same thing for Micrin, but certainly it is clear that the advertising for Listerine does its job for that brand.

(2) Dr. Alvin A. Achenbaum, a witness for respondent, stated (Tr. 3439-40):

> * * * insofar as the users of a brand are concerned that advertising for a well-established product like Listerine — that probably the advertising has the effect of reminding people of information or their belief or about the brand so that at the time at which they make a purchase — that hopefully that brand will come to their mind as opposed to perhaps some other brand which is out there trying to advertise and have some effect upon their point of view as well. So I would say that, in that sense in the life cycle, it has a reminding effect.
> Now, there are always new people coming into the market. I mean, people grow up and form households who are not users, and, to some degree, the advertising could affect their belief structure.

See also testimony of Dr. Frank Bass. (Tr. 1607-12, 1617-21.)

(3) The benefit of spending vast sums on cold efficacy advertising has not escaped respondent's notice. A Product Q report commissioned by respondent stated:

> Listerine continues to be first on most measures and it continues to grow while Scope remains a distant second; its performance relatively static. However, despite this one sided picture, comparable numbers of respondents claim to recall "a lot" of advertising for each brand. With this dimension constant and Listerine well ahead of Scope on everything else, it would appear that the quality of Listerine's advertising and/or its media plan are making a vital contribution to the brand's success.
> Also, there is a very close relationship between Listerine advertising registration and the brand's image. (Emphasis added) CX 65E-F.

Moreover, a letter from respondent to the J. Walter Thompson Co. stated that a cold efficacy commercial, "* * * helped generate all-time high brand shares." (CX 109A.)

(4) Apparently, Listerine's three leading competitors were not advertised as colds remedies. (Tr. 1595, RB 85.) The Product Q data reveals that over 60 percent of responders in 1967 and 1968 believed Listerine was effective for colds and sore throats, whereas fewer than 20 percent attributed that quality to Listerine's three leading competitors.[27] (CX 80Z-11.) Although this empirical data showing a three-fold differential in belief levels does not prove that Listerine cold efficacy advertising substantially affected consumer beliefs, it is consistent with the aforesaid views expressed by experts and respondent.

Respondent argues that consumer beliefs result from actual experience with the product rather than from the advertising. We have previously concluded that Listerine has no efficacy for colds and sore throats. We further noted that a cold is a self-limiting malady, and therefore a cold sufferer may wrongly attribute the termination of the cold episode to Listerine. In fact, the only source of consumer "satisfaction" is the placebo effect. Although the placebo effect probably causes some Listerine users to think the mouthwash works, the record does not establish it as the exclusive or even major source of the belief.

Respondent further incorrectly contends that a corrective advertising order cannot properly be issued unless the Commission finds that advertising was the sole source of the belief. We have previously ordered affirmative relief to correct a false impression created merely "in part through respondent's own efforts." Waltham Instrument Co., 61 F.T.C. 1027, 1049 (1962) aff'd. 327 F.2d 427 (7th Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 992 (1964). To the extent that dicta in Sun Oil, Dkt. 8889 (Aug. 19, 1974 [84 F.T.C. 247]), an unappealed initial decision adopted by the Commission, could be construed as supporting a sole-source standard, that opinion does not reflect the views of this Commission. The Commission's mandate is to eliminate the effects of false advertising, and a sole-source standard would effectively bury a remedy which is vital to the achievement of that goal.

Persistence of the False Beliefs. The record demonstrates that long after Listerine cold efficacy advertising ceased, a substantial proportion of the public would continue to believe in Listerine's efficacy for the treatment and prevention of colds and sore throats. Dr. Bass testified that cold efficacy belief levels would continue at the 1971 rate (59 percent) for about two years after colds advertising ceased and would remain high even after five years. (Tr. 1560-61, 1611.) It is Dr. Bass' view that consumer beliefs tend to continue once they are created and that after a belief is created it lasts much longer than the memory of the copy points of the ads that created the belief. (Tr. 1556-57.) Dr.

[27] In commenting on the low scores of Listerine's competitors, Dr. Bass said "and I would expect that there would be levels of belief for these other brands of about the level that we observe in the absence of advertising." Tr. 1595. He suggested that the low percentages which the other mouthwashes registered in the absence of colds advertising could have resulted from color, image of antiseptic properties and perhaps word of mouth. Tr. 1596.

Rossi concluded that the stability of Listerine's image is quite impressive, and that in the absence of colds advertising consumer beliefs would decline at no greater a rate than 5 percent a year. (Tr. 1433, 1469-72.) At that maximum rate of decline, belief levels would still register over 30 percent ten years after the advertising ceased. Moreover, the Product Q data reveals that consumer beliefs about Listerine's effectiveness against colds and sore throats were practically the same during the portions of the year when respondent engaged in colds advertising as during the rest of the year. (CX 159D.)

As was previously discussed (supra, Part II), the record shows that respondent's advertisements and labels made the challenged claims at least as late as 1972. Thus, we conclude that a substantial proportion of the consuming public will retain the beliefs in issue well into the 1980's.

Materiality of the False Beliefs. The ALJ found that "[t]he belief that Listerine is effective for colds and sore throats is a determining factor in a significant number of consumers' decisions to purchase Listerine." (IDF 244(a).) The testimony of Dr. Rossi supports this conclusion (Tr. 1455, 1460) as does empirical evidence. According to Product Q data, 37.5 percent of those interviewed over a seven-year period said that "effective for colds and sore throats" was "extremely important" in their selection of a mouthwash. (CX 159A.) This tabulation did not include those for whom "effective for colds and sore throats," was "very important," "somewhat important," or "fairly important." Thus, although 37.5 percent is in itself substantial, it probably does not fully reflect the extent to which cold efficacy beliefs affect purchasing decisions.

3. The Nature of the Corrective Advertising Order

In view of the foregoing findings that respondent's advertisements substantially contributed to the development and maintenance of the belief that Listerine is effective for the prevention and treatment of colds and sore throats, that a substantial portion of the population will continue to hold this belief well into the 1980's and that this belief plays a material role in purchasing decisions (thereby injuring both consumers and competition), we conclude that an order merely requiring cessation of the deceptive advertising would not afford the public adequate protection. The lingering false belief must be dispelled, a task which requires corrective advertising.[28]

The ALJ's order, which requires respondent to include a corrective message in all advertising for two years, may not accomplish this task.

[28] The ALJ justified the corrective advertising order on the additional ground that future representations of Listerine as a germ killer would automatically remind the public of false colds claims (IDF 248). We need not consider at this time this additional rationale.

If respondent chose not to advertise during the two-year period (or to do a miniscule amount of advertising) the corrective message would not adequately reach the public and the false beliefs would live on. To avert this possibility we shall order respondent to include the corrective message[29] in all Listerine advertising until it has expended an amount on such advertising equal to its average annual Listerine advertising budget for the ten-year period of April 1962 to March 1972 (as set forth in CX 44). A corrective advertising campaign of this scope should adequately dispel the lingering beliefs.

In this proceeding we cannot determine in advance with computer-like precision the minimum amount of corrective advertising which will dispel the otherwise continuing beliefs at issue. However, in ordering the relief which the public interest requires, it is the duty of a tribunal to exercise its best judgment to predict the relief which is essential. As the Supreme Court has recognized, the fashioning of appropriate affirmative relief necessarily "* * * involves predictions and assumptions concerning future economic and business events." Ford Motor Company v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 578, (1972).[30] We see no reason why different considerations should apply when drafting a corrective advertising order.

4. Other Objections to a Corrective Advertising Order

Respondent contends that a corrective advertising order would raise First Amendment questions. However, it has not disputed the commercial nature of its advertisements. As we noted in Firestone,[31] courts have repeatedly held that regulation of false commercial advertising is constitutional. In Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations, 413 U.S. 376, 389 (1973), the Supreme Court articulated a balancing test which must be applied to the regulation of truthful commercial speech:

> Any First Amendment interest which might be served by advertising an ordinary commercial proposal and which might arguably outweigh the governmental interest supporting the regulation is altogether absent when the commercial activity itself is illegal and the restriction on advertising is incidental to a valid limitation on economic activity.

Assuming that the same considerations apply when mandating commercial speech as when proscribing it, we conclude that the corrective advertising order in this case is a valid limitation on economic activity because it is designed to dispel the continuing effects of illegal commercial activity.[32]

[29] Since the record does not demonstrate that consumers hold cure beliefs, we have modified the message to read: Contrary to prior advertising, Listerine will not help prevent colds or sore throats or lessen their severity.

[30] The Court upheld a lower court's determination that to restore and encourage competition, Ford must, inter alia, be enjoined from manufacturing spark plugs for ten years, be ordered for five years to buy one half its spark plug requirements from the divested plant under the "Autolite" name and refrain from using its own name on spark plugs during that five-year period, and be ordered for ten years to sell to its dealers at prices not less than the minimum suggested jobbers' selling price.

[31] 81 F.T.C. at 471-72.

Respondent also claims that a corrective advertising order is a punitive measure because it may adversely affect the product's consumer franchise as a breath freshener. The corrective advertising order that we are issuing is intended solely to dissipate the effects of respondent's deceptive representations. In dispelling these beliefs, respondent may impair a portion of its breath-freshener franchise, but the fact that the remedy may have some harsh consequences does not render it punitive. As the Commission said in Firestone, 81 F.T.C. at 469:

> The fact that the remedy may be deemed by the court to have severe consequences to the respondent does not in itself render the order punitive if the order is also deemed a "needed public precaution." All-State Industries of North Carolina, Inc. v. FTC, 423 F.2d 423, 425 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 828 (1970).

B. Objections to Part II of the ALJ's Order

Part II of the ALJ's order requires respondent to cease representing that Listerine or any other mouthwash product is effective for colds. Respondent objects to the inclusion of other mouthwashes on the ground that the complaint challenges solely the efficacy of Listerine.

Respondent has spent a considerable sum advertising Listerine as a cold remedy for decades. Presumably, it found this representation to be profitable. Respondent thus has an incentive to formulate a new mouthwash which it could advertise as a cold remedy. In view of our conclusion that the act of gargling does not deliver a mouthwash to the critical areas of the body, we question whether any mouthwash would be effective for colds or sore throats. Thus, by limiting the order to Listerine we would set the stage for a replay of the instant proceeding, the only difference being the name of the mouthwash. To avert this prospect we must, in the exercise of our fencing-in authority, include all mouthwashes within the coverage of Part II of the order. See FTC v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 394-95 (1965).

Of course, if respondent were to develop a mouthwash which was effective for colds or sore throats, it could petition to modify the order, as provided by Section 3.72 of the Commission's rules.

[32] See also Bigelow v. Virginia, 95 S. Ct. 2222, 2235 (1975) where the Court again noted the distinction between advertising related to activities the state may legitimately regulate (including fraudulent or deceptive advertising (2235-36)) and advertising not so related.

APPENDIX

The ALJ determined that the following exhibits do not support respondent's efficacy claims. After a thorough review of each exhibit, we concur in the ALJ's conclusion that they lack probative value, but as explained below, in some instances we have a different reason for finding that a particular exhibit has no value.

1. RX 40-43: We agree with IDF 134-142 (the last citation to Dr. Knight's testimony in IDF 142 should be "Knight 1982").

2. RX 44: We agree with IDF 198.

3. RX 46: As described in IDF 145, the procedures used in the tests discussed in RX 46 render those tests useless in this proceeding.

4. RX 47: This is a report of a test in which the drug was administered to test rabbits. In addition to the reasons advanced by the ALJ for according little value to this test (IDF 174-176) we emphasize the following:

Dr. Carson stated that studies in animals are simply preliminary studies and that clinical tests are necessary to draw conclusions about the effect of a drug in man (Tr. 3576). Moreover, the probative value of the test is further reduced by the dissimilarity between the method by which the drug was administered to the rabbits and the method by which Listerine is administered to humans. Furthermore, even assuming arguendo that this test demonstrated that ingredients of Listerine can have a decongestant effect, Dr. Carson did not satisfactorily establish that an effective dose of these ingredients would reach the critical areas of the respiratory tract (Tr. 3572-73).

5. RX 48: The systemic administration of the drug renders the test valueless. We note, however, that since we place no value in RX 47, we need not reach the ALJ's conclusion that RX 47 contradicts RX 48. (IDF 178.)

6. RX 50: We agree with IDF 173.

7. RX 53: We agree with IDF 149.

8. RX 55: We agree with IDF 150.

9. RX 56: This was an in vitro test conducted in hamster cheek tissue. Assuming arguendo that hamster cheek tissue closely resembles tissues in the human nasopharynx, this test has little value because, as the ALJ noted, the amount of ingredients retained was not quantified. (IDF 151.)

10. RX 57: See opinion at 15 [pp. 1494-1495 herein].

11. RX 60, 61, 63 and 64: We agree with IDF 153.

12. RX 65-68: We agree with the ALJ that the tests discussed in these exhibits deserve little weight in this proceeding. RX 67, a document to which Dr. Ritchie, the coauthor fully subscribes (Tr. 2404) stated, in essence, that the results of the tests described in RX 65, 66, 67 and 68 are not statistically significant:

> Severe colds are usually those in which the viral stage of about three days duration is succeeded by a more prolonged bacterial stage, believed to be due to the multiplication of the native nasopharyngeal bacteria. Such colds can be prevented by a six-months course of autogenous bacterial vaccines given beforehand, or they can be aborted and rendered innocuous by early antibiotic treatment. The evidence submitted, although strong, does not reach statistical significance.

These tests, therefore, have little probative value. Respondent argues that the above reference to the statistical insignificance of the tests does not encompass so-called "subsequent tests" described in RX 66. However, RX 66 was printed in 1958. RX 67, which was published in 1969 (Tr. 2389), was offered into evidence as a summary of Ritchie's views over the period 1958-1969. Thus, we cannot see how the test discussed in RX 66 could be regarded as a "subsequent" test which Dr. Ritchie somehow failed to consider in making the assessment in RX 67 that "the evidence * * * does not reach statistical significance."

We also accord these tests little weight because the record does not show that the results obtained with a bacteriostatic substance (which purportedly maintains the bacteria population at a reduced level) carry over to a bactericidal substance, particularly since bactericides do not prevent the bacteria from growing back to their previous strength or greater. See IDF 154.

13. RX 69-71: We agree with ALJ at IDF 199-201.

14. RX 73: The ALJ's finding (IDF 205) that the machine did not measure the quantities of any ingredient is sufficient reason to accord this test little weight, and therefore, we need not reach other reasons he offered for finding the exhibit valueless.

15. RX 75: We agree with IDF 207-209. In IDF 208 the ALJ noted the prospect that the panelists may have exercised bias in favor of Listerine. Although the panelists may have been biased, we need not reach this issue because the test has little probative value for the other reasons discussed at IDF 207-209.

16. RX 97: We agree with IDF 168-172.

17. RX 108: In 1935, Dr. Oscar B. Hunter performed tests which he claimed showed that gargling is an adequate mechanism for bathing the crypts of the tonsils with Listerine. See RX 108 p-r, z-z26. However, he also testified that Listerine would not get into all of the crevices of the mouth, RX 108 z-96. We have resolved this apparent inconsistency in his testimony in favor of his assertion that Listerine would not reach all the crevices because this is the view which is consistent with the testimony of experts for both sides in this proceeding, e.g., Seal Tr. 554; McNamara, Tr. 2342.

Clinical Studies of Listerine

Respondent contends that two clinical studies, the St. Barnabas and Reddish studies, demonstrate the efficacy of Listerine for colds and sore throats. After a careful review, we must conclude that the design and execution of these tests heavily biases the results in favor of Listerine, and therefore, the results cannot support respondent's efficacy claim.

1. The St. Barnabas Test

Students in an elementary school and a high school were randomly selected to participate in this study which spanned four years (the high school was dropped at the end of the third year). During the first two years, the participating students were assigned either to the treatment group, which gargled with Listerine twice a day, or to a control group which used no mouthwash at all. (RX 81, Tr. 2789-90.) During the last two years the control group gargled with water colored to resemble Listerine's amber hue, (Baron Tr. 2746-47). Since it did not have Listerine's taste or odor, the ALJ concluded that this amber-colored water was not a true placebo, IDF 87, and that the absence of a true placebo biased the test results in favor of the tested agent, Listerine. We agree with this conclusion. As the ALJ noted:

> People who are given medication for an ailment frequently feel better because they think they should, even though the product has no therapeutic value. There are very few people who are not susceptible to this phenomenon (Seal 562, 566; Proctor 659; Rammelkamp 785). As Dr. Proctor testified, "Even with severe pain you can substitute sugar for morphine and about 30 percent of the people will be relieved of their pain." (Tr. 659.) And as Dr. Rammelkamp explained, "[Y]ou see paralysis even stopped where you just give an injection of salt water." (Tr. 783.) This is known as the placebo effect. The placebo effect is always present when medication is taken (Shirkey 2635). (IDF 81.)

In order to determine whether the product has efficacy, the bias of the placebo effect should be removed. This bias can be neutralized by "blinding" the participants, i.e., dispensing to the control group a placebo which simulates in taste, smell and appearance the product being tested. This practice of blinding the control group through the use of a placebo is a generally-accepted procedure today. (See Knight 2051; Bogarty 3072-73, 3117; Shirkey 2655-56; Jawetz 3698-99, 3838-39; Wehrle 4011; Lasagna 4126, 4131). Use of an adequate placebo becomes even more important where the evaluation of symptoms involves subjective judgments (Wehrle 4038). The record demonstrates that a cold is a self-limiting infection, and evaluation of cold symptoms tends to be quite subjective (Gwaltney 407; Hornick 476, 497, 499; Seal 549).

We are not requiring in this case that the placebo duplicate the taste, smell, texture, color, etc. of the tested product. There may well be degrees of simulation short of duplication which would neutralize the placebo effect.[1] However, the use of caramel-colored water was patently inadequate.

Respondent urges that the absence of a true placebo can be counterbalanced by factors which tend to reduce the impact of the placebo effect, such as conducting the study over a long period of time, permitting the use of concomitant medication, and maintaining the "blindness" of the examining physician—precautions which respondent claims were taken in the St. Barnabas study. Perhaps in some drug studies other factors could compensate for the absence of a placebo but so many uncertainties permeate the St. Barnabas test that we cannot place any reliance in it. For example, it is unclear whether the examiner was properly blinded. We note that blinding the examiner is not merely a device for counterbalancing the absence of a proper placebo; it is essential that a properly administered test avoid bias on the part of the investigator. Whatever bias he may consciously or subconsciously possess can be neutralized by preventing him from knowing which subjects used the purported medication and which received no medication. In this sense, the examiner is "blinded." The ALJ aptly summarized the necessity for properly "blinding" the examiner (at IDF 83):

> Another bias that must be avoided is that of the investigator who is recording the results as narrated to him by the subjects or as observed by him when he conducts his examination. Every investigator has his own biases. It is important that the investigator not know whether the subjects are taking the test agent or are in the control group. Otherwise, he will subconsciously try to give his employer the answers the employer wants (Gwaltney 407; Haggie 1794; Knight 2051; Lamm 2934, 2937; Sadusk 3206; Carson 3589, 3601; Jawetz 3698-3701; Wehrle 3995, 4013-15, 4037-39; Lasagna 4126, 4133-34; CX 162G-I). As Dr. Knight reported to respondent (CX 162G-H):
> > * * * In the absence of double blind controls, however, there is no way to exclude the possibility of some bias. There is a tendency of both patients and experimentalists to see a favorable effect of medication in any experiment.

As respondent's statistical expert testified (Lamm 2934):

> * * * [T]he important thing in this type of study is that your investigator be blind.

And, as one of respondent's expert medical witnesses testified (Sadusk 3228):

[1] Dr. Vernon Knight, a witness for respondent, identified an alternative which may have proved adequate: A new study would have to be of the "double blind" type. This might be arranged by completely avoiding the use of the word "Listerine." Listerine colored another color or conceivably flavored slightly differently as well could be compared with a colored, flavored, 25% alcohol solution. A third group could be given a non-alcoholic, non-germicidal solution of a different color and flavor. CX 162 at 8.

> If the doctor knew [which subject that came to him was a control and which was a test]—and this would indicate that the doctor was dishonest because he would actually ask each person—the experiment, of course, would not be valid.

The ALJ concluded that the examiner, Dr. Benjamin W. Nitzberg, was not properly "blinded" because the test protocol required that the children gargle at 9:00 a.m., and he began examining them at 10 a.m. Although Dr. Nitzberg denied that he knew which children were in the test group (Tr. 2790, 2800) or that he smelled Listerine on the student's breath except on rare occasions (i.e., three or four children in six months, Tr. 2803), the ALJ concluded that Dr. Nitzberg must have detected the odor of Listerine on the students' breath because other witnesses for respondent testified, on the basis of their own experiences with Listerine, that Listerine can be smelled on the breath for 1 1/2 to 2 hours after gargling. IDF 99.

The record offers support for the ALJ's concern. It establishes that Dr. Nitzberg knew that the test was being conducted for Warner-Lambert, that it involved Listerine and that the data would be used to determine the effect on colds of gargling with Listerine daily, Tr. 2829. Thus, if he knew which children used Listerine, he might have biased the results in favor of Listerine. The students gargled at 9:00 a.m. (CX 51D, RX 81D); Dr. Nitzberg arrived at 10:00 a.m. (Tr. 2811, 2826) and left within an hour during the first two years of the study and within one and one-half hours during the last two years (Tr. 2811). Therefore, many students were examined one to two hours after gargling. Two physicians who testified for respondent stated that, on the basis of their own experience with Listerine, it can be detected on the breath for 1 1/2 to 2 hours after gargling. (Sadusk Tr. 3216, 3229-30; Krantz 1879, 1901). See also Carache at 3840. On the other hand, another witness for respondent testified that a laboratory instrument could not detect some ingredients of Listerine in a human subject's nasal cavity twenty minutes after the subject gargled (Tr. 2486, 2505). However, he also testified that the instrument leaked large amounts of the volatile materials (Tr. 2498), and that after the instrument failed to detect the ingredients, they were identified by smell (Tr. 2505). Considering this evidence as a whole, we are led to conclude that by virtue of respondent's own witnesses, it is uncertain whether Dr. Nitzberg was properly "blinded."

Three additional infirmities heighten our concern about the study's probative value. Students were instructed to report to the medical examiner, usually Dr. Nitzberg, at the first sign of a cold. The medical examiner would evaluate and record the overall severity of the cold plus the severity of fourteen cold-related symptoms (only eight during the first two years of the study). The student returned to the examiner each day for the duration of the cold episode, and the physician examined and questioned the student about each symptom, recording the severity of the symptoms on the same sheet that he used the previous day (a rating scale of 0-4 was used during the first two years and 0-7 for the last two). Dr. Nitzberg allotted himself only 1 1/2 to 2 minutes to examine and question each child (Tr. 2820). This procedure detracts from the probative value of the test in three respects. First, by using the same score sheet day after day Dr. Nitzberg would know how he evaluated a child's symptoms the previous day (Tr. 2822-23). As the ALJ found, Dr. Nitzberg's knowledge of what he had done previously would tend to bias his scores, and therefore he would not make an independent judgment each day. IDF 101. Second, given the number of symptoms which Dr. Nitzberg had to evaluate and the fine gradations he had to make in his evaluation, we question whether he spent an adequate amount of time on each subject. In addition to asking each child for historical data on every item on the report form, he would "examine the upper respiratory tract, the eyes, the ears, the nose and the throat, the sinuses by palpitation and the neck for cervical adenopathy" Tr. 2791. During the last two years of the study the examiner checked for six additional symptoms (Tr. 2798-99). On Mondays he often had to fill in the form for Saturday and Sunday. (See also Tr. 2816-2819). Third, even if Dr. Nitzberg had been properly blinded the scores he recorded could have been biased to the extent the scores were based upon the non-blinded child's subjective evaluation. (See Lamm Tr. 2937).

All of the foregoing defects have the cumulative effect of rendering the St. Barnabas study unreliable for evaluating the efficacy of Listerine. In view of this conclusion, we find it unnecessary to consider the parties' disagreement over the meaning of the results.

2. The Reddish Cold Tests

During the winters of 1932 to 1942 respondent conducted tests, mainly using its own employees, to determine whether Listerine has the ability to fight colds. These tests, which respondent claimed established Listerine's efficacy against colds and sore throats, have such grave deficiencies in design and execution that their results are meaningless. Of foremost concern, no placebo was used. (During some winters control groups gargled with a saline solution or tap water. These liquids cannot qualify as adequate placebos.) Moreover, employees were allowed to choose which group they preferred, thereby further biasing the results because those who thought that gargling was an effective method for fighting a cold would most likely join the test group. In addition, the ALJ found that the investigators themselves had predetermined beliefs that Listerine was good for colds. Finally, the investigators were not provided with a uniform definition of a "cold." Common colds last no longer than 10 days, yet illnesses lasting up to 69 days were counted as "colds" in the Reddish study. Even respondent's own expert, Dr. Knight, said that "present opinion would hold that satisfactory evidence for efficacy is no longer provided by these early studies." IDF 124, CX 162G-H.

Respondent does not address these infirmities in the Reddish tests. Instead, it contends that the Commission relied upon these tests in dismissing the 1944 complaint, and therefore the ALJ's finding of deficiencies in the Reddish tests is "an impermissable [sic] relitigation of matters long ago settled." RB 67. This issue is discussed in Section IV herein.

FINAL ORDER

2. Stating in any advertisement the rate of a finance charge unless said rate is expressed as an annual percentage rate, using the term "annual percentage rate," as "finance charge" and "annual percentage rate" are defined in Section 226.2 and as required by Section 226.10(d)(1) of Regulation Z.

3. Failing, in any consumer credit transaction, to compute and disclose accurately the annual percentage rate to the nearest quarter of one percent as prescribed by Sections 226.5(b) and 226.8(b)(2) of Regulation Z.

4. Failing, in any advertisement or consumer credit transaction, to make all disclosures determined in accordance with Sections 226.4 and 226.5 of Regulation Z, in the form, manner and amount prescribed by Sections 226.6, 226.8 and 226.10 of Regulation Z.

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall within sixty

(60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

ORDER GRANTING REQUEST TO FILE REPLY AND GRANTING MOTION FOR LEAVE TO LODGE DOCUMENTS INTO RECORD

Respondent The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company has filed a motion seeking leave to lodge in the record of this case two documents which were not entered during trial and which it claims are of relevance to the proceeding.

As a rule this is not a procedure of which we approve, since the time for presentation of evidence is at trial where it can be challenged by the other side and considered by the administrative law judge. Here, however, it appears that only a small quantity of documentation is involved, the authenticity of the tendered exhibits is not questioned, and their introduction will not impede the orderly progress of this proceeding. While we intimate no view respecting the claims made by the parties as to the significance of these documents, we will allow their lodging upon the record.

Therefore,

It is ordered, That the request of respondent The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., for permission to file a reply to complaint counsel's Opposition to Motion for Leave to Lodge be, and it hereby is, granted.

It is further ordered, That the motion of respondent The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., for leave to lodge certain documents into the record of this case be, and it hereby is, granted.

IN THE MATTER OF

PEACOCK BUICK, INC., ET AL.

ORDER, OPINION ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket 8976. Complaint, July 1, 1974—Final Order, Dec. 19, 1975

Order requiring a Falls Church, Va., new and used car dealer, among other things to cease misrepresenting used vehicles as new; failing to disclose previous use and advertising used as new; misrepresenting terms and conditions of purchase; and failing to disclose specific handling and service charges.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Peacock Buick, Inc., a corporation, and Dr. Norman Bernstein and Michael B. Peacock, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Peacock Buick, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with its principal office and place of business located at 1001 W. Broad St., in the city of Falls Church, Commonwealth of Virginia.

Respondents Dr. Norman Bernstein and Michael B. Peacock are individuals and officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including those hereinafter set forth. Their business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

The respondents cooperate and act together in carrying out the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, and sale to the public of new and used motor vehicles and in the servicing and repair thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, their said motor vehicles to be sold to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, including the Commonwealth of Virginia, and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said motor vehicles in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Also in the course and conduct of their business, respondents have caused, and now cause, customers' notes, contracts, payments, checks, credit reports, title registrations, correspondence and other documents relating to payment of the purchase price for respondents' motor vehicles to be transmitted by various means, including but not limited to, the United States mails, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their motor vehicles, the respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation, and by other means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. Typical and illustrative of the statements and representations in said advertisements, published in August and September of 1970, disseminated as aforesaid, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

> * * * SAVE EVEN MORE NEW '70 OPELS BIG SELECTION AT CLOSE-OUT DISCOUNTS $200-$600 OFF! * * *
> * * * 1970 BUICKS SAVE UP TO $1600 OFF! * * *
> * * * PEACOCK the NUMBER 1 OPEL DEALER IN THE U.S.A * * *

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, the respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the motor vehicles described or referred to in said advertisements are new;
2. Peacock Buick, Inc. sells more Opel motor vehicles than any other Opel dealer in the U.S.A.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The motor vehicles described or referred to in said advertisements, in many instances, are not new. To the contrary, they have been driven substantially in excess of the limited use necessary in moving or road testing a new vehicle prior to its delivery to the ultimate purchaser.

2. At the time of the advertisement, Peacock Buick, Inc. did not sell more Opel motor vehicles than any other dealer and, therefore, was not the Number I Opel Dealer in the U.S.A.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five, hereof, were, and are, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their said motor vehicles, respondents, directly or through their representatives and employees, have engaged in other deceptive acts and practices. Typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive, of such deceptive acts and practices are the following:

1. Respondents represented to customers that driver education motor vehicles used in high schools in the Metropolitan Washington, D.C. Area were new and/or factory official motor vehicles; by such representations, respondents misled and deceived purchasers as to the actual prior use of said driver-education motor vehicles.

2. Respondents represented to customers that preferred financial institutions have rejected their applications for credit. In many instances, the preferred financial institutions had not rejected customers' applications for credit, and in some instances, had no record of said applications being offered.

3. Respondents represented to customers that area banks would not accept customers' applications for credit unless credit life or credit accident and health insurance was first obtained. In most instances, area banks do not require that customers obtain credit life or credit accident and health insurance as a prerequisite for accepting the customers' applications for credit.

Therefore, respondents' statements and representations, and their failure to reveal in their advertisements and during their sales presentations, the material facts as to the nature and extent of such previous use of said motor vehicles, are unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their aforesaid business, respondents have engaged in the following acts and practices in connection with the sale of their said motor vehicles:

1. A $25 dealer handling and service charge is added to the price of respondents' used motor vehicles; the first indication that such a charge is being made, in many instances, occurs at the time the buyer receives a copy of the sales invoice and the conditional sales contract. The purchaser, in many said instances, believes that the motor vehicle will be delivered in satisfactory condition and appearance without the imposition of additional charges. The dealer handling and service charge becomes an undisclosed cost that should have been made known prior to the consummation of the sale.

2. Respondents have repaired or repainted, or have caused to be repaired or repainted, damaged cars; said repairs or repainting hide damage that may adversely affect a vehicle's performance and life expectancy. Respondents have failed to disclose to prospective purchasers and purchasers of respondents' motor vehicles that said damage has been hidden by repairs or repainting.

Therefore, respondents' failure to disclose such material facts, prior to the time of sale, was, and is, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and are now, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale, service and repair of new and used motor vehicles of the same general kind and nature as that sold, serviced and repaired by respondents.

PAR. 10. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and the failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' motor vehicles and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief. Respondents' aforesaid acts and practices unfairly cause the purchasing public to assume debts and obligations and to make payments of money which they might otherwise not have incurred.

PAR. 11. The acts and practices of the respondents, as herein alleged, were, and are, all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY JOSEPH P. DUFRESNE, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

JULY 8, 1975

Appearances

For the Commission: Jerry W. Boykin, Michael E. K. Mpras, Michael Dershowitz and Frank H. Addonizio.

For the respondents: Basil J. Mezines and Gerard E. Mitchell, Stein, Mitchell & Mezines, Wash., D.C.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

On July 1, 1974, the Commission issued a complaint charging the respondents, Peacock Buick, Inc. (Peacock), a corporation, and Dr. Norman Bernstein and Michael B. Peacock, individually and as officers of the corporation with having violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45).

The charges, in summary, were that the respondents had advertised or represented unfairly, falsely, misleadingly and deceptively:

(1) That "not new" cars were new;

(2) in that they had failed to disclose material facts regarding used cars they advertised and sold;

(3) that Peacock was the "Number 1" Opel dealer in the USA when it was not;

(4) that, contrary to fact, autos used in high school driver education training were new or factory official motor vehicles;

(5) that preferred financial institutions had rejected auto purchasers' applications for credit when they had not;

(6) that area banks would not accept auto purchasers' applications for credit unless credit life or credit accident and health insurance was obtained but that banks had no such requirement;

(7) that without a proper disclosure having been made, a $25 handling or service charge was and is added to the amount the customer agreed to pay for the vehicle purchased; and

(8) that vehicles had been repaired or repainted (a) to hide damage that might affect their performance and life expectancy, and (b) to influence the buyers' decision to make the purchase without disclosing that repairs had been made and repainting done.

On Nov. 5, 1974, respondents' motion for a more definite statement was denied and an answer dated December 1974, was filed. In the answer, respondents admitted that they are in commerce in competition with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale, servicing, and repair of new and used motor vehicles (Peacock Answer, p. 5, par. 9).

Respondents denied engaging in the practices charged to be violative of Section 5 of the F.T.C. Act.

Pursuant to Rule 3.31, counsel supporting the complaint filed, on Dec. 9, 1974, a request for admissions. Respondents filed an answer to the request on Dec. 19, 1974. By way of discovery, respondents moved, pursuant to the Commission's rules, for a subpoena calling for the production of all writings received by the Federal Trade Commission in response to questionnaires sent by representatives of the Commission to customers of the respondents. The request sought all exculpatory statements, written or oral, which were given by customers of the respondents to the Federal Trade Commission in response to its questionnaire. I denied the request by order dated Jan. 6, 1975, and respondents sought Commission review of that order pursuant to Commission Rule 3.23. An "Order Denying Application for Review of Ruling" was entered on Jan. 20, 1975.

The adjudicative hearings were held in Washington, D.C., from Mar. 17 thru 20, 1975. The record was closed for the reception of evidence on Apr. 15, 1975, after additional unsuccessful efforts were made, at my suggestion, to reach an agreed upon settlement and counsel decided they would not request oral argument on the terms of the order which was proposed when the complaint issued (Tr. 695).

Proposed findings, conclusions and orders together with briefs supporting their proposals were filed by counsel for both sides on May 15, 1975. Replies by each were filed on May 30, 1975.

The findings of fact made herein are based on a review of the allegations made in the complaint, respondents' answers, stipulations entered by counsel, written admissions by respondents, the evidentiary record and upon a reading of the transcript record of the testimony and consideration of the demeanor of the witnesses at the hearings. In addition, the proposed findings of fact, conclusions and orders, together with reasons and briefs in support thereof filed by both sides have been given careful consideration. To the extent not adopted by this decision in the form proposed or in substance, they are rejected as not supported by the record or as immaterial.

For the convenience of the Commission and other readers of this initial decision, the findings of fact include references to supporting evidentiary items in the record. Such references are intended to serve as guides to the testimony, evidence and exhibits supporting the findings of fact. They do not necessarily represent complete summaries of the evidence considered in arriving at such findings. The following abbreviations have been used for this purpose:

FINDINGS OF FACT

RESPONDENTS' IDENTITIES

Peacock Buick, Inc. is a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, engaged in the sale of Buick and Opel automobiles. Its principal office and place of business is located at 8590 Leesburg Pike, McLean, Va. (Admitted, Peacock Answer, p. 1).

Dr. Norman Bernstein and Mr. Michael B. Peacock, Dr. Bernstein's son (Bernstein, Tr. 687), are officers of the corporate respondent, i.e., president and vice-president, respectively (Peacock, Tr. 52; RPF p. 6, par. 9). Dr. Bernstein and Mr. Peacock formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent (Admitted as to Dr. Bernstein, Peacock Answer, p. 2; as to Mr. Peacock, Peacock Admissions Nos. 30 and 32; Criste, Tr. 47-48; Gould, Tr. 303; Bernstein, Tr. 688).

RESPONDENTS' BUSINESS

Respondents are now, and for approximately thirteen years have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale and sale to the public of new and used motor vehicles and in their servicing and repair (Admitted, Peacock Answer, p. 2; RPF p. 5, par. 6).

Respondents sell approximately 2,000 new cars and 400 to 500 used cars each year. Generally the company retails the best of these or about 20 percent of the used cars it takes in trade for new cars. The balance are sold at wholesale (Bernstein, Tr. 168).

Respondents sell the motor vehicles from their place of business in McLean, Va., to purchasers located in various States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Virginia. They maintain and at all times relevant hereto have maintained a substantial course of trade in the motor vehicles they sell and repair, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act (Admitted, Answer, p. 2). Also in the course and conduct of their business, respondents have caused, and continue to cause, customers' notes, contracts, payments, checks, credit reports, title registrations, correspondence and other documents relating to payment of the purchase price of respondents' motor vehicles to be transmitted by various means, including but not limited to, the United States mails, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act (Admitted, Answer, p. 2).

RESPONDENTS' ADVERTISING AND REPRESENTATIONS

In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their motor vehicles, the respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation, and by other means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act (Admitted, Answer, p. 2).

1. New and Used Cars

Typical and illustrative of statements and representations in Peacock's advertisements in 1970 and 1971 are the following:

> * * * SAVE EVEN MORE NEW '70 OPELS BIG SELECTIONS AT CLOSE-OUT DISCOUNTS $200-$600 OFF! * * * (CXs 11-13).

> * * * 1970 BUICKS SAVE UP TO $1600 OFF! * * * (CX 4)

> * * * PEACOCK THE NUMBER 1 OPEL DEALER IN THE USA * * * (CX 17-18)

Respondents did not falsely represent used cars to be new when they were sold to retail purchasers (Harris, Tr. 196-198; Dace, Tr. 649). One witness, a college graduate with a master's degree, testified to the contrary; but documentary evidence of the transaction, signed by her, clearly shows that the auto was used (Schmidt, Tr. 249-250; RXs 35, 36). In purchasing an automobile, customers were not pressured to hurry through the transaction (Schmidt, Tr. 260).

If the vehicle was not new, e.g., a company official car, demonstrator, or if it was a used vehicle such as a trade-in, it was and is respondents' policy that such fact would be disclosed (Peacock, Tr. 106; Garrison, Tr. 289; Montgomery, Tr. 326; Graber, Tr. 362; McKay, Tr. 382).

The purchaser of a car that was not "new" invariably signed documents both at the time the order was placed and prior to taking delivery, which reflected that the vehicle had been used (RX 35 and 36); however, material facts as to the nature of the prior use were not always disclosed, e.g., car rental not disclosed (Montgomery, Tr. 325; Funkhauser, Tr. 412).

Respondents did not represent to customers that driver education motor vehicles used in high schools in the Metropolitan Washington, D.C. Area were new or factory official motor vehicles; however, they did not always disclose to customers that some of the vehicles they sold had been used in a driver education program (Huntley, Tr. 335; Bernstein, Tr. 181; Meador, Tr. 392). On occasion such a disclosure was made (Chandley, Tr. 349; Splendorio, Tr. 418). Records of the sales of such vehicles reflect that they were sold as "used" automobiles (CX 27A, 27B; RX 35, RX 36; CX 83A; CX 38D; CX 100).

If an unused portion of a manufacturer's warranty remained, it was provided to the buyer (Huntley, Tr. 333; Graber, Tr. 362).

2. Discounts

Respondents' representations in advertisements, such as those described above, that the motor vehicles offered were new and that discounts of from $200 to $1600 off the list price were available, were true (Answer, p. 3; Peacock, Tr. 59; Gould, Tr. 305; Bernstein, Tr. 154, 692; Dace, Tr. 649).

3. No. 1 Opel Dealer

The challenged representation by Peacock "* * * Number I Opel Dealer in the USA" (Complaint, par. 6, p. 2) had a reasonable basis in fact. Amongst the top twenty dealers, Peacock sold the largest number of Opels in the U.S. in July 1970 (RX 14) and in the first quarter of 1971 (Peacock, Tr. 93; CX 86; RXs 32 and 33). The representation was discontinued when respondents learned that they no longer were No. I (Peacock, Tr. 135; Bernstein, Tr. 675, 676). Respondents have not advertised their standing in Opel sales for approximately four years because they are no longer among the top ten Opel dealers (Bernstein, Tr. 676).

4. Financing of Autos

Respondents did not and do not make false representations to customers regarding acceptance or rejection of the customers' applications for credit by lending institutions. They did and do make a judgment as to which lending institutions probably would extend credit (Peacock, Tr. 112) and apprise customers as to the identity of those institutions to whom formal applications for credit are submitted and of the result (Spear, Tr. 520-521; RX 11).

They also, to avoid establishment of a record that a formal application by the individual had been rejected, made and make informal inquiries of lending institutions without disclosing the potential borrower's identity in order to ascertain the lender's attitude toward a loan to the individual on the basis of general information as to his or her credit worthiness (Spear, Tr. 514-516).

Respondents did and do attempt to arrange customers' financing of the motor vehicles sold but did not and do not disclose the material fact to the customers that it is in Peacock's financial interest to arrange for the financing with lending institutions (Peacock, Tr. 111; Mathis, Tr. 315).

There is inadequate evidence in the record to establish what constitutes a "preferred" financial institution (Complaint, par. 7, p. 2). One witness who said that she preferred to finance with General Motors Acceptance Corporation (GMAC) testified a salesman for an auto dealership in Baltimore, Md., with which she cancelled her order, had told her GMAC had approved her credit application (Schmidt, Tr. 269). The manager of the GMAC office serving Peacock Buick, however, testified he had no written record of an application on file (Latta, Tr. 286-287; CX 22L). Respondents' credit manager testified that the witness was a marginal credit risk due to her scant credit experience and newness to the Metropolitan Washington, D.C. Area and to her job and that he ascertained by telephone call that submittal of an application for credit to GMAC for a person with that credit background would be a useless act (Spear, Tr. 519, 523-524).

5. Credit Accident, Health and Life Insurance

Respondents' salesmen did represent orally that area banks would not accept customers' applications for credit unless credit life or credit accident and health insurance were first obtained (Lanpher, Tr. 366-367); however, the standard installment sales contract issued to each customer reflected and reflects that credit life or credit accident and health insurance was and is optional (RX 37; Spear, Tr. 516; Bernstein, Tr. 683).

Respondents did attempt to sell credit life, accident and health insurance to customers who financed their motor vehicles through Peacock (Peacock, Tr. 70, 109; Mathis, Tr. 314; Graber, Tr. 360). They had customers sign a form acknowledging that it was optional (Peacock, Tr. 70, CX 80E). Respondents did not and do not disclose to auto buyers the material fact that it was or is in Peacock's financial interest to include the sale of such insurance in the financing arrangements made with lending institutions (Peacock, Tr. 111).

6. Handling and Service Charge

Respondents did not disclose the material fact to customers at the time they contracted to purchase the motor vehicle that there would be a handling and service charge (usually $25) added to the purchase price of used motor vehicles (Peacock Admissions 50 and 51). The $25 or lesser charge was and is added to the sales invoice (CX 24A) and conditional sales contract which the customer receives when he arrives at respondents' place of business to take delivery of the motor vehicle (Peacock Admission 51; Peacock, Tr. 74; Lanpher, Tr. 365; Glasser, Tr. 668).

Peacock salesmen and representatives do not orally disclose the dealer handling and service charge, usually $25, during the sales negotiations. It is only after the consummation of the transaction, when delivery is taken and various documents received that written notice of such charge is given to purchasers. Even at that point, the charge is not pointed out and if by chance a purchaser does notice it, there is little opportunity to either eliminate it or to reconsider the purchase (CCPF, 52-53).

7. Damaged and Repaired Autos

Respondents have not repaired or repainted damaged cars which repairs and repainting "* * * hide damage that may affect a vehicle's performance and life expectancy" (complaint, par. 8 p. 2, first sentence.). Cars requiring such extensive repairs are not sold at retail by respondents (Peacock, Tr. 67; Bernstein, Tr. 161, 162, 168, 170, 172, 684-686).

Although several witnesses testified they had mechanical difficulties with their cars (Meador, Tr. 395; Splendorio, Tr. 421), the connection between those difficulties and the prior use of the car and whether the damage affected its performance and life expectancy was not convincingly established.

Patrick Goss, complaint counsel's expert witness, testified that the cars purchased by four customers suffered damage which affected their life expectancy and performance (Goss, Tr. 438, 442-445). However, Mr. Goss himself had no opportunity to observe the condition of these cars either before or after repairs were made (RPF, p. 30). Mr. Goss' conclusion that the repairs were improperly done was based on his assumption that there were obvious indications that repairs had been done (Goss, Tr. 466). According to Mr. Goss himself, if repair work is not visible and it has been done by a good repair shop, such work should not affect a car's life expectancy or performance (Goss, Tr. 474) (RPF, pp. 30-31). Men who supervised the repairs and saw the vehicles testified that the cars had suffered superficial damage only and that the repairing and repainting was done to new car standards (Lamb, Tr. 580-588; Bannister, Tr. 604-614).

Respondents have not disclosed and do not disclose the material fact to prospective purchasers or actual purchasers that damage has been repaired or that repainting has been done (Garrison, Tr. 294; Chandley, Tr. 349; Meador, Tr. 392-393; Bernstein, Tr. 158, 161, 685, 686). In the instances regarding which evidence was adduced, the damage was not convincingly shown to be so severe that it probably would adversely affect the vehicle's performance and life expectancy even though the repair invoice for the most severe damage indicated that it cost more than $350 to repair. The face amounts on the invoices related to the repair of such vehicles, varied from a low of $19.20 (RX 38) to a high of $368.50 (RX 42) with most of them costing less than $150 (RXs 39-41, 44-46).

VIOLATIONS OF SECTION 5 OF THE F.T.C. ACT

The use by the respondents' salesmen-employees of the unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices regarding the need for credit life or accident and health insurance before credit could be obtained and the failure to disclose material facts in timely fashion, e.g., the $25 or less handling and service charge, as aforesaid, has had and now has the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public (1) into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete, and (2) into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' motor vehicles and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

Respondents failed to disclose the material facts adequately in some instances or at all in other instances, that:

(1) It was and is in Peacock's financial interest to arrange for the financing of purchasers' automobiles.

(2) It was and is in Peacock's financial interest to include the sale of credit life, accident and health insurance to purchasers who finance their motor vehicles through Peacock.

(3) A handling or service charge, usually $25, would be added to the purchase price of used motor vehicles.

(4) Damaged automobiles have been repaired and repainted prior to sale to the purchaser.

Respondents' aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices regarding the need for credit life or accident and health insurance before credit could be obtained and the failure to disclose material facts as indicated, unfairly cause the purchasing public to assume debts and obligations and to make payments of money which they might otherwise not have incurred (CCPF, pp. 53-54).

Respondents at all times pertinent hereto have been, and are now, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale, servicing and repair of new and used motor vehicles of the same general kind and nature as are sold, serviced and repaired by respondents (Admitted, Answer p. 5). As a result, the aforesaid activities unfairly deprive respondents' competitors of trade they might have enjoyed or enjoy but for respondents' violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The competitor is prejudiced when business that would have come to him is diverted to another whose methods are less scrupulous in the conduct of his business. Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., et al., 291 U.S. 67, 78 (1934).

DISCUSSION

COMMISSION JURISDICTION

Respondents have at all times relevant hereto been engaged in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Sections 4 and 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. There is ample evidence in the admissions by the respondents in the record that they advertised and otherwise engaged in commerce as that term is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INDIVIDUAL ACCOUNTABILITY OF DR. BERNSTEIN AND MR. PEACOCK

In appropriate circumstances the individual respondents, Dr. Norman Bernstein and Mr. Michael B. Peacock, could be held individually responsible and subject to a cease and desist order for the improper corporate acts and practices of the corporate respondent Peacock Buick, Inc. The Commission's authority in this respect is clear. It is well settled that the Commission may properly name officers, directors, and sole stockholders of corporate respondents in their official as well as their individual capacities in order to prevent the evasion of F.T.C. orders. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, et al., 86 F.2d 692 (2d Cir. 1936) reversed on other grounds, 302 U.S. 112, 120 (1937); Rayex Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 317 F.2d 290, 295 (2d Cir. 1963); Abel Allan Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission, 244 F.2d 584, 585 (9th Cir. 1957); Standard Distributors, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 211 F.2d 7, 14-15 (2d Cir. 1954) (CCPF, p. 8). As the individuals ultimately responsible for every aspect of the firm's operations, both Dr. Bernstein and Mr. Peacock are accountable for the illegal acts and practices found herein. In John A. Guziak v. Federal Trade Commission, 361 F.2d 700, 704 (8th Cir. 1966), the court held that an individual who was the motivating and controlling force behind the corporation was responsible for its activities and that he should be enjoined from engaging in similar activities in the future.

Since Peacock Buick is a relatively small, family owned and operated business and corrective action (Bernstein, Tr. 148-149, 153-154, 174-177) was taken when purchasers' complaints were called to their attention, I do not believe subjecting them to a Federal Trade Commission order to cease and desist as individuals or in their capacity as corporate officials is called for in this case. To subject them to such an order would be a good example of "administrative over-kill." I do not wish to create any such example in this case or to stigmatize them on the basis of the evidentiary record in this matter. Their testimony at the hearings was straightforward, not evasive and not contrary to fact. See Pati-Port, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 313 F.2d 103, 104 (4th Cir. 1963).

ORAL MISREPRESENTATIONS

Oral misrepresentations made by a respondent's agents or representatives, i.e., the auto salesmen here, have long been held to be in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. International Art Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 109 F.2d 393 (1940); Perma-Maid Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 121 F.2d 282 (1941); Parke, Austin & Lipscomb, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F.2d 437 (1944); Consumers Home Equipment Co., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 164 F.2d 972 (1947); National Trade Publications Service, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 300 F.2d 790 (1962) (CCPF, p. 41).

FAILURE TO DISCLOSE MATERIAL FACTS

It is an unfair, false, misleading and deceptive act and practice to fail to disclose, prior to the time of sale, relevant and material facts where such information might be important to the prospective customer in making his choice as to whether to make a purchase. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., et al., 380 U.S. 374 (1965); Spiegel, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 494 F.2d 59, 62 (7th Cir. 1974). See also, In the Matter of Main Line Lumber and Millwork Company, et al., 56 F.T.C. 17 (1959), where the Commission prohibited respondent from stating prices for certain appliances, when there were, in fact, extra costs that purchasers would be required to pay separately and at a later date (CCPF, p. 52).

Both Congress and the courts have clearly established a policy calling for disclosure of information so that consumers can be better informed and compare the costs of competing products (e.g., Fair Packaging and Labeling Act, 80 Stat. 1296, 15 U.S.C. §1451, et seq., Truth in Lending Act, Pub. Law 90-321, 15 U.S.C. §1601, et seq., Leon A. Tashof v. Federal Trade Commission, 437 F.2d 707 (D.C. Cir. 1970); Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 379 F.2d 666 (7th Cir. 1967); Spiegel, Inc., supra) (CCPF, p. 52).

The Commission has the authority to require disclosure of material facts when a respondent advertises misleadingly due to a failure to reveal facts material in the light of the representations made. All-State Industries of North Carolina, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 423 F.2d 423 (4th Cir. 1970); Joseph L. Portwood Co., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 418 F.2d 419, 424 (10th Cir. 1969); Leon A. Tashof v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, n. 37 (D.C. Cir. 1970); Ward Laboratories, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 276 F.2d 952, 954 (2d Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 827.

There is ample precedent for the proposition that the Commission may require affirmative disclosures where necessary to prevent deception. Thus, the failure to disclose material facts, which if known to prospective purchasers would influence their decision as to whether to purchase, is an unfair trade practice in violation of Section 5. Haskelite Mfg. Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 127 F.2d 765 (7th Cir. 1942); L. Heller & Son, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F.2d 954 (7th Cir. 1951); Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., et al., supra; The J. B. Williams Company, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967); S.S.S. Company, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 416 F.2d 226, 231 (6th Cir., 1969). The Commission may utilize its accumulated expertise to determine what facts are material to consumers and whether such information has been withheld. Pfizer Inc., F.T.C. Dkt. 8819, 81 F.T.C. 23 (1972). In my view, purchasers should be specifically informed when a seller of an auto gains financially, i.e., receives a "kickback," when he arranges for the financing of the auto or sells credit health, life or accident insurance.

It is not a violation of a respondent's First Amendment rights to require affirmative disclosure of material facts. They are free to advertise; but they are prohibited from making false and misleading statements—e.g., failing to disclose material facts—which they have no constitutional right to disseminate. The Regina Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 322 F.2d 765, 770 (3d Cir. 1963); S.S.S. Company, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.

CONCLUSIONS

The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this proceeding and over the respondents.

The respondents at all times relevant hereto have been engaged in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Sections 4 and 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The complaint in this matter sets forth a cause of action which is in the public interest to pursue.

The acts and practices of the respondent as found above under the caption "Violations of Section 5 of the F.T.C. Act" (pp. 11-13) were, and are, all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair or deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce, and unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

THE REMEDY

The Commission is vested with broad discretion in determining the type of order necessary to insure discontinuance of the unlawful practices found and may require affirmative disclosure of any material facts, which if known to the prospective customer, might affect his choice of whether to do business with a respondent. The Commission is not limited to the exact nature of the specific violations in devising suitable order provisions to protect the public interest. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., et al., 380 U.S. 374, 392 (1965); Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., et al., 352 U.S. 419, 428-430 (1957); Federal Trade Commission v. Rubberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 473 (1952).

The Commission's broad discretion only is limited by the requirement that the remedy must be reasonably related to the unlawful practices found. Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608, 613 (1946); Niresk Industries, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 278 F.2d 337 (7th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 883.

The Commission may order both affirmative acts and affirmative disclosures by respondent in order to bring an end to and to prevent a recurrence of illegal acts and practices. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive, supra; American Cyanamid Company v. Federal Trade Commission 363 F.2d 757 (6th Cir. 1966), 401 F.2d 574 (6th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 920 (1969).

The central purpose of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act is to abolish the rule of caveat emptor, i.e., let the buyer beware, which for a great many years had governed business transactions between vendors and purchasers. Federal Trade Commission v. Sterling Drug, Inc., et al., 317 F.2d 669, 674 (2d Cir. 1963).

The Commission's duty, as eloquently expressed by Judge Learned Hand, is to "discover and make explicit those unexpressed standards of fair dealing which the conscience of the community may progressively develop." Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 86 F.2d 692, 696 (2d Cir. 1936), reversed on other grounds, 302 U.S. 112 (1937).

It is well established that the Commission's authority in issuing cease and desist orders is not limited to issuing prohibitory injunctions, but extends to orders in the nature of mandatory injunctions compelling the performance of specific acts. Several examples of such orders upheld by the courts are those requiring affirmative disclosures in advertising. The J. B. Williams Co., Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967); requiring licensing of a patent used illegally, American Cyanamid Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; and requiring divestiture in antitrust cases grounded solely upon Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act rather than Section 7 of the Clayton Act; L. G. Balfour Co., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 442 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. 1971); Golden Grain Macaroni Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 472 F.2d 882 (9th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 467 (1973), (CCPF, p. 55).

An indication of the scope of the Commission's authority in fashioning appropriate orders is found in All-State Industries of North Carolina, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 423 F.2d 423 (4th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 828 (1970). There, the Court of Appeals upheld a Commission order requiring petitioners to disclose orally prior to sale, and in writing on any instrument of indebtedness, that such instrument, at the company's option and without notice, could be assigned to a finance company against whom purchasers' claims or defenses might not be available. And, in Arthur Murray Studio of Washington, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 458 F.2d 622 (5th Cir. 1972), the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a Commission order requiring petitioners to post in a prominent place in each place of business a copy of the cease and desist order, with the notice that any customer or prospective customer may receive a copy on request (CCPF, pp. 55-56).

THE ORDER HERE

In fashioning the order in this proceeding, which varies from the "Notice of Order"* contained in the complaint, I have taken into account (1) the violations of law which the record establishes, consisting of conduct which the Commission has declared over the years to be unlawful, (2) the fact that this order must be designed to protect the public which includes the unthinking, the inadequately educated and the credulous (see Charles of the Ritz Dist. Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 143 F.2d 676, 679 (2d Cir. 1944)), and (3) subject to the reasonable-relationship-of-remedy-to-unlawful-practices-found precept adverted to above, the fact that "* * * once the Government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of law, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor." United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours [Co., et al., 366 U.S. 316, 334 (1961).

The order now calls for disclosure of material facts which might influence a purchaser's decision to buy and also calls for a report to the Commission only when the corporate respondent leaves or enters the field of auto retailing. These provisions have been added to the "Notice Order" attached to the complaint as issued.

In connection with the differences between the "Notice Order" of the complaint and the order in this initial decision, the last paragraph of the Notice (p. 7) reads, in pertinent part, as follows:

> If however, the Commission should conclude from record facts developed in any adjudicative proceedings in this matter that the proposed order provisions as to Peacock Buick, Inc., a corporation, and Dr. Norman Bernstein and Michael B. Peacock, individually and as officers of said corporation might be inadequate to fully protect the consuming public, or to protect competitive conditions within the motor vehicle retailing industry, the Commission may order such other relief as it finds necessary or appropriate.

I believe some other relief to be appropriate. To this end, provisions calling for disclosure of the nature of known prior use were extended. Also, (1) the fact that repairs costing more than $50 have been made to cars offered for sale, and (2) the fact that it is in Peacock's financial interest to arrange financing, and credit life, health and accident insurance are to be affirmatively disclosed. The "Notice Order" provision (p. 11, par. (e)) applicable to Dr. Bernstein and Mr. Peacock in their corporate and individual capacities has been deleted.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Peacock Buick, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns and its officers, agents, representatives and employees directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution, service and repair of new and used motor vehicles, or any other products or services, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

(b) That respondent shall deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel engaged in the offering for sale, or sale, of any motor vehicle, and in the consummation of any extension of consumer credit or in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising, and that respondent secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person; and

(c) That respondent shall notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

BY DIXON, Commissioner:

Complaint in this matter was issued July 1, 1974, charging respondents Peacock Buick, Dr. Norman Bernstein, and Michael B. Peacock with unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45) in connection with the sale of new and used automobiles. Among the charges were that respondents (1) advertised used cars as new; (2) represented to customers that automobiles previously used for driver education were in fact new or had been used only by factory officials; (3) misrepresented that credit life insurance was required in order to obtain automobile financing; (4) misrepresented that area lending institutions had rejected applications for credit when such was not the case; (5) failed to disclose to prospective purchasers that automobiles had been materially damaged and repaired prior to purchase; (6) failed to disclose the existence of a $25 service charge on the purchase of used cars when quoting the price of those cars; and (7) represented that Peacock Buick was the "No. 1 Opel Dealer in the United States" when such was not the case.

Hearings were held before an administrative law judge (ALJ) who prepared an initial decision which dismissed certain counts and sustained others including, in respondents' view, some which were not in the complaint to begin with. The ALJ recommended an order diverging in significant respects from the notice order originally proposed by the Commission. As the law judge himself foresaw (Tr. 693-94), his solomonic approach has placated neither side, both of whom have filed appeals challenging each conclusion of the initial decision which favors the other. While it is tempting to conclude that a result which displeases two antagonists so thoroughly must have much to commend it, our own review of the record reveals the need for substantial modification of the ALJ's conclusions. Slavish, unreasoned adherence to a notice order is not a virtue, and we applaud, as a general matter, the law judge's independent analysis of the appropriate relief. We have concluded, however, that certain of his recommendations are inappropriate in light of the facts before us. In addition, the Commission would have benefited from a more extensive analysis by the judge of the record evidence which he considered in drawing his conclusions. Our own review and disposition of contested issues follows:

I. ADVERTISING USED CARS AS NEW

The complaint charged that respondents had employed media advertising which represented that new cars were for sale at various discounts, when in fact the cars to which those advertisements referred were in some cases used. Illustrative of the challenged advertisements were: 1970 Opels; Close-Out Sale; $200-$600 Off! (CX 7)[1] Save Even More! New '70 Opels At Final Close-Out; Discounts! $200-$600 Off (CX 13) 1970 Buicks Save Up to $1600 Off! (CX 4; I.D. p. 6[p. 1539, herein])

Both sides recognize that the above advertisements, run during the latter part of 1970, should be construed to offer new cars at the indicated discounts. This is self-evident with respect to advertisements that refer explicitly to "new" cars. With respect to those that advertised merely "1970" cars, at a time when 1971 model year cars had come on the market, the reasonable expectation of many consumers would be that 1970 cars not advertised as "used" were in fact "new"[2] and thus an advertisement for late model used cars should include an affirmative designation that they are used.

The record reflects some confusion on the part of counsel as to what proof was necessary to prove or disprove the complaint allegations. In our view, an advertisement such as "1970 Opels; $200-$600 Off" represents that the consumer upon going to the dealer will find there a significant number of new, 1970 Opels, including some at discounts of

[2] The complaint defined a car as no longer being new once it has been "used in any manner other than the limited use necessary in moving or road testing a new vehicle prior to delivery of such vehicle to the customer."

$600. The fact that the dealer may also have available late model used cars at similar discounts from new list price[3] does not render the advertising false, assuming no effort is made to convince the consumer upon arrival that the late model used cars are in fact the new cars promised in the advertisement, and assuming that the new cars are, in fact, not being used merely as "bait" to induce the purchase of a larger number of more plentiful or attractive used cars.

At trial, respondent Peacock testified that the advertisements challenged referred solely to new cars (Tr. 59), and respondent Bernstein averred that when those advertisements were run respondents did have available for sale new cars at the indicated discounts (Tr. 680-82).

Complaint counsel relied entirely for their case upon a response to an order to file a Special Report, served upon respondents by the Commission. Question 13 of that report read:

> State for each year whether your firm utilized price reduction figures in the advertising of its automobiles; for example, advertising automobiles from $200 to $2000 Off. If so, were current model used cars offered for sale under such advertisements? If so, did the larger of the two price reduction figures, i.e., $2000 Off, refer to current model used cars? (CX 1(c))

The response of Peacock Buick, filed by its secretary under oath was:

> Yes, our firm has used price reduction figures in our advertising of automobiles, and current model used cars were offered for sale at these times, and the larger of the price reduction figures did refer to current model used cars. (CX 2)

Obviously, this response should give pause. Clearly it is false and misleading to offer "1970 Opels, $200-$600 Off" or "Buicks Up to $1600 Off" when, in fact, those Opels at $600 off or those Buicks at $1600 off are not new. As noted before, however, individual respondents in sworn testimony asserted that in fact new cars were available for sale at the higher advertised discounts, and the law judge believed them.

If it were respondents' burden to show by a preponderance of the evidence that they did not advertise falsely, their response to the 6(b) questionnaire might well lead us to conclude they had failed to carry it. Here, however, it was complaint counsel's burden to prove the falsity of specific challenged claims. In the face of a clear conflict in testimony, we believe it was incumbent upon counsel to go further in their proof than mere reliance on the 6(b) questionnaire, which did not after all refer by its terms to the particular claims challenged in the complaint. Some further evidence as to whether or not respondents did, in fact, have new cars available at the higher advertised discounts would have been germane. So would be evidence to indicate that customers drawn by the new car ads to the Peacock lots were immediately shown those used cars to which the ads allegedly referred. The record, however, is barren of evidence which would help to resolve the conflict between testimony and questionnaire. Instead, complaint counsel appear willing to concede that Peacock may indeed have had available for sale new cars at the advertised discounts, but argue only that the ads also "referred" to used cars. Under the circumstances we must conclude that the available evidence preponderates in neither direction and the ALJ's dismissal of the false advertising count is affirmed.

[3] During the period covered by the complaint allegations it appears that some kinds of Opels were in short supply, and thus respondents were able to sell certain late model used cars for the same discount from list price as they offered on some new cars.

II. ORAL MISREPRESENTATIONS

While we do not conclude that respondents represented used cars as new in their media advertising, we believe that complaint counsel have demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that in some instances respondents' sales representatives did expressly misrepresent, and failed to disclose, prior use of late model used cars in oral presentations to consumers.[4]

Mr. James Huntley testified that he was shown an Opel 1900 Coupe bearing a new car sticker (CX 99) and was told by a salesman that it had previously been used by a factory official. (Tr. 330-31) Mr. Huntley testified that he received the impression that the car was a "new car that had been used by the company during that period of time." (Tr. 332) Mr. Huntley's testimony was uncontradicted, and we find no reason to disbelieve it.[5] In fact, the car he was shown had been previously used for driver education by the Fairfax County School Board (Tr. 334; CX 33-A).

Mrs. Violet Funkhauser testified that her salesman informed her that a car she sought to purchase was a "demonstrator." The car had in fact been used as a rental car by Budget Rent-A-Car prior to sale by Peacock. (Tr. 411; CX 37A) The salesman who had sold the car to Mrs. Funkhauser denied that he would have made the misrepresentation to which she testified, however he had no specific recollection of the transaction (Tr. 659-60; see also Tr. 322-23).

[4] The ALJ concluded that respondents had failed to disclose the prior status of late model used cars, but that there had been no affirmative misrepresentations of prior status. (I.D. p. 7[p. 1539, herein]) Unfortunately, the initial decision contains almost no evaluation of consumer testimony relating directly to affirmative misrepresentations. The facts that it was not respondents' general policy to misrepresent, and that in many cases there may have been no misrepresentations, do not in themselves negate direct testimony that in particular cases misrepresentations did occur. See Basic Books, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 276 F.2d 718, 720-21 (7th Cir. 1960). Our evaluation of this testimony leads us to differ with the ALJ.

[5] Respondents point out that the financing agreement which Mr. Huntley signed indicated that his car was "used," as did agreements signed by other witnesses. Obviously this subsequent disclosure, to which witnesses did not always pay particular attention, could not cure prior misrepresentation. Moreover, the simple disclosure, even if observed by a customer, would not be sufficient to dispel a misrepresentation as to the particular prior use, e.g., factory official vs. driver education.

Mr. James F. Garrison testified that his salesman informed him that a car, in fact previously used as a demonstrator, had been used by a company official, or factory representative (Tr. 288-89). This testimony was uncontradicted.

Mr. Edward Meador testified that he was informed by a salesman that an automobile, in fact previously used for driver education, had been owned by a senior engineer with the Fairfax County Water Authority (Tr. 390). The salesman was called by respondents. While he denied that he had ever misrepresented the prior status of automobiles, his testimony does not reflect anywhere near the same detailed recollection of the transaction in question as did Mr. Meador's (Tr. 624, 626; 388-391).

Our review of the foregoing evidence eliminates the need for us to determine whether express misrepresentations occurred in the case of Diana Kaste Schmidt, who testified that she was led to believe that a driver education car which she purchased was in fact new (Tr. 234-40, 243, 278-280). The record indicates that the witness arrived at the dealership seeking a new car. When an appropriate model proved unavailable, she was shown a driver education car, located on the new car lot.

There is dispute in the record between the consumer and the salesman as to what the consumer was told regarding this car. The salesman testified that he informed the purchaser that the car was used, and did not represent that the car was "new." (Tr. 549) Whatever representations were made, it is apparent in viewing the testimony as a whole that the transaction was less than a model of candor and clarity, and the customer clearly left the dealership entirely unaware that she had purchased a car used for driver education. We believe the testimony of Ms. Schmidt and Mr. Dubin does illustrate how, absent a clear and early disclosure of the prior use of a late model car, deception can result from the setting in which a sale is made and the expectations of the buyer—whether intent to deceive exists or not.

Respondents object to the introduction by complaint counsel of evidence which they contend did not conform to the boundaries of the complaint. They also protest the law judge's finding that Peacock violated the law by failing to disclose the prior use of its late model used cars. Respondents contend that the complaint alleged only a very specific form of affirmative misrepresentation, and that findings relating to other misrepresentations, or to deceptive failure to disclose are unwarranted. We cannot agree. Paragraph Seven of the complaint read in relevant part:

> In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their said motor vehicles, respondents, directly or through their representatives and employees, have engaged in other deceptive acts and practices. Typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive, of such deceptive acts and practices are the following:
> 1. Respondents represented to customers that driver education motor vehicles used in high schools in the Metropolitan Washington, D.C. Area were new and/or factory official motor vehicles; by such representations, respondents misled and deceived purchasers as to the actual prior use of said driver-education motor vehicles.
> Therefore, respondents' statements and representations, and their failure to reveal in their advertisements and during their sales presentations, the material facts as to the nature and extent of such previous use of said motor vehicles, are unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

At the very least, we believe the complaint clearly placed respondents on notice that they were charged with violations in misrepresenting the prior use of driver education cars, and in failing to disclose affirmatively the prior use of those cars. The testimony of at least two of the witnesses described hereinabove, Messrs. Huntley and Meador, falls clearly within the confines of this most narrow construction of the complaint.[6] With respect to the evidence introduced regarding respondents' misrepresentations of the prior status of rental automobiles and demonstrators we believe this is clearly relevant to a showing that the misrepresentation and nondisclosure of prior use alleged by the complaint was not an isolated occurrence, and that an order provision would be appropriate. While the complaint language clearly obligated complaint counsel to introduce evidence with respect to misrepresentation or nondisclosure of the status of driver education cars, which they did, we think that read in conjunction with the notice order it adequately apprised respondents that other evidence might be introduced bearing on the general issue of nondisclosure or misrepresentation of prior use. Certainly respondents have shown no way in which they were injured by the introduction of testimony concerning rental cars and demonstrators; to the extent possible they cross-examined tenaciously and introduced rebuttal witnesses.

In sum, while we think that record evidence relating only to driver education cars was sufficient to sustain the allegations of the complaint, and to justify the order provisions, we do not believe it was improper for the administrative law judge or the Commission to rely on evidence pertaining to rental cars and demonstrators in reaching conclusions as to the necessity for an order.

[6] While Mr. Meador testified that he was informed that his car had been previously used by a Fairfax County official (as opposed to the example of a factory official used in the complaint), we cannot see any significance in this variance, particularly inasmuch as respondents had every opportunity to rebut Mr. Meador's testimony, and introduced a witness in an effort to do so.

We have entered order language basically paralleling paragraphs 1-4 and 6 of the notice order (paragraphs I(1)-I(5) of the order herein). These prohibit misrepresentations that used cars are new, and misrepresentations of the prior use of used cars. The order provisions also require affirmative disclosure in advertising and on the lot of the prior use of late model used cars, e.g., driver education car, rental car, demonstrator. Such affirmative disclosure is necessary for two reasons: (1) to prevent any recurrence of past misrepresentation of the prior use of automobiles, and (2) to remedy the deceptive failure to disclose prior use of late model used cars.

Much of the deception and confusion which resulted in the cases of some consumers could have been readily cured had respondents simply made a clear affirmative disclosure of the prior use of their used cars, rather than waiting for consumers to guess or ask the right question. A sales agent may be under general instructions not to misrepresent, or, indeed, to disclose affirmatively the prior use of vehicles, but such general directives have a way of paling in the face of a hesitant buyer or a shortage of popular models. There is no chance for a salesperson to take liberties with the facts when they are clearly spelled out at the point of initial buyer contact with the car. Conspicuous designation of cars as "driver education," "rental," and the like is necessary to avoid the deception that has occurred here, and it is well established that the Commission may require the relief necessary to ensure that past violations are not repeated, e.g., Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 708 (1948); Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608 (1946); Haskelite Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 127 F.2d 765 (7th Cir. 1942).

In addition, we think it is clear that even in the absence of affirmative misrepresentations, it is misleading for the seller of late model used cars to fail to reveal the particularized uses to which they have been put. The record indicates beyond doubt that many consumers have a strong aversion to automobiles which have been used in certain ways, for example, driver education and multidriver rental. Rightly or wrongly, some consumers believe that such prior use substantially impairs the value of a car, perhaps by heightening the chances that it has been driven abusively. As one witness replied when asked his reaction to the discovery that his car had been used for driver education, "The image that conjures up in my mind is one of gears being stripped * * *." (Tr. 392; see also Tr. 248, 325, 335, 412).

When a late model used car is sold at close to list price, as were those involved here, the assumption likely to be made by some purchasers is that, absent disclosure to the contrary, such car has not previously been used in a way that might substantially impair its value. In such circumstances, failure to disclose a disfavored prior use may tend to mislead, and is, therefore, prohibited by Section 5. See, e.g., Brite Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 347 F.2d 477 (D.C. Cir. 1965); Kerran v. Federal Trade Commission, 265 F.2d 246, 248 (10th Cir. 1959), cert. denied sub nom.; Double Eagle Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 361 U.S. 818; L. Heller and Son, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F.2d 954, 956, (7th Cir. 1951). For this reason as well, we believe that an order requiring disclosure of the prior use of late model used cars is appropriate.[7]

III. REPRESENTATIONS THAT CREDIT LIFE INSURANCE IS MANDATORY

The complaint alleged that respondents represented to their customers that area lending institutions required the customers to accept credit life insurance, when, in fact, they did not. The effect of such a misrepresentation may be that a consumer ends up paying $150 or more for a product he or she would not choose to purchase in the absence of the misrepresentation. The administrative law judge found that the complaint allegations had been sustained, and we agree.

It was respondents' practice to present consumers with a filled-in contract, ready for signature. At times this contract might include a charge for credit life insurance entered without the customer's knowledge or prior approval (Tr. 69, 517). While individual respondents testified that it was not their policy to force consumers to accept credit life insurance, or to misrepresent the necessity for it, customer testimony does indicate that in some instances consumers were told by respondents' salesmen that they would have difficulty obtaining, or could not obtain, financing without accepting credit life insurance (Tr. 360-61, 367, 375). In other cases there was apparently no explicit misrepresentation, however considerable pressure was placed upon customers to accept credit life insurance (Tr. 315-19). Credit life insurance was in fact not required by area lending institutions as a prerequisite for financing (RA 48).

Respondents argue that the contracts which consumers signed indicated that credit life insurance was not required for financing, and this disclosure obviated the possibility of any deception. We disagree. It is clear from consumer testimony that oral deception was employed in some instances to cause consumers to ignore the warning on their sales agreement and accept credit insurance, despite a preference to avoid it. The fact that in certain instances consumers were able, after considerable exertion, to obtain deletion of the credit life requirement is also not a defense to the prior deception and high pressure selling which occurred and which led to the necessity for a battle in the first place.[8] [7] Respondents claim that they already make such disclosures, as illustrated by RX 29, showing a car in the showroom with a large sign proclaiming "Rental Car" on top. This form of conspicuous disclosure is certainly commendable, however, in view of lapses which led to the complaint, we believe that an order requiring affirmative disclosure in all cases is required.

In addition to the general relief prescribed by the notice order, the administrative law judge recommended an order provision which would require respondents to disclose the fact that they profit from the sale of credit life insurance. Testimony indicated that Peacock Buick received 50 percent of the premiums from credit life insurance sold to customers (Tr. 530). The administrative law judge appears to have concluded that respondents committed a separate violation by failing to disclose this fact. We do not agree that, standing by itself, respondents' failure to disclose their pecuniary interest in the sale of credit life insurance was deceptive. Moreover, it was not alleged as a violation in the complaint. Under the circumstances we will omit this portion of the law judge's recommended order.[9]

IV. MISREPRESENTATION THAT CREDIT APPLICATION HAS BEEN REJECTED BY PREFERRED LENDING INSTITUTION

The complaint alleged that respondents misrepresented to individuals that area lending institutions had rejected credit applications for automobile financing. The harm in such a practice is that it may enable a vendor to divert a customer from the customer's preferred lender to a more expensive source of funds. A vendor's motive for engaging in this practice may be that he can earn an extra profit if he is allowed to arrange financing with a lender with whom he deals customarily, instead of one preferred by the borrower.

At trial complaint counsel introduced a witness who testified that she sought financing from GMAC and was informed that her application for credit had been turned down (Tr. 242). Thereafter she agreed to financing with a bank suggested by respondents at an annual percentage rate of 13.94 percent. A witness from GMAC testified that the company had received no formal credit application on behalf of the consumer (Tr. 286-87). In defense, respondents introduced testimony to demonstrate that it was their practice on occasion to solicit informal credit opinions from lenders, by providing the details of a prospective borrower's financial status without giving the borrower's name (Tr. 515-16). Respondents' witness testified that he had followed this practice in the case of complaint counsel's witness. The judge apparently believed this testimony and rejected the complaint charge.

[8] We also reject respondents' argument that the Commission lacks jurisdiction to regulate their misrepresentations regarding the necessity of credit life insurance because of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. §§1011-1015. A statement by a seller regarding the need for insurance in order to obtain financing is not part of the "business of insurance" as that term is used in the Act. Moreover, the practice in question is apparently not subject to regulation by the Commonwealth of Virginia, in which respondents do business, 15 U.S.C. §1012.

[9] There may well be circumstances in which the disclosure of financial interest is a necessary element of relief for related misrepresentations. For instance, in the case at bar it appears that when salesmen did not flatly misrepresent the need for credit life insurance they did advocate its purchase with a zeal borne in part no doubt by the profit to be made. The precise point at which zealous advocacy becomes unacceptable pressure and deception is often hard to determine, and the best way to solve the problem may well be simply to arm consumers with the information necessary to evaluate a sales pitch with the requisite skepticism. This may involve disclosure that the vendor has a financial interest, something that might not be apparent to the consumer in the case of credit insurance. On the record before us, however, we believe that a prohibition of explicit and implicit misrepresentations, as well as oral and written disclosure of the non-necessity of insurance should be sufficient to prevent recurrence of the violation.

Complaint counsel argue that respondents' position is inherently contradictory, and not credible. Respondents' witness sought to explain Peacock's practice of seeking formal credit checks in terms of solicitude for the borrower's credit record, which respondents professed to fear might be damaged if a formal application was rejected. We agree with complaint counsel that this justification is suspect in view of the fact that respondents did submit formal credit applications to some area lenders, without an advance check, and some of these applications were rejected. On the other hand, it nonetheless seems quite plausible to us that an automobile dealer would follow the procedures outlined by respondents' finance manager, that is, seeking informal advice in some instances merely because it may be cheaper and faster to make a telephone check of some lenders when a number are to be contacted.

Of course, respondents' procedure is subject to abuse. Facts conveyed orally may be presented selectively to a customer's preferred lender to elicit a rejection, and the entire process may thereby be biased in favor of the selection of the seller's favored loan institution. There was, however, no pattern of this sort suggested by complaint counsel's evidence, which involved the experience of only one consumer. On balance we must conclude that this allegation of the complaint was not proven by a preponderance of the evidence.[10] We have deleted that portion of the ALJ's recommended order which would require respondents to disclose their pecuniary interest in financing arrangements, for the same reasons noted in Section III of this opinion, infra.

V. FAILURE TO DISCLOSE DAMAGE TO USED AUTOMOBILES

The complaint alleged that respondents repaired or repainted damaged cars to hide damage that might adversely affect a vehicle's performance and life expectancy, and that respondents did not disclose such damage to prospective purchasers. The complaint clearly alleged a violation of law, but the violation alleged was not proven at trial.

[10] We note, however, that it would seem a sound practice for respondents to inform consumers in instances in which "rejection" of a credit application has been based merely on a telephone check. As is evident from the record, some consumers might well prefer to have a formal application submitted in such cases, and allowing this option would prevent the appearance of deception which was created by the procedures here.

Complaint counsel called an automotive expert who testified that in his opinion respondents may indeed have sold used cars which had been previously damaged in a way that could affect future performance or durability. (Tr. 439) Complaint counsel's witness, however, relied entirely on inferences drawn from repair invoices. In defense, respondents introduced witnesses from the body shops which had repaired the automobiles in question (Tr. 586, 601). They testified that the repairs had been performed to new car specifications and that the damage repaired would not affect the performance or life expectancy of the cars. Further testimony indicated that it was respondents' practice to wholesale a substantial fraction of used cars which came into their possession, including those cars that were damaged in ways that could impair performance or life expectancy (I.D. p. 10[p. 1542, herein]). The administrative law judge weighed the conflicting testimony and concluded that complaint counsel had failed to prove that respondents sold cars previously damaged in ways that might impair performance or life expectancy. Complaint counsel do not appear to challenge this finding of the administrative law judge on appeal, and we see no reason to disturb it.

Despite the foregoing, the administrative law judge ordered respondents to disclose to consumers any damage in excess of $50 to an automobile which respondents had caused to be repaired, or of which they were otherwise aware. The judge concluded that failure to disclose prior damage to an automobile, even if it did not affect performance, constituted a violation of Section 5.

We agree with the law judge that there are circumstances in which the failure to disclose prior damage to an automobile may be deceptive, even when it does not impair performance or life expectancy, but we do not believe that the judge's proposed remedy is appropriate given the facts of this case. It is clear from the record that consumers do care about the prior repair record of an automobile they are purchasing. Even damage which does not, in the view of experts, affect the performance or life expectancy of an automobile, may nonetheless affect the willingness of a consumer to buy the automobile which has sustained it. Indeed, several witnesses in the instant case testified that their own purchasing decisions would have been altered had they been aware of damage sustained by the used cars they were purchasing (Tr. 392-93, 294, 335, 351, 381, 420). To the extent that consumers may believe, or expect, that automobile dealers will not sell them late model low mileage used cars without disclosing that they have incurred substantial damage, the failure to do so is obviously misleading, and in violation of Section 5.

At the same time, it is also clear that some sorts of minor repairs made to automobiles may well not prove material to consumer purchasing decisions, disclosure of them is not expected, and, therefore, nondisclosure is not a deception. It is also clear that a resolution of this issue has substantial implications for the sale of new cars. Respondent Peacock testified that due to mishaps during delivery, it was necessary for respondents to make minor repairs to perhaps 50 percent of the new cars they received (Tr. 573). The order proposed by the ALJ would presumably cover these cars, to the extent that damage exceeded $50, as well as the late model used cars which were the subject of the trial.

While we share the law judge's concern for a very genuine industrywide problem, we do not believe that evidence presented at this trial is sufficient to permit a precise definition of the deceptive practice or the formulation of an appropriate remedy. Moreover, the violation which the law judge proposes to remedy was not clearly pleaded in the complaint. Under these circumstances we believe that a resolution should await a more comprehensive record, generated with the aid of respondents who are on more precise notice as to the nature of the violation under attack.[11]

VI. FAILURE TO DISCLOSE SERVICE CHARGE

It was respondents' practice to add a handling and service charge, usually $25, to the purchase price of used motor vehicles. (R.A. 50-51; CX 19-27) This charge was not disclosed to purchasers during sales negotiations over the price of the used car. (Tr. 74-75) Generally the service charge would simply appear on the sales invoice and conditional sales contract which the customer received when he or she arrived at respondents' place of business to take delivery of the vehicle (I.D. p. 10[p. 1542, herein]).

The ALJ found this practice in violation of Section 5. We entirely agree. Price is perhaps the most material factor in a consumer's decision to purchase a car, new or used. Failure to disclose a "service charge" when a price is quoted is in essence a misrepresentation of the price. The fact that the service charge is eventually disclosed, at the time the consumer arrives to finalize the deal, does not eliminate the harmful effects of the prior deception. It is a matter of common sense and experience that having engaged in an initial round of bargaining over the purchase of an automobile, having reached a tentative agreement, and having returned to the dealership for the final signing of papers, many consumers will find themselves reluctant to back out, even if certain material changes are made in the terms which might have affected purchasing decisions had they been known earlier. Addition of a "service charge" at this late stage in a deal has the effect, whatever respondents may have intended, of exploiting this vulnerable position of a buyer who has already invested considerable effort in a transaction and for that reason is not likely to change his or her mind, even when the price ends up somewhat higher than expected. The practice is clearly deceptive and injurious.[12]

[11] It should be noted that the language contained in the notice order issued with the complaint, and the language contained in the consent order in Lustine Chevrolet, Dkt. 8974 (Nov. 25, 1975 [86 F.T.C. 1196]) would merely require disclosure of damage to the extent it affects performance or life expectancy. This order provision could not be justified on the record before us.

Complaint counsel object to the order entered by the administrative law judge, which required oral and written disclosure of the service charge but omitted the notice order's requirements that such disclosure occur prior to the signing of the completed retail order for a used car, and its requirement that such disclosure occur in all advertising of used cars. We agree with respondents that the notice order is unduly broad to the extent it may be construed to require mention of the service charge in advertisements for used cars which do not quote prices. We have modified the order language to require written and oral notification of service charges prior to the signing of a completed retail order, and in all advertisements for automobiles which mention price.[13] We note that nothing in this provision prevents respondents from including the overhead costs covered by their "service charge" in the total retail price they quote to consumers for their cars, just as all other components of overhead are included in the quoted price.

VII. "NO. 1 OPEL DEALER IN THE UNITED STATES"

Respondents agreed that Peacock's claim of "No. 1 Opel Dealer in the United States" should be construed to represent that Peacock had sold more Opels than any other dealer during the applicable period. (Tr. 63) A claim of this sort may be a powerful selling tool, since some consumers believe they can obtain better selection of cars, better prices, or better service at the largest dealer. (Tr. 125-26, 235-36) The record indicates that respondents advertised in September 1971 that

---

[12] Respondent Peacock testified that if a customer protested, the service charge would be dropped. (Tr. 73) If true, this obviously does not excuse the prior deception, or eliminate its harm, since some consumers under the circumstances are not likely to protest, while others may not even notice the addition. (Tr. 365-66) Respondents also argue that this practice was common among area car dealers at the time of complaint. This clearly is no defense. Moreover, the Commission has obtained consent orders from several automobile dealers in the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan area proscribing the post-bargain addition of undisclosed service charges; e.g., Lustine Chevrolet, Dkt. 8974 (Nov. 25, 1975 [86 F.T.C. 1196]), and Rosenthal Chevrolet, Dkt. 8975 (Sept. 30, 1975 [86 F.T.C. 777]).

[13] We have broadened the order to apply to the sale of new cars as well as used. There can be no justification for "low-balling" in the sale of any car, and this broadening is necessary to prevent recurrence of the practice in a different guise.

Peacock Buick was the No. 1 Opel Dealer in the United States. (CX 17, 18) At the time of the advertisement the claim was untrue, since the last month in which Peacock had been first in sales was March 1971. (CX 84-95; Tr. 213-14)

Testimony further indicated that sales figures were compiled monthly by the Buick Motor Division, indicating the top 20 Opel dealer rankings. These documents were available to any Opel dealer upon request. (Tr. 130) Respondents apparently did not check monthly to determine whether they retained their ranking, but instead waited for notification from Buick. In September 1971 they were notified by the Buick Motor Division that the Federal Trade Commission was investigating their advertising claims, and that they were not number 1. (Tr. 675-76, 689) Thereafter they ceased this claim.

The ALJ found no violation, reasoning that respondents had believed in good faith that they were number 1 up until the time they ceased their false advertising.

We do not agree with the judge's conclusion. Respondents publicized a claim which was untrue and deceptive at the time it was made. This alone constituted a violation even though respondents may have had no intention to mislead. Gimbel Brothers, Inc. v. FTC, 116 F.2d 578, 579 (2nd Cir. 1941). The ALJ appears to have concluded that respondents had a "reasonable basis" for their advertisements, and that their falsity was thereby excused. As a matter of law this is simply incorrect. National Dynamics Corp., et al., 82 F.T.C. 488, 553 (1973), aff'd, remanded as to order, 492 F.2d 1333 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 993 (1974).

Moreover, with respect to the reasonableness of respondents' continued reliance on the March dealer rankings, we cannot view the matter quite so charitably as the ALJ. It was obvious from respondents' own experience prior to March 1971 that relative dealer rankings were subject to periodic change. They further knew, or should have known, that new rankings were compiled approximately once each month, and that the truth of their September 1971 claims could, therefore, have been easily verified by a call to the Buick Motor Division (Tr. 130-31). It is the duty of each advertiser, and not the Federal Trade Commission, to ensure that advertising claims are truthful when they are made. In this case we believe it was respondents' obligation to seek the most recent reasonably available evidence bearing on their claim before they continued to make it. To allow advertisers to rely, for a reasonable basis, on outmoded data can only encourage deception. We will enter the notice order provision pertaining to misrepresentations of dealer size (Par. I(9) of order).[14]

VIII. LIABILITY OF INDIVIDUAL RESPONDENTS

The administrative law judge excluded the individual respondents from the coverage of his recommended order. Peacock is a small family owned business and it is not contested that the individual respondents, president and vice-president of the corporation, formulated, directed, and controlled the acts and practices of the corporation during the time covered by the complaint (I.D. p. 5[p. 1538 herein]; RA 30-32; Tr. 47-48, 303).

With respect to the particular violations found by the Commission, the individual respondents clearly played a significant role. They were fully responsible for Peacock's advertising and for its policies with respect to imposition of a service charge on used cars. While it appears that Messrs. Peacock and Bernstein instructed their sales personnel not to misrepresent the prior use of used cars, they did acquiesce in the non-disclosure of prior use which occurred in a number of cases.

The administrative law judge recommended no order against individual respondents because in his view their testimony was "straightforward" and "not evasive" and they had attempted to settle complaints when presented with them. The law judge concluded it would be inappropriate to "stigmatize" the individuals with liability and refused to commit what he deemed "administrative over-kill." (I.D. p. 14[p. 1545, herein])

In reaching his conclusions we believe the ALJ gave too great weight to factors that are of slight relevance, while neglecting considerations of greater import. Respondents may take pride in those portions of the record which reflect favorably upon their character and business practices. In evaluating the propriety of individual liability, however, the Commission's duty is not to determine whether respondents are "good guys" or "bad guys" and act on that basis. What is relevant is whether individual liability may be necessary to prevent recurrence of the particular violations for which named individuals have been responsible. Here, the corporate respondent is small and under total control of the individuals. Were they to constitute a new dealership that did not qualify technically as a "successor corporation" to Peacock, an order against Peacock alone would be of no effect. Under these circumstances we believe that imposition of individual liability is necessary and in accord with extensive prior precedent and Commission practice, e.g., Standard Educators, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 475 F.2d 401 (D.C. Cir. 1973); Standard Distributors, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 211 F.2d 7, 14-15 (2nd Cir. 1954); Coran Bros. Corp., et al., 72 F.T.C. 1, 24-25 (1957).

[14] Respondents point out that the complaint challenged their misrepresentation of status in September 1970, rather than September 1971, the year to which the proof related. The complaint did, however, allege a continuing misrepresentation and respondents were apprised some months before the commencement of hearings that proof would be introduced relating to representations in September 1971. They had every opportunity to defend the charges with respect to September 1971, and we can detect no injury whatsoever from this mechanical defect in the complaint.

An appropriate order is appended.

FINAL ORDER

This matter having been heard by the Commission upon the cross-appeals of complaint counsel and respondents' counsel from the initial decision and upon briefs and oral argument in support thereof and opposition thereto, and the Commission, for the reasons stated in the accompanying opinion, having granted in part and denied in part both appeals:

ORDER REMANDING MATTER TO ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE AS TO ONE RESPONDENT

On Jan. 7, 1975, the administrative law judge filed an initial decision as to three respondents, J. William Byrd, Medical Weight Loss, Inc., and Darrel P. Simpson. The decision was predicated on their failure to answer the complaint.[1] By letters to Charles A. Tobin dated Feb. 25, 1975, and Mar. 13, 1975, counsel for respondent Simpson asserted that Mr. Simpson had not been served with the complaint and that, at the time he was served with the Jan. 7, 1975 initial decision, he was unaware of the contents of the complaint.

On Oct. 7, 1975, the Commission denied Mr. Simpson's request without prejudice to the submission of a motion supported by an affidavit by Mr. Simpson. Mr. Simpson has now filed an affidavit and upon consideration of the affidavits of Mr. Simpson and Alfred Lindeman, Esq., complaint counsel,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid affidavit of Darrel P. Simpson be treated as a motion to reopen the default decision entered in this matter;

It is further ordered, That this matter be remanded to the administrative law judge as to respondent Simpson for a hearing and determination of the aforesaid motion.

---

[1] The law judge filed an initial decision as to the remaining respondents on June 18, 1975. The Commission heard oral argument on respondents' and complaint counsel's cross-appeals on Oct. 9, 1975.

IN THE MATTER OF

PORTER & DIETSCH, INC., ET AL.

Docket 9047. Order, Dec. 19, 1975

Denial of motion for issuance of supplementary corrective news release.

Appearances

For the Commission: Dean A. Fournier, Alan H. Melnicoe and William H. Patton.

For the respondents: Albert A. Carretta, Browne, Beveridge, DeGrandi and Kline, Wash., D.C. for Porter & Dietsch. For Pay N'Save Corporation, pro se.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR ISSUANCE OF SUPPLEMENTARY CORRECTIVE NEWS RELEASE

This matter is before us on the motion of respondents Porter & Dietsch, Inc., William H. Fraser, Kelly Ketting Furth, Inc., and Joseph Furth, requesting the issuance of a "supplementary corrective news release." The administrative law judge certified the motion to the Commission on Dec. 4, 1975, together with his recommendation that the motion be denied.

The news release published by the Office of Public Information on Aug. 27, 1975, failed to include the usual caveat that the Commission issues a complaint when it "has reason to believe" that the law has been violated and a proceeding is in the public interest, and that the issuance of a complaint simply marks the beginning of a formal proceeding in which the allegations will be ruled upon after a public hearing. On Oct. 7, 1975, the Commission issued an order [86 F.T.C. 896] granting respondents' prior motion seeking the issuance of a corrective news release. The corrective release issued on Oct. 14, 1975.

Respondents now claim that the corrective release was insufficient and that still another release should issue. They ask that the supplementary release include, inter alia, a more elaborate caveat and state that the news release issued by the Seattle Regional Office on Aug. 27, 1975, improperly listed the names of eight drug chains other than respondent Pay N' Save selling the "X-11 Reducing Plan."

Respondents' rights were not violated by the press releases issued on Aug. 27, 1975 and Oct. 14, 1975. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid motion be, and it hereby is, denied.

IN THE MATTER OF

STANDARD OIL COMPANY (INDIANA), ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT AND SEC. 7, OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket C-2770. Complaint, Dec. 19, 1975—Decision, Dec. 19, 1975

Consent order requiring a Chicago, Ill., petroleum refiner, among other things to guarantee access for at least 20 years by independent refiners to crude oil reserves that respondent is purchasing from Pasco, Inc., in Wyoming. The order further requires Pasco and Studebaker-Worthington which owns over 55 percent of Pasco, to seek Commission approval prior to selling any of the remaining Pasco assets including its Sinclair, Wyo. refinery.

Appearances

For the Commission: Steven A. Newborn and James W. Olson.

For the respondents: William R. Jentes, Kirkland & Ellis, Chicago, Ill. for Standard Oil Company (Indiana) and Amoco Production Company, John B. Hartigan, New York City for Studebaker-Worthington, Inc. and R. Bruce MacWhorter, Shearman & Sterling, New York City for Pasco, Inc.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Standard Oil Company (Indiana), a corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, acting through its subsidiary, Amoco Production Company, a corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, has acquired assets of Pasco, Inc., a corporation, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18), and has, with Studebaker-Worthington, Inc., and Pasco, Inc., corporations subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45), and that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues this complaint, pursuant to Section 11 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §21) and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45), stating its charges as follows:

I. Respondents

A. Respondent, Standard Oil Company (Indiana) (hereinafter "Standard"), is a corporation chartered, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its corporate offices located at 200 E. Randolph Dr., Chicago, Ill.

B. Standard, through its subsidiaries, is engaged worldwide in crude oil and natural gas exploration, production, purchasing, and transportation, and in manufacturing, transporting, and marketing petroleum products, chemicals, plastics, and fertilizers, and has interests in minerals and real estate.

C. In 1974, Standard had total revenues of approximately $10.2 billion, a net income of $970 million and approximately $8.9 billion in assets, making it the 13th largest industrial corporation in sales and the 12th largest in assets. Standard is the nation's sixth largest petroleum company in assets and ranks fourth domestically in crude oil production, with approximately 5 percent of the nation's total.

D. Standard is a leading company in crude oil production, transportation, and refining, and in the marketing of refined petroleum products in Petroleum Administration for Defense District IV (hereinafter District IV), comprised of the five Rocky Mountain States: Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Wyoming.

E. Amoco Production Company (hereinafter "Amoco") is now, and was at the time of the acquisition hereinafter set forth, a corporation chartered, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business located at 200 E. Randolph Drive, Chicago, Ill. Amoco, prior to and following the acquisition hereinafter set forth, was and is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Standard and was and is operated under the direction and control of Standard. Amoco, prior to and following the acquisition hereinafter set forth, carries out Standard's domestic exploration for and production of petroleum.

F. Respondent Studebaker-Worthington, Inc. (hereinafter "Studebaker"), is a corporation chartered, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its corporate offices located at 530 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

G. Studebaker, through its subsidiaries, is principally engaged in the manufacture and sale on a worldwide basis of consumer and consumer durable products, electrical, automotive, and petroleum products, industrial and power products consisting primarily of turbines, pumps, and compressors, and control and meter products.

H. In 1974, Studebaker had total revenues of approximately $1.3 billion, a net income of approximately $9.7 million, and approximately $637 million in assets.

I. Respondent Pasco, Inc. (hereinafter "Pasco"), is a corporation chartered, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal executive office located at 530 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

J. Pasco is a 55.5 percent owned subsidiary of Studebaker.

K. In 1972, Pasco purchased certain former Sinclair Oil Company properties from Atlantic Richfield, including interests in production, a refinery, pipelines, and retail gasoline outlets. These petroleum operations are Pasco's sole business.

L. In 1974, Pasco had total revenues of approximately $210 million and a net income of approximately $13 million.

M. In 1974, in District IV, Pasco was one of only two fully integrated petroleum companies which did not rank in the top 20 nationally in crude production. Pasco ranked 11th in crude production, 9th in gasoline marketing, and 8th in crude pipelines in District IV.

N. At all times relevant herein, Standard, Amoco, Studebaker, and Pasco sold and shipped their products in interstate commerce throughout the United States and were and are now engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts.

II. The Acquisition

O. On Apr. 4, 1975, an offer was made by Standard for certain crude oil producing properties of Pasco; and by May 1, 1975, an agreement had been conditionally reached whereby Pasco was to sell seven oil and gas fields, which constitute all of Pasco's currently producing properties, and two gas processing plants to Standard for approximately $225 million.

P. Pursuant to the sales contract, Standard agrees to dedicate to the Sinclair refinery 75 million barrels of crude oil or the entire production of the acquired properties until 1983, whichever is later.

III. Trade and Commerce

Q. The relevant geographic market is District IV.

R. The relevant product market is the production and sale of crude oil. Shares in the relevant market may be determined by examining either current production or reserves.

S. Prior to the aforesaid acquisition, Standard and Pasco were substantial and actual competitors in the production and sale of crude oil.

IV. Effects of the Acquisition

T. The effects of the aforesaid acquisition may be to substantially lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the production and sale of crude oil in District IV, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18); and the effect of the agreement by which Studebaker, through its subsidiary Pasco, and Standard, through its subsidiary Amoco, undertook to eliminate the actual competition between Pasco and Amoco may be to unreasonably restrain trade and to hinder or have a dangerous tendency to hinder competition unduly, thereby constituting an unfair act and practice in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45). These effects may occur in the following ways, among others:

1. Substantial actual competition between Standard and Pasco will be eliminated;
2. The restraining influence of Pasco as a substantial, independent, fully integrated competitor will be eliminated;
3. Concentration in the production of crude oil will be increased to the detriment of actual, as well as potential, competition.
4. Additional mergers and acquisitions in the relevant market may be encouraged;
5. The combination of Standard and Pasco may so increase Standard's production and sales capability in the relevant market as to provide it with a decisive competitive advantage in the relevant market to the detriment of actual and potential competition.
6. Refiners of crude oil may be denied the benefits of price competition between Standard and Pasco;
7. Competitors of Standard in the refining of crude oil may be foreclosed from access to the crude oil presently produced by Pasco; and
8. A Pasco dependent on Standard for crude oil may be less willing to sell refined petroleum products to independent retail marketers who compete with Standard.

V. The Violation Charged

U. The acquisition by Amoco, acting under the direction and control of Standard, of certain crude oil producing properties of Pasco constitutes a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18).

V. The acquisition by Amoco, acting under the direction and control of Standard, of certain crude oil producing properties of Pasco constitutes an unfair method of competition in commerce and an unfair act or practice in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45).

W. The sale by Pasco, acting under the direction and control of Studebaker, of certain crude oil producing properties to Amoco constitutes an unfair method of competition in commerce and an unfair act or practice in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45).

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Bureau of Competition proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45) and respondents Standard Oil Company (Indiana) and Amoco Production Company with violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18); and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

"Sinclair Refinery" shall mean the refinery located in Sinclair, Wyo.

"Agreement of Sale and Purchase" shall mean the Agreement of Sale and Purchase between Pasco and Amoco, a copy of which will be filed with the Secretary of the Commission.

"Crude Oil Dedication Agreement" shall mean the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement between Pasco and Amoco, appended as Exhibit

D-1 (including Annex A) to the Agreement of Sale and Purchase and a copy of which will be filed with the Secretary of the Commission.

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents had committed the aforesaid violations, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

ORDER

For purposes of this order, the following definitions shall apply:

"Standard" shall mean respondent Standard Oil Company, an Indiana corporation, its subsidiaries, and affiliates.

"Crude Oil Supply Agreement" shall mean an agreement in the form appended to this order as Exhibit A.

"Dedicated Oil" shall mean the crude oil which Amoco is required to sell Pasco or its assignees pursuant to the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement and this order and the crude oil, if any, which Amoco is required to sell Independent Refiners pursuant to this order.

"Recognized Poster" shall mean Continental Oil Company, Exxon

Company, U.S.A., Marathon Oil Company, and Union Oil Company of California as long as they post prices for and purchase Wyoming crude oil of like grade and gravity to the Dedicated Oil, and any other refiner or its affiliate (except Standard) which shall regularly post prices for and purchase at least 3,000 barrels per day of Wyoming crude oil of like grade and gravity or a volume comparable to the volume of Dedicated Oil when the production of such oil falls below 1,000 barrels per day.

"Pasco Downstream Assets" shall mean all assets of Pasco other than the assets sold to Amoco pursuant to the Agreement of Sale and Purchase.

All other terms used in this order which are defined in the Agreement of Sale and Purchase or in the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement shall have the same meanings in this order as in those Agreements.

All respondents shall be released from the provisions of this order if Pasco notifies the Commission in writing that the transactions contemplated by the Agreement of Sale and Purchase have not and will not be consummated and that Pasco does not contemplate selling any substantial portion of its assets to Amoco or Standard.

I

It is ordered, That Amoco shall grant Pasco the exclusive right to purchase all of the Dedicated Oil in accordance with and subject to the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement until the later of (a) 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on Jan. 1, 1983, or (b) the date on which the cumulative volume of net interest oil made available to Pasco pursuant to the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement reaches a total of 75 million barrels (less the interim net production produced from 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on Jan. 1, 1975, to 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on the date of the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement). In accordance with and subject to the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement, Pasco shall be entitled to assign the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement to any credit-worthy future owner of the Sinclair Refinery, and any assignee of the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement shall have a like right of assignment.

II

It is further ordered, That upon the expiration of the dedication period referred to in Section I of this order, Amoco shall continue to make the Dedicated Oil available to Pasco or any assignee owner of the Sinclair Refinery so long as the owner continues to operate said refinery until the later of (a) 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on Jan. 1, 1996, or (b) the date on which the cumulative volume of net interest oil produced and made available to the owner of the Sinclair Refinery reaches 100 million barrels (less the interim net production produced from 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on Jan. 1, 1975, to 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on the date of the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement). Amoco shall make the Dedicated Oil available during such additional dedication period in accordance with and subject to the Crude Oil Supply Agreement, which shall be entered into not less than thirty (30) days prior to the expiration of the initial dedication period, shall initially be for a period of five (5) years, and shall be subject to successive five-year renewals (not to exceed the additional dedication period), providing Amoco is given written notice of such renewal at least thirty (30) days prior to the expiration of the agreement. The price to be paid for the Dedicated Oil pursuant to the Crude Oil Supply Agreement shall be the highest of the prices posted by a Recognized Poster in effect at the time of delivery for Wyoming crude oil of like grade and gravity or, if the posting of prices in Wyoming is discontinued, the highest of the prices regularly offered for Wyoming crude oil of like grade and gravity by persons purchasing at least 3,000 barrels per day in Wyoming.

III

It is further ordered, That in the event of a termination of the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement or the Crude Oil Supply Agreement with Pasco or its assignees prior to the expiration of the dedication periods referred to in Sections I and II of this order, Amoco shall make the Dedicated Oil available to Independent Refiners until the later of (a) 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on Jan. 1, 1996, or (b) the date on which the cumulative volume of net interest oil produced and saved reaches a total of 100 million barrels (less the interim net production produced from 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on Jan. 1, 1975, to 7:00 a.m. Wyoming time on the date of the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement), in accordance with the following procedures:

(A) Amoco shall give public notice of the termination of its obligations to the owner of the Sinclair Refinery within ten (10) days after the termination becomes effective, advising all Independent Refiners of the opportunity to purchase the Dedicated Oil in accordance with the terms of this order. Amoco shall give such public notice by inserting a paid advertisement on at least three (3) consecutive days in the Oil Daily or another publication or publications having nationwide circulation in the petroleum industry and shall give all Independent Refiners in District IV written notice of the availability of the Dedicated Oil during the same period.

(B) An Independent Refiner wishing to purchase the Dedicated Oil shall submit a written offer to Amoco expressing the refiner's willingness to enter into the Crude Oil Supply Agreement for a period of five (5) years. As an alternative to submitting an individual offer, an Independent Refiner which is unable to refine all of the Dedicated Oil may submit a joint offer to purchase the Dedicated Oil with other Independent Refiners that are similarly situated. Any offer must be submitted within thirty (30) days after the date (hereafter the "Notice Date") on which the public notice by Amoco shall have been last published.

(C) In the event Amoco receives more than one timely offer for the Dedicated Oil from Independent Refiners at an equally high price, Amoco shall allow such refiners fifty (50) days after the notice date in which to make whatever allocation of the Dedicated Oil is agreeable to them. If the Independent Refiners are unable to do so, Amoco shall make the Dedicated Oil available to whichever Independent Refiner or group of such refiners offers, within seventy (70) days after the notice date, to pay the highest price for the Dedicated Oil.

(D) Within ninety (90) days after the notice date, Amoco shall enter into the Crude Oil Supply Agreement with the Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners offering the highest price. The Crude Oil Supply Agreement shall be subject to successive five-year renewals during the dedication period specified in this section, providing Amoco is given written notice of such renewal at least thirty (30) days prior to the expiration of the agreement. In the event the Crude Oil Supply Agreement is not renewed or is otherwise terminated prior to the expiration of the dedication period specified in this section, Amoco shall give notice of such termination in accordance with paragraph (A) of this section and shall again offer the Dedicated Oil to Independent Refiners in accordance with the procedures specified in this section.

(E) In the event Amoco shall receive a bona fide offer to purchase the Dedicated Oil at a price higher than that offered by an Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners, Amoco shall notify such refiner or refiners of the higher price offered and give such refiner or refiners ten (10) days within which to meet the higher price. If the Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners believes that the higher offer is not a bona fide offer, such refiner or refiners may request arbitration to determine the fair market value of the oil, provided that the Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners agrees to pay the fair market value when determined by the arbitrator and to pay the highest of the prices posted by a Recognized Poster in effect at the time of delivery for Wyoming crude oil of like grade and gravity pending such determination. The arbitrator shall be Arthur D. Little, Inc., unless it refuses or is unable to serve as arbitrator, in which event the arbitrator shall be appointed by the person who is at the time the Senior Judge (in point of service) of the 7th Judicial District of the State of Wyoming. The decision of the arbitrator shall be reached in accordance with the rules of the American Arbitration Association, shall be final and conclusive, and shall take effect immediately when announced. The fair market value to be determined by the arbitrator shall in no event be less than the highest of the prices posted by a Recognized Poster for Wyoming crude oil of like grade and gravity.

(F) In the event no Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners shall agree pursuant to Paragraph (E) of this order to meet the highest price offered or to pay the fair market value for the Dedicated Oil, Amoco may sell the Dedicated Oil to the person offering the highest price for Wyoming crude oil of like grade and gravity. In the event no Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners shall offer to purchase the Dedicated Oil at the highest of the prices posted by a Recognized Poster, Amoco may sell the oil to anyone (including an affiliate), providing such person offers a price higher than the price offered by an Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners. Amoco shall sell the Dedicated Oil pursuant to this Paragraph in accordance with and subject to the Crude Oil Supply Agreement, which agreement shall not be subject to automatic renewal at its expiration. Amoco shall give notice of such expiration or of any termination in accordance with Paragraph (A) of this Section and shall again offer the Dedicated Oil to Independent Refiners in accordance with the procedures specified in this Section.

It is further ordered, That nothing in this order shall obligate Amoco to supply crude oil to any person in excess of Amoco's net interest oil and the royalty oil which is not taken in kind that are actually produced and saved from the properties described in Annex A to the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement. Nothing in this order shall affect Pasco's rights under the Crude Oil Dedication Agreement.

V

It is further ordered, That in the event Amoco enters into an agreement with an Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners to supply Dedicated Oil pursuant to Section III of this order, Standard shall not interfere with the delivery of such oil or equivalent oil to the refinery of such refiner or refiners. At the request of the Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners, Standard shall bargain in good faith over the transport of the Dedicated Oil through any then existing pipeline facilities owned by Standard and over an exchange of the Dedicated Oil for other crude oil owned by Amoco.

VI

It is further ordered, That except for the assets described in the Agreement of Sale and Purchase, Standard shall not purchase or attempt to purchase any of the assets owned by Pasco or which may be sold by Pasco to others, without the prior approval of the Commission.

VII

It is further ordered, That Standard shall not purchase or receive more than five (5) percent of the annual dollar value of the products which are refined from the Dedicated Oil by Pasco, its assignees, or any Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners; and Standard shall not control or attempt to control the sale of refined products by such persons to others. Nothing in this section shall preclude Standard from engaging in lawful competitive activity that may affect the sale of refined products by Pasco, any assignee, or any Independent Refiner.

VIII

It is further ordered, That Pasco will not sell any of the Pasco Downstream Assets without obtaining the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission; Provided, however, That such prior approval need not be obtained by Pasco for (a) any sale or exchange of crude oil or refined petroleum products in the normal course of business, or (b) casual sales of Pasco Downstream Assets not to exceed $500,000 in total nor $50,000 in any one instance.

IX

It is further ordered, That if Studebaker acquires any of the Pasco Downstream Assets, it will not sell any such assets without obtaining the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission; Provided, however, That such prior approval need not be obtained by Studebaker for (a) any sale or exchange of crude oil or refined petroleum products in the normal course of business, or (b) casual sales of Pasco Downstream Assets not to exceed $500,000 in total for a period of three years after the date Studebaker first acquires any of Pasco's Downstream Assets, nor to exceed $50,000 at any time in any one instance.

X

It is further ordered, That Pasco shall bargain in good faith over the transport of the Dedicated Oil through any pipeline facilities owned by Pasco in the event Amoco enters into an agreement with an Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners to supply Dedicated Oil pursuant to Section III of this order. If Pasco sells any such pipeline facilities, Pasco will obtain from the buyer of the Pasco facilities a written undertaking to bargain in good faith over the transport of the Dedicated Oil through such facilities in the event Amoco enters into an agreement with an Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners to supply Dedicated Oil pursuant to Section III of this order.

XI

It is further ordered, That if Studebaker purchases any of the Pasco Downstream Assets, it shall bargain in good faith over the transport of the Dedicated Oil through any of Pasco's present pipeline facilities then owned by Studebaker in the event that Amoco enters into an agreement with an Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners to supply Dedicated Oil pursuant to Section III of this order. If Studebaker sells any of Pasco's present pipeline facilities, it will obtain from the buyer of the pipeline facilities a written undertaking to bargain in good faith over the transport of the Dedicated Oil through such facilities in the event Amoco enters into an agreement with an Independent Refiner or group of Independent Refiners to supply Dedicated Oil pursuant to Section III of this order.

XII

It is further ordered, That each respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

XIII

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

XIV

It is further ordered, That the respondents Pasco and Studebaker shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, and thereafter within five (5) days after the sale of any of Pasco's Downstream Assets, with the exception of sales in the normal course of business or casual sales as described in Sections VIII (a) and (b) and IX (a) and (b) of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order. In addition, the respondents Standard and Amoco shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order and thereafter annually and, in addition, within five (5) days after Amoco enters into any Crude Oil Supply Agreement pursuant to Sections II or III of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

Respondents are engaged in the business of manufacturing men's sport shirts.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the introduction, delivery for introduction, sale, advertising, offering for sale in commerce, and in the transportation or causing to be transported in commerce, of textile fiber products; and have sold, offered for sale, advertised, delivered, transported, and caused to be transported after shipment in commerce, textile fiber products, either in their original state or contained in other textile fiber products, as the terms "commerce" and "textile fiber product" are defined in the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act.

PAR. 3. Certain of said textile fiber products were misbranded by respondents within the intent and meaning of Section 4(a) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, in that they were falsely and deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, invoiced, advertised or otherwise identified as to the name and amount of constituent fibers contained therein.

Among such misbranded textile fiber products, but not limited thereto, were men's sport shirts which contained substantially different amounts and types of fibers than as represented.

PAR. 4. Certain of said textile fiber products were misbranded by respondents in that they were not stamped, tagged, labeled or otherwise identified as required under the provisions of Section 4(b) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, and in the manner and form as prescribed by the rules and regulations promulgated under said Act.

Among such misbranded textile fiber products, but not limited thereto, were textile fiber products, namely men's shirts, with labels which failed:

1. To disclose the true generic names of the fibers present; and
2. To disclose the percentage of such fibers by weight.

PAR. 5. Certain of said textile fiber products were misbranded by respondents in that fiber trademarks were placed on labels without the generic names of fibers appearing on such labels in immediate conjunction therewith, in violation of Rule 17(a) of the rules and regulations promulgated under the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act.

PAR. 6. Respondents have furnished false guaranties that certain of their textile fiber products were not misbranded or falsely or deceptively invoiced or advertised, in violation of Section 10(b) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and Rule 38(d) of the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, by representing in writing that they have a continuing guaranty on file with the Federal Trade Commission, when such is not a fact.

PAR. 7. Respondents have failed to maintain and preserve proper records showing the fiber content of textile fiber products manufactured by them, in violation of Section 6(a) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and Rule 39 of the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder.

PAR. 8. The acts and practices of respondents as set forth above were, and are, in violation of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, and constituted, and now constitute, unfair and deceptive acts and practices and unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Atlanta Regional Office proposed to submit to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents, their attorney and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing the consent order, with an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint making the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Misbranding textile fiber products by:

a. falsely or deceptively stamping, tagging, labeling, invoicing or otherwise identifying such products as to the name or amount of the constituent fibers contained therein;

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Acts, and of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Main Street Furniture, Inc., a corporation and Samuel Goldstein, Raymond Goldstein and Chester E. Brost, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts, and the implementing regulation promulgated under the Truth in Lending Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Main Street Furniture, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office and place of business located at 50510 U.S. 31 No., South Bend, Ind.

Respondents Samuel Goldstein, Raymond Goldstein, and Chester E. Brost are officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of household furniture and appliances, and services in connection therewith to the general public.

COUNT I

Alleging violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegation in Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count I as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, respondents have disseminated and caused the dissemination of certain advertisements concerning said products and services by various means in or affecting commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, including, but not limited to, advertisements inserted in newspapers of interstate circulation, and in radio and television broadcasts of interstate circulation, for the purpose of inducing, and which was likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said products and services; additionally, respondents own, operate and control a total of three (3) retail furniture stores located in the States of Indiana and Ohio.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of respondents' business and for the purpose of inducing the sale of their household furniture, appliances and services in connection therewith, respondents have made numerous statements and representations in newspaper advertisements, radio and television commercials and oral statements by salesmen to prospective customers.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, separately and in connection with the oral statements and representations of respondents' salesmen to customers and prospective customers, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication that:

1. Respondents are making a bona fide offer to sell the advertised merchandise at the prices and on the terms and conditions stated in the advertisements.

2. By and through the use of the words, "SALE," "SAVINGS FANTASTIC," "SPECTACULAR VALUES," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, respondents' merchandise may be purchased at special or reduced prices, and purchasers are thereby afforded savings from respondents' regular selling prices.

3. By and through the use of the words, "HUNDREDS TO CHOOSE FROM," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, the advertised merchandise is available in 100 different sets from which the prospective purchaser may choose.

4. There are no charges in addition to the advertised purchase price of respondents' merchandise.

5. By and through the use of the words, "Superb Quality," and other words of similar import and meaning not specifically set out herein, the durability of the advertised merchandise exceeds reasonable requirements for normal everyday use for a reasonable period of time.

6. The advertised merchandise was guaranteed in every respect without conditions or limitations and would be continually serviced without charge for an unlimited period of time after the delivery of the advertised merchandise to the homes of purchasers.

7. The advertised offer was being made only for a limited period of time.

8. Purchasers of the advertised merchandise are afforded savings of $100 and more off the prices at which such merchandise is usually and customarily sold at retail.

9. By and through the use of the words, "ITALIAN," "FRENCH," "SPANISH," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, furniture sold by respondents is of a foreign origin.

10. By and through the use of the words, "We Never Say 'No!' To Credit" and "Easy Terms," purchasers of respondents' merchandise are never refused credit and are granted easy credit terms without regard to their financial status or ability to pay.

11. By and through the use of the words, "Walnut finished," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, furniture sold by respondents is of solid wood construction.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The offers set out in respondents' advertisements are not bona fide offers to sell the advertised merchandise at the prices or on the terms or conditions stated but are made for the purpose of obtaining leads to prospective purchasers. Respondents' salesmen, thereafter, disparage respondents' advertised merchandise and otherwise discourage the purchase thereof and attempt to sell and frequently do sell different and more expensive merchandise.

2. Respondents' merchandise is not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices, and savings are not thereby afforded to their purchasers because of reductions from respondents' regular selling prices. In fact, respondents do not have regular selling prices, but the prices at which respondents' merchandise are sold vary from purchaser to purchaser.

3. The advertised merchandise is not available in 100 different sets from which the prospective purchaser may choose. To the contrary, respondents have available only a very limited number of selections of the advertised merchandise.

4. Respondents make extra charges as applicable, such as service, finance and life insurance charges over and above the regular advertised price of their merchandise.

5. The advertised merchandise is not of a high quality or durability that exceeds reasonable requirements for normal everyday use for a reasonable period of time. In many instances, respondents sell advertised merchandise only under the express condition that such merchandise is not warranted for any particular use.

6. The advertised merchandise is not guaranteed by respondents and is not continuously serviced without charge for an unlimited period of time.

7. Respondents' advertised offer is not made for a limited period of time. The advertised merchandise is regularly advertised for the represented price or at another so-called reduced price over a period of time greater than the represented limitations.

8. Purchasers of respondents' merchandise advertised in conjunction with the phrase "Save Up To $100 And More," or terms of similar comparable import or meaning, did not realize savings of the stated percentage amount from the actual prices at which the merchandise so advertised was sold or offered for sale in good faith for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent regular course of respondents' business.

9. Merchandise advertised in conjunction with the words, "Italian," "French," or "Spanish," or terms of comparable import or meaning, is not of a foreign origin. The advertised merchandise is produced by domestic manufacturers.

10. Purchasers of respondents' merchandise are not granted easy credit terms by respondents, without regard to their financial status or ability to pay.

11. Merchandise advertised in conjunction with the use of the phrase, "walnut finished," or terms of similar comparable import or meaning, was not of solid wood construction. To the contrary, said phrase merely described the color of a stain finish applied to the exposed surfaces of the merchandise.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business and for the purpose of inducing the sale of their household furniture, respondents through the use of pictorial representations in various publications and T.V. commercials, represented directly or by implication that:

1. All of the furniture illustrated in the pictorial representation is being offered for sale at the advertised price.

2. All of the furniture illustrated in the pictorial representation is available for sale in unlimited quantities as a group.

3. Furniture illustrated in the pictorial representation may be purchased at special or reduced prices, and purchasers are thereby afforded savings from respondents' regular selling prices.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents offer only part of the furniture in the pictorial representation at the advertised price and make extra charges as applicable for remaining furniture items in the pictorial representation.

2. All of the furniture in the pictorial representation is not available for sale in unlimited quantities as a group. To the contrary, respondents have available only a very limited number of the advertised groups of furniture.

3. Furniture illustrated in the pictorial representation is not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices, and savings are not afforded to purchasers because of reductions from respondents' regular selling prices. In fact, respondents do not have regular selling prices, but the prices at which respondents' merchandise are sold vary from purchaser to purchaser.

Therefore, the representations set forth in Paragraph Seven hereinbefore, were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their business and for the purpose of inducing the sale of their furniture, respondents have maintained, and are now maintaining, in their salesrooms, floor models and displays of furniture being offered for sale, on the basis of which their customers select and order the furniture they purchase from respondents.

In this connection, respondents and their sales representatives have made, and are now making, numerous oral statements and representations to customers and prospective customers regarding the quality and durability of the furniture being offered for sale, the terms and conditions under which merchandise will be sold and delivered, and the services that will be provided by respondents.

Moreover, subsequent to making sales and deliveries, respondents and their employees have made, and are now making, numerous oral statements, representations and promises to their customers regarding the time and manner in which respondents will perform various adjustments, replacements and/or repairs.

PAR. 10. By and through the use of the floor models and furniture displays, together with the aforesaid oral statements, representations and promises made by respondents, their sales representatives and other employees, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. Furniture sold by respondents will be delivered to the customer free from damages and defects.

2. Furniture which is delivered to purchasers with damages and/or defects will be repaired or replaced within a reasonable time.

3. Furniture which is delivered with damages and/or defects will be repaired or replaced to the satisfaction of the purchasers.

4. Furniture which is delivered to purchasers with damages and/or defects will be repaired or replaced in accordance with promises made to the purchasers by respondents.

PAR. 11. In truth and in fact:

1. In many instances, furniture sold by respondents is delivered to purchasers with damages and/or defects.

2. In many instances, furniture which is delivered to purchasers with damages and/or defects is not repaired or replaced within a reasonable time.

3. In many instances, furniture which is delivered to purchasers with damages and/or defects is not repaired or replaced to the satisfaction of the purchasers.

4. In many instances, furniture which is delivered to purchasers with damages and/or defects is not repaired or replaced in accordance with promises made to the purchasers by respondents' employees.

Therefore, the aforesaid acts, practices, statements and representations regarding respondents' merchandise and services as set forth in Paragraphs Nine and Ten were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 12. In the further course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and in connection with the representations set forth in Paragraphs, Four, Five, Seven, Nine and Ten above, respondents in offering their furniture for sale have failed to disclose material facts relating to the veneered construction or to the use of plastics with simulated wood appearance in the manufacture of their merchandise.

The aforesaid failure to disclose such material facts to purchasers has the tendency and capacity to mislead or deceive such persons with respect to the utility, construction, composition, durability, design and grade of household furniture sold by respondents.

Therefore, respondents' failure to disclose such material facts was, and is, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 13. In the further course and conduct of their business, and in furtherance of a sales program for inducing the purchase of their furniture and appliances, respondents' salesmen or representatives have in many instances engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices:

1. They have obtained purchasers' signatures on blank retail installment contracts and other instruments by making false and misleading representations and deceptive statements, including false and deceptive representations with respect to the nature and effect thereof, to induce purchasers to sign such instruments.

2. Through the use of false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices set forth in Paragraphs Four through Twelve above, respondents or their representatives have been able to induce their customers into signing a contract upon initial contact without giving the customers sufficient time to carefully consider the purchase and consequence thereof.

3. They have failed to disclose certain material facts to purchasers, including but not limited to the fact that, at respondents' option, conditional sales contracts, promissory notes or other instruments of indebtedness executed by such purchasers in connection with their credit purchase agreements may be discounted, negotiated or assigned to a finance company or other third party to whom the purchaser is thereafter indebted and against whom defenses may not be available.

Therefore, the acts and practices, as set forth in Paragraph Thirteen hereof, were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 14. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and are, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of merchandise of the same general kind and nature as that sold by respondents.

PAR. 15. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, and acts and practices, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 16. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 17. In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, respondents are engaging, and for some time last past have engaged, in the collection of debts allegedly due and owing to Main Street Furniture, Inc. pursuant to contracts or other agreements relating to the purchase of respondents' merchandise.

PAR. 18. In attempting to induce payments of purportedly due or delinquent accounts, respondents and their representatives or agents have sent through the United States mail dunning letters, notices and similar instruments which contain false and misleading statements and representations.

Typical, but not all inclusive of such statements and representations are the following:

SUMMONS

PAR. 19. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not specifically set forth herein, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. Respondents have referred, are referring, or will refer delinquent accounts to attorneys.
2. Failure to pay the amount claimed as owing within a stated period of time will result in immediate legal action.
3. Failure to pay the amount claimed as owing within a period of time will result in attachment and garnishment proceedings against the property and wages of the debtor.
4. Failure to pay the amount claimed as owing after notice of intent to repossess will result in the repossession of the merchandise.
5. Once judgment is entered against a debtor, it is impossible for the debtor to avoid payment thereof.
6. Respondents' organization has or maintains a separate legal department with qualified employees serving in this department.
7. Some forms used by respondents imply in form and content they are official documents duly issued or approved by a court of law or other government agency.

PAR. 20. In truth and in fact:

1. Failure of an alleged debtor to remit money to respondents within time period(s) indicated does not in most instances result in the immediate reference of such matters to attorneys.
2. Failure of an alleged debtor to remit money to respondents within time period(s) indicated does not in most instances result in the immediate institution of legal action to effect payment.
3. Failure of an alleged debtor to remit money to respondents within time period(s) indicated does not in most instances result in the immediate institution of attachment or garnishment proceedings to effect payment.
4. Failure to pay the amount claimed as owing after notice of intent to repossess, will not result in the repossession of the merchandise.
5. It is possible to avoid payment of a judgment, once such is entered, in a matter involving a debt. For instance, resort to bankruptcy proceedings will often avoid the payment of at least part of a judgment. Also, the restrictions and exemptions placed on the collection of judgments make it possible in some instances to avoid the payment of at least part of a judgment.

6. Respondents do not have a separate legal department with qualified employees serving in this department.

7. Forms used by respondents are not official documents issued or approved by a court of law or other government agency, but on the contrary are wholly private in origin.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Nineteen and Twenty hereof were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 21. In the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid, and in connection with the collection of debts arising from retail installment sales, respondents through their employees engage in fraudulent and unconscionable conduct in the repossession of furniture and appliances from delinquent accounts and in so doing, have represented directly or by implication, that:

1. The person making the repossession was a court constable who was acting in his official capacity and pursuant to lawful authority.

2. The repossession was being accomplished pursuant to a court order that was lawfully obtained from the local court in the area.

3. The document shown to the delinquent account at the time of the repossession was an official court order.

PAR. 22. In truth and in fact:

1. The person making the repossession was not a court constable that was acting in his official capacity and pursuant to lawful authority. To the contrary, the person making the repossession was merely a collection employee of respondents.

2. The repossession was not being accomplished pursuant to a court order that was lawfully obtained from the local court in the area.

3. The document shown to the delinquent account at the time of the repossession was not an official court order but was a simulated legal document that was made up by respondents for collection purposes.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Twenty-One and Twenty-Two hereof were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 23. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and to induce recipients thereof into the payment of alleged delinquent accounts by reason of the said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 24. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents as herein alleged were, and are, all to the prejudice and injury of the public and respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT III

Alleging violations of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count III as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 25. In the ordinary course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, respondents regularly extend, and for some time last past have regularly extended consumer credit, as "consumer credit" is defined in Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 26. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, in the ordinary course of business as aforesaid, and in connection with their credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Regulation Z, respondents have caused and are causing customers to execute a binding "Retail Installment Contract" hereinafter referred to as the "Installment Contract." Respondents do not provide these customers with any other credit cost disclosures.

By and through the use of the installment contracts, respondents:

1. Induced certain customers to sign installment contracts in blank form. Respondents have subsequently filled in the blank spaces and frequently failed to give those customers a completed copy, thereby failing to furnish those customers any cost or credit disclosures prior to the consummation of the contract as required by Section 226.8(a) of Regulation Z in the manner and form prescribed by Section 226.8(b) and (c) of Regulation Z.

2. Failed to meet the requirements of Section 226.8(b)(7) of Regulation Z as the contract provides for the right of payment of the full amount due and "under certain conditions" to obtain a partial refund of the finance charge, without further disclosing the "certain conditions" under which prepayment could be made and a partial refund of the finance charge be obtained.

3. Failed to accurately disclose the date on which the finance charge begins to accrue as prescribed by Section 226.8(b)(1) of Regulation Z.

4. Failed to accurately state the "annual percentage rate," as prescribed by Section 226.8(b)(2) of Regulation Z.

5. Failed to disclose the total of payments as prescribed by Section 226.8(b)(3) of Regulation Z.

6. Failed to accurately disclose the number, amount and due dates, or periods of payments, scheduled to repay the indebtedness, as prescribed by Section 226.8(b)(3) of Regulation Z.

7. Failed to state the "unpaid balance of cash price," as prescribed by Section 226.8(c)(3) of Regulation Z.

8. Failed to disclose the amount financed, as required by Section 226.8(c)(7) of Regulation Z.

9. Failed to disclose the "deferred payment price," as prescribed by Section 226.8(c)(8)(ii) of Regulation Z.

10. Failed to include in the finance charge, charges or premiums for fire risk of loss insurance, written in connection with credit transactions when the customer was not given a clear, conspicuous, and specific written statement setting forth the cost of the insurance if obtained from or through respondents and stating that the customer may choose the person through which the insurance is to be obtained as prescribed by Section 226.4(a)(6) of Regulation Z.

11. Failed to include in the finance charge, charges or premiums for credit life, accident, health or loss of income insurance, written in connection with credit transactions when the customer has not given a specific dated and separately signed affirmative written indication of his desire for such coverage as prescribed by Section 226.4(a)(5)(ii) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 27. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failures to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z constituted violations of that Act and, pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondents have thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Chicago Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration, and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Acts, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted and executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Main Street Furniture, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its office and principal place of business located at 50510 U.S. 31 No., South Bend, Ind.

Respondents Samuel Goldstein, Raymond Goldstein and Chester E. Brost are officers of said corporation. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and their principal office and place of business is located at the above stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER I

It is ordered, That respondents Main Street Furniture, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Samuel Goldstein, Raymond Goldstein and Chester E. Brost, individually and as officers of said corporation, and respondents' representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or any other device in connection with the purchasing, advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of furniture and appliances, or any other products, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using, in any manner, a sales plan, scheme, or device wherein false, misleading, or deceptive statements or representations are made in order to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of merchandise.

2. Making representations, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, purporting to offer merchandise or services for sale when the purpose of the representation is not to sell the offered merchandise or services but to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of other merchandise or services at higher prices.

3. Discouraging in any manner the purchase of any merchandise or services which are advertised or offered for sale.

4. Failing to maintain and produce for inspection and copying for a period of three years adequate records to document for the entire period during which each advertisement was run and for a period of six weeks after the termination of its publication in press or broadcast media:

a. the cost of publishing each advertisement including the preparation and dissemination thereof;

b. the volume of sales made of the advertised product or service at the advertised price; and

c. a computation of the net profit from the sales of each advertised product or service at the advertised price.

5. Using the words "Sale," "Savings Fantastic," "Spectacular Values," or any other words of similar import or meaning not set forth specifically herein, unless the immediately preceding price at which bona fide sales have been made of the merchandise being offered for sale is disclosed or can be readily ascertained by disclosure of the stated dollar or percentage price and the price of said merchandise constitutes a recent reduction, in an amount not so insignificant as to be meaningless, from the immediately preceding price or unless a disclosure is made that such merchandise was offered for sale at the immediately preceding price in the recent regular course of respondents' business, and that no sales were made at that price or at any other price in the recent past.

6. (a) Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that by purchasing any of respondents' merchandise, customers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and respondents' former price unless the former price is respondents' immediately preceding price for the advertised merchandise and bona fide sales have been made by respondents at that price in the recent past or unless a disclosure is made that said merchandise was offered for sale at the former price for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent regular course of respondents' business and that no sales were made at that price or at any other price in the recent past.

(b) Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing that by purchasing any of respondents' merchandise, customers are afforded savings between respondents' stated price and a compared price for said merchandise in respondents' trade area unless respondents' merchandise and the nature of the compared price are explicitly identified in advertising and at the point of sale through the use of shelf tags or similar means and a substantial number of the principal retail outlets in the trade area regularly sell such merchandise at the compared price or some higher price in the regular course of their business.

(c) Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that by purchasing any of respondents' merchandise, customers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and a compared value price for comparable merchandise unless the compared value price is explicitly identified in advertising and at the point of sale through the use of shelf tags or similar means and respondents have in good faith conducted a market survey or obtained a similar representative sample of prices for comparable merchandise of like grade and quality in their trade area to establish that a substantial number of the principal retail outlets in the trade area regularly sell comparable merchandise of like grade and quality at the compared value price in the regular course of their business.

7. Failing to maintain and produce for inspection or copying, for a period of three years, adequate records (a) which disclose the facts upon which any savings claims, sale claims and other similar representations as set forth in Paragraphs Five and Six of this order are based, and (b) from which the validity of any savings claims, sale claims and similar representations can be determined.

8. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that respondents have "HUNDREDS" or any other given number of furniture suites in stock unless respondents have the stated number of furniture suites available for immediate sale and delivery; or misrepresenting in any manner the colors, style, kind or quantity of furniture in stock and available for sale or delivery.

9. Failing to make full disclosure either in its advertising or at the time of sale and prior to consummation of the sale that in addition to the price quoted in respondents' advertising, certain other charges, as applicable, are made, such as, delivery, set up or assembly, service, and warranty charges.

10. Failing to disclose clearly and conspicuously within each advertisement for an advertised product each reservation, if any, as to suitability or durability of such advertised product for normal usage by the customers who may buy such product or service.

11. Representing, directly or indirectly, that any of respondents' products are guaranteed unless the nature and extent of the guarantee, the identity of the guarantor, and the manner in which the guarantor will perform thereunder are clearly and conspicuously disclosed; and unless respondents promptly and fully perform all of their obligations and requirements, directly or impliedly represented, under the terms of each such guarantee.

12. Representing, directly or by implication, that any of respondents' offers to sell merchandise are limited as to time or restricted or limited in any other manner, unless such represented limitations or restrictions are actually in force and in good faith adhered to.

13. Using the terms "Italian," "French" or "Spanish," or any other unqualified terms of similar import or meaning not set forth specifically herein, orally or in writing, to describe respondents' furniture when such furniture is of domestic origin, unless a clear and conspicuous disclosure is made in advertising and on the furniture that such furniture was manufactured in the United States by means of such statements as "Made in U.S.A." or "manufactured by" followed by the name and address of the domestic manufacturer.

14. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that purchasers of respondents' merchandise are granted easy or assured credit terms, by respondents; or misrepresenting in any manner, the amount, type, extent of any other facet of the credit terms respondents arrange or may arrange for their purchasers.

15. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that respondents' merchandise is "walnut finished," or using any other terms of comparable import or meaning not set forth specifically herein, to describe respondents' furniture, unless a clear and conspicuous disclosure is made in advertising and on the furniture that such terms are merely descriptive of the color and/or grain design or other simulated finish that is applied to the exposed surfaces of such furniture.

16. Using any wood names or any names that suggest wood, orally or in writing, to describe any materials simulating wood in respondents' furniture, unless a clear and conspicuous disclosure is made in advertising and on the furniture that such wood names are merely descriptive of the color and/or grain design or other simulated finish that is applied to the exposed surfaces of such furniture.

17. Using pictorial representations of two or more items of furniture in conjunction with a stated price when all of the furniture in the pictorial representations is not being offered at the stated price, unless a disclosure is made in immediate conjunction and with equal prominence that all of the illustrated furniture is not being offered at the stated price and that an additional charge is made for certain items that are clearly identified in the illustrations.

18. Offering merchandise for sale by means of any form of pictorial advertisement when such merchandise is not in stock and available in quantities sufficient to meet reasonably anticipated demands for sale to the public at or below the advertised price for the period in which the prices are advertised to be effective.

19. Failing to inform, orally, all customers at the time of sale and provide in writing on the face of all order forms, sales contracts and invoices executed by customers, with such conspicuousness and clarity as is likely to be read and understood, that the customer has the right and option to cancel the contract and obtain a refund of all monies, by notifying respondents, in writing, within ten (10) days from the date of actual delivery of the merchandise, where furniture and/or appliances are delivered in a defective or damaged condition; Provided, however, That the provisions of Paragraphs 19 and 20 of the order shall not apply to merchandise sold "as is," conspicuously designated as such on order forms, sales contracts and invoices executed by the customers who have knowledge of damage to, or defects in, particular merchandise and have given written consent to purchasing same in its stated condition.

20. Failing to refund immediately all monies to customers who have requested contract cancellation in writing within ten (10) days from the date of actual delivery of defective or damaged merchandise; Provided, however, That, in lieu of making such a refund, respondents may, with the written consent of, and with no additional cost to the customer replace or repair defective or damaged merchandise, such replacement or repair to be fully, satisfactorily and promptly performed, in accordance with Paragraph 21 of this order I. In such a case, the customer who consents to accept replacement or repair in lieu of a refund, may cancel the contract with a refund of all monies by notification to respondents in writing within ten (10) days from the date of actual delivery or redelivery of any replacement or repaired merchandise that is itself defective or damaged.

21. Failing to make all refunds or to obtain the voluntary written consent of the customer for replacement or repair, as provided for in this order, within one (1) week of the receipt of the customer's request for cancellation; or to complete all repairs, pursuant to a written consent for repairs, within two (2) weeks from the date of such written consent, or to make full replacements, pursuant to a written consent for replacement, within thirty (30) days from the date of such written consent. In all other instances, where a customer has requested repairs or replacements, orally or in writing, within ten days following the delivery of defective, damaged or nonconforming merchandise, respondents shall investigate such complaints forthwith and complete repairs within three (3) weeks and replacements within forty (40) days of the receipt of such request.

22. Failing to notify the customer, orally and in writing, and at least five (5) business days prior to the scheduled completion date, that respondents are unable to complete repairs or replacement within the time specified by this order and to cancel the contract with a full refund of all monies to the customer within one week, or in lieu thereof and at the option of the customer, to obtain the customer's voluntary written consent for an extension of the date set for completion, setting forth a date certain for completion, which shall be a date by which respondents actually expect to complete performance.

23. Failing to make a clear and conspicuous disclosure on furniture, or on a tag or label prominently attached thereto, that veneers, plastics or other materials having the appearance of wood, leather, slate or marble have been used in the manufacture of such merchandise; or failing to make a clear and conspicuous disclosure of any material facts relating to the true composition of furniture where materials or products that simulate other materials or products are used in the manufacture of such furniture.

25. Inducing or causing purchasers or prospective purchasers of respondents' products, installations or services to sign blank or partially filled in completion certificates or other legal instruments or documents; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the true nature or effect of such legal instruments or documents.

Interpretation of language contained in an order to file special report regarding purchases of used bakery equipment. (Docket 7880, released July 18, 1975)

Opinion Letter

ITT Continental Baking Company, Inc.,

Re:ITT Continental Baking Company,
Docket No. 7880.

Dear Mr. Thomas:

In your letter of May 15, 1975, you requested the Commission's opinion as to whether the order entered on November 26, 1974 [84 F.T.C. 1349], requires ITT Continental Baking Company to file a special report informing the Commission of any purchase of used bakery equipment from any concern currently engaged in the production and sale of bread and bread type rolls.

After careful consideration of your request and the purpose of the order, the Commission is of the opinion that acquisition of used bakery equipment of whatever kind from another bakery is the acquisition of an "interest in any concern" engaged in the production and sale of bread and bread type rolls requiring ITT Continental Baking Company to file a special report.

By direction of the Commission.

Re: Docket No. 7880

Dear Mr. Tobin:

On November 26, 1974 the Federal Trade Commission issued an order in connection with the above docket number which required this company to file with the Commission a special report in the event it intends to make "any acquisitions of any interest in any concern engaged in the production and sale of bread and bread-type rolls." The words of special import in this order are "interest in any concern." It is our interpretation of that language that it is not intended to cover the purchase by Continental of items of used bakery equipment from another baking company currently engaged in the production and sale of bread.

Inasmuch as this company from time to time will be interested in making used bakery equipment purchases, we would appreciate an acknowledgment from you that our interpretation of the order is correct and that the filing of a special report is not required in that type of a transaction.

We will look forward to hearing from your office in the near future.

Very truly yours,

Gordon A. Thomas
Vice President and General Counsel

Letter of Reply

October 8, 1975

Honorable Albert Rees
Director
Council on Wage and Price Stability
Executive Office of the President
Washington, D.C. 20506

Dear Director Rees:

This is in reply to your letter of April 1, 1975 relating to the Commission's recent clarification, in a letter to Consumers Union of March 19, 1975, of the legality under Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act of backhaul allowances.

Your letter suggests that the Commission's clarification will discourage backhaul practices. It was the Commission's intention in the March 19 statement to eliminate confusion over the options available to the delivered price seller. It emphasized that the seller who uses a uniform delivered price can, in addition to the delivered price, offer his customers the option of purchasing f.o.b. his shipping point as long as the optional f.o.b. price is uniform and available to all customers on a nondiscriminatory basis. The Commission sees no reason why this clarification of the available options should discourage backhaul practices.

You further recommend that the Commission should adopt a policy of allowing backhaul allowances equal to the actual cost of transportation to each customer. Such a policy, your letter urges, can be based on the premise that the Robinson-Patman Act does not mandate uniformity as to f.o.b. prices, because that Act permits a seller to offer different prices where justified by different costs.

However, those differences in cost under the Robinson-Patman Act that justify price differentials are limited "* * * strictly to those actual differences traceable to the particular buyer for and against whom the discrimination is granted, to the different methods of serving them, and to the different quantities in which they buy." House Committee Report No. 2287, March 31, 1936. The cost justification provision, accordingly, was designed "* * * to leave the test of a permissible differential upon the question: If the more favored customer were sold in the same quantities and by the same methods of sale and delivery as the customer not so favored, how much more per unit would it actually cost the seller to do so, his other business remaining the same?" Senate Committee Report No. 1502, February 3, 1936. "There can be no doubt," the Supreme Court has stated, "that the § 2(a) proviso as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act contemplates, both in express wording and legislative history, a showing of actual cost differences resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which the commodities in question are sold or delivered." United States v. Borden Co., 370 U.S. 460, 467 (1962).

It follows, therefore, as the Commission understands these requirements, that the Robinson-Patman Act's Section 2(a) cost proviso cannot be interpreted so as to cost justify price differentials between backhaul customers purchasing f.o.b. at the seller's shipping point, if those price differentials represent only the absence of delivery cost differentials that would have been incurred had the commodities in question in fact been transported to different delivery destinations and, in that contingency, would have occasioned differing cost obligations upon the seller.

To state the matter in another way, if different backhaul customers purchase identical goods in identical quantities and according to exactly the same method of sale and delivery (i.e. by pick-up in their own trucks at the seller's shipping point) then, as the Commission see it, no cost differences to the seller, as contemplated under the cost justification provision of Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, obtain. In particular, in such transactions, because no transportation of goods by the seller to affect delivery occurs, no delivery cost differentials arise such as would justify differences with respect to the f.o.b. price. Accordingly, f.o.b. price differences, in these circumstances, would not be cost justified under Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act in the Commission's view.

As the Commission heretofore has indicated, questions would not arise under the laws it administers if sellers using valid uniform zone delivered pricing systems offer to all customers, in lieu of a uniform delivered price, the option of purchasing f.o.b. the seller's shipping point, if that optional f.o.b. price is uniform and available to all customers on a nondiscriminatory basis.

The Commission does not understand that economies would not consistently be realized, through backhauling, by customers with empty trucks returning via their suppliers' factory and/or warehouse shipping points, if those suppliers make uniformly available a nondiscriminatory shipping-point price option. You suggest, in this regard, that geographically distant customers would not be able to afford to make use of such an option if the f.o.b. price is no lower than the seller's uniform zone-delivered price minus his average transportation cost for that zone. However, it appears to us that the only significant costs to the customers of backhauling in this situation are the additional wages, if any, required to be paid to the driver of the backhauling truck for the added time required to accomplish the pickup and the additional fuel cost incurred in traveling full rather than empty. Insofar as these costs were less than the difference between the supplier's delivered price and his f.o.b. price, the customer would be realizing a saving. This would be apart from any general or public economies such as a reduction in overall fuel requirements.

The Commission has carefully considered the views that you have expressed and sincerely appreciates your concern in this matter. As indicated, however, the Commission is unable to construe the cost justification proviso of Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act as justifying differing backhaul allowances on the basis of hypothetical, and not actual, delivery cost differences. While the Commission would be happy to take action which would result in the additional reduction of fuel and other costs, it is not empowered to do so except as such may be incident to the proper exercise of its statutory responsibilities and consequently it can encourage backhauling only so far as it is consistent with the Commission's interpretation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

By direction of the Commission.

Dear Mr. Tobin:

I have enclosed copies of letters sent today to the members of the Commission by the Director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability. These letters are in response to the Commission's March 19, 1975 letter, about "backhaul" allowances, to the Consumers Union.

Please include these letters in the appropriate public docket at the Commission.

Dear Commissioner ————:

I am writing to express my concern about the Federal Trade Commission's clarification, in a letter to the Consumers' Union issued on March 19, 1975, and publicly released on March 28, of the legality under Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act of backhaul allowances offered by a seller, who otherwise offers a uniform zone-delivered price, to customers who provide their own transportation for goods purchased at the seller's warehouse. In my view, it is important that the Commission develop a clear policy to encourage backhaul practices, in order to alleviate the fuel waste and other costs that result from unused backhaul capacity. However, the Commission's March 19 clarification is not such a policy, and may indeed further discourage backhaul.

The March 19 letter requires that the f.o.b. price offered to all backhauling customers be "uniform"—that is, be the same dollar amount in each case. It does not permit a seller to offer backhaul allowances that vary in accordance with the cost of transportation to each customer. This requirement of uniformity places a substantial restraint upon the development of backhauling—a restraint not mandated by the Robinson-Patman Act, which permits a seller to offer different prices where justified by different costs.

Under the Commission's March 19 letter, the uniform f.o.b. price offered to customers who backhaul is not likely to be lower than the seller's uniform zone-delivered price minus his average transportation cost for that zone. Sellers, at least those with substantial dominance in their product markets, cannot be expected to offer a uniform allowance in excess of their average costs. This allowance, however, will only permit backhauling by customers who can provide their own transportation at less than or equal to the seller's average cost. Customers far away enough to incur greater transportation costs will not be able to afford to make use of their empty backhaul capacity. In my view, this status will persist over time.

Backhauling by a seller's more distant customers can most simply be encouraged by a seller's offer of an allowance that is equal to his actual cost of transportation to any particular customer. With such an allowance, any customer who can ship as efficiently as the seller would be encouraged to use his empty truck capacity to do so. While different customers would be paying different prices for the same goods, the difference would only reflect differences in the seller's actual transportation costs to those customers.

While Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act generally prohibits price differentials for a single product, it expressly permits "differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery * * *." This language can certainly be interpreted to refer to such price differentials as would result from a backhaul allowance measured by actual transportation costs. Additional discriminations may be inherent in the uniform zone-delivered price from which such a backhaul allowance would be deducted. However, that fact makes it no less true that the price differentials resulting from an actual cost allowance would be justified by the differences in the seller's transportation costs to different customers.

Uncertainty about the legality of actual-cost backhaul allowances has significantly impeded the negotiation of backhaul agreements. The Commission's disapproval of actual cost allowances in its March 19 letter will of course further discourage backhaul practices by customers far enough away from a supplier to exceed his average transportation costs. The encouragement of backhaul, on the other hand, would not only save fuel and other costs as noted above, but would also increase competition among suppliers and customers with respect to the transportation of purchased goods. I therefore recommend that the Commission issue a statement that Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act permits actual cost backhaul allowances.

Sincerely,

/S/ Albert Rees

Re: Advisory Opinion Request of Hercules Incorporated and Koppers Company, Incorporated, File No. 753 7007

Dear Mr. Bodner:

This is in response to your letter of February 11, 1975 requesting an advisory opinion concerning a proposed joint venture between Hercules, Incorporated and Koppers Company, Inc. for the production and marketing of cresols, cresol derivatives and certain other related products. You have requested that the Commission approve the venture as consonant with the laws it administers.

The Commission has given careful consideration to your request and the supplemental data provided. On the basis of the information presently available to it, the Commission has concluded that it is unable to approve the joint venture.

Based upon information presently available, the Commission is seriously concerned that a consequence of the joint venture, if consummated, may be substantially to lessen competition in particular, already concentrated, product markets. In the Commission's opinion, substantial anticompetitive effects in such markets may result because the venture, on the one hand, would appear to position an existing major factor in such markets, Koppers, to gain significant further market shares, entrench and solidify its market position and to obtain monopolistic market control, while on the other, the venture would appear to operate substantially to lessen potential competition by eliminating an apparent strong potential competitor, Hercules, from independent entry, or from entry in conjunction with a partner not already significantly present in any of the affected markets.

Acquisitions are proscribed where their effect may be substantially to lessen competition in any line of commerce in any section of the country, 15 U.S.C. §18; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964). The elimination of a potential entrant may substantially lessen competition in violation of the Act. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., Supra.

A number of facts lead us tentatively to conclude, based on the information presently available to us, that Hercules is a potential entrant into cresol production generally, and BHT and meta-para cresol production in particular, two markets in which Koppers already has substantial market shares. Not only was Hercules present in the BHT and paracresol markets during the period 1958 to 1972, but the firm appears to possess the technical expertise required for cresol production. Its technical know-how has, from time to time, been offered under license to others. Furthermore, it is clear from your submission that Hercules possesses a new and apparently commercially valuable production process for cresols. The firm has a continuing internal need for one of the venture products, BHT, and has available an idle plant which can be readily converted to cresol production. The firm's financial resources; interest in investment; investment history; and the market opportunity in cresols, apparent from supply and anticipated demand profiles, are also factors indicating that Hercules stands as a viable independent potential entrant. Hercules, additionally, does not appear to us to be foreclosed from entry because of a lack of any necessary capabilities or skills.

At the same time, Hercules' venture partner, Koppers, is a substantial producer of meta-para cresol in a domestic market of only five producers and the leading domestic producer of BHT with approximately a 33 percent market share in a four producer market. In both of these markets, Hercules appears as a likely potential entrant. The venture accordingly presents serious issues under Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

You have stated that initially the venture will not market any meta-para cresol other than that presently produced by Koppers. However, regardless of whether the venture chooses initially to market such meta-para cresol, the venture would appear to have the effect of increasing Kopper's market power as to meta-para cresol, and would appear to provide Koppers, already a substantial producer, with an opportunity substantially to increase its share of that market any time the venture chooses to do so.

Koppers is the sole domestic producer of MBMC. Joining with Hercules in continued MBMC production and in the production of raw materials for MBMC will be likely to solidfy Koppers' position in this market. Because Koppers has a monopoly in MBMC, the proposed venture would appear to raise questions under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

A joint venture or merger may substantially lessen competition both in eliminating a potential entrant and by entrenching the position of a firm in an oligopolistic market. Federal Trade Commission v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967); General Foods Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 386 F.2d 936 (3rd Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 391 U.S. 919 (1968). The substitution of a larger more powerful competitor for a smaller already dominant firm may reduce a competitive structure by raising entry barriers and by dissuading smaller firms from aggressively competing. Federal Trade Commission v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra.

The presence of Hercules-Koppers in the relevant markets, substituted for Koppers alone, may entrench the position of Koppers, rigidifying present oligopolistic structures and raising barriers, both actual and psychological, to entry by others. Koppers' position in the already concentrated BHT and MBMC markets would solidified by vertical integration into raw materials. Firms considering entry would face the combined strength and resources of two major firms instead of Koppers alone. Accordingly, competition could be substantially lessened within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act not only by the elimination of Hercules as a potential entrant, but also by the entrenchment of Koppers in the BHT, meta-para cresol and MBMC markets.

The competitive consequences outlined in this letter are not conclusive. Nonetheless, based upon the information presently available to the Commission, we are unable to approve the proposed joint venture; accordingly the Commission advises that it will undertake a formal investigation if Hercules, Incorporated and Koppers Company, Inc. enter into said joint venture.

By the direction of the Commission.

*Letter of Request

February 11, 1975

Dear Mr. Tobin:

Re: Hercules Incorporated-Koppers Company, Inc.'s Proposed Jointly-Owned Company To Produce Cresols and Cresol Derivatives

This is a request by Hercules Incorporated and Koppers Company, Inc. to the Commission for an Advisory Opinion under Section 1.1 et seq. of the Commission's Rules that the creation and operation of a proposed jointly-owned company by the requesting parties to produce and market cresols and cresol derivatives is permissible under the antitrust laws of the United States.

In support of this request, Hercules and Koppers submit the enclosed memorandum showing that the proposed joint venture for the specialty chemicals involved will benefit both competition and the public interest. The memorandum describes the parties and the chemical products involved, sets forth the nature and basic terms of the joint venture, and then discusses the probable effects on competition of the joint venture.

As further pointed out in the memorandum, Hercules and Koppers must decide very soon whether they will consummate the proposed joint venture, and for commercial reasons they wish to make that decision without giving advance notice. Accordingly, we ask that this request be handled with all possible dispatch and that all the information submitted to the Commission by the parties be accorded confidential treatment. If the Commission decides to release any of the submitted information, we request that we receive reasonable notice before the release date.

* For reasons of economy, the large volume of supporting materials is not reproduced in this volume. It is available for public inspection in the Division of Legal and Public Records, Room 130, Federal Trade Commission Building, Washington, D.C. 20580.

In order to expedite this matter, Hercules and Koppers on their part stand ready to discuss the memorandum with the staff of the Commission and, if necessary, to provide supplemental information.

We further wish to advise the Commission that the proposed course of action is not currently being followed by the requesting parties and is not the subject of a pending investigation or other proceeding by the Commission or any other governmental agency.

Warranties—Interpretation of obligation under a full warranty to provide installment or replacement materials in event of a defect in an "installed product." (File No. 763 7001, released December 1, 1975)

Opinion Letter

Dear Sir:

This is in response to your letters to the commissioners dated May 29, 1975 concerning the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act, Public Law 93-637. You request the Commission's opinion whether a "full (statement of duration) warranty" for what you term an "installed product" must include an obligation to provide installation of replacement materials in the event of a defect.

The Commission has carefully considered the matters set forth in your letter pertaining to the obligations required under a full warranty. The Commission has treated your letter as a request for an advisory opinion under §§ 1.1-1.4 of the Commission's rules, 16 C.F.R. §§ 1.1-1.4. Section 104 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. 2304, provides that a full warranty must, at a minimum, affirm or promise to "remedy" such product "without charge". Section 101(10), 15 U.S.C. 2301(10) defines the term remedy to include, at the warrantor's option, repair or replacement. Replacement is defined in § 101(11), 15 U.S.C. 2301(11), as "furnishing a new consumer product which is identical or reasonably equivalent to the warranted consumer product." Applying this definition to the case of flooring or other products having utility only when installed, the Commission is of the opinion that installation of substitute materials is within the Act's definition of replacement. Uninstalled materials cannot be deemed "identical or reasonably equivalent" to the installed product. Therefore, the consumer could not be charged for such installation.

It should be noted that a full warrantor could impose on the consumer a duty to remove, return, and reinstall a consumer product, if such duty met the test of reasonableness under § 104(b)(1), 15 U.S.C. 2304(b)(1). The duty would be on the warrantor to show that the cost and inconvenience to consumers of such a duty were outweighed by corresponding benefits to individuals or to the public. See "Implementation and Enforcement Policy" for the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act, 40 Fed. Reg. 25721, 25722 (June 18, 1975).

Dear ——————:

Re: Title I-P. L. 93-637 Consumer Product Warranties

Representatives of Armstrong Cork Company met with Christian S. White of the Commission's staff in mid-April for the purpose of discussing interpretative views of the warranty provisions of the Magnuson-Moss Warranty-Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act. For the most part, Armstrong agrees with Mr. White's interpretation of those provisions of the Act which were discussed. However, there was disagreement in interpretation in an area we consider significant in view of the nature of our business. Mr. White suggested our addressing that issue direct to the Commissioners through appropriate expression of our views. That issue is, whether the new legislation requires warrantors of consumer products which are intended to be installed in the home by an independent third party installer, to provide for removal of defective goods and the installation of replacement goods in order to extend a full warranty on the product.

Armstrong Cork Company, a Pennsylvania corporation, is engaged primarily in the manufacture of resilient flooring, carpeting, and residential and architectural ceilings. Most of the products Armstrong manufactures are intended to be installed in the home, and in public and commercial buildings. The installation of these products is performed by independent flooring, carpeting, and ceiling retailers, contractors, and in some instances, on a do-it-yourself basis. These "installers" are generally several steps removed from the manufacturing process. Most of the products sold by Armstrong, with the notable exception of ceiling systems, are complete in themselves, that is, they have no component parts. Before the consumer has what might be called an "installed product," ready for use, there are two undertakings: one for the product, the other for the installation of that product. In addition to labor, the installation of the product may include use of sundries, underlayment, etc. which may or may not be of Armstrong manufacture.

There are essentially four different situations involving defects in products installed in the home:

(1) A product has been improperly installed; for example, flooring material is ripped or gouged during installation—clearly, in this instance, the dealer whose mechanic was performing the installation must provide the necessary remedy.

(2) The dealer installs defective goods and the defect was apparent at the time of installation; for example, there is an apparent bubble or discoloration, and instead of properly procuring replacement material prior to installation, the mechanic installs the defective material. In those situations, clearly the dealer should provide the remedy to the consumer.

(3) A product defect may not be readily perceived, or is not discovered until after installation. When such a defect becomes apparent, it is Armstrong's policy to undertake either repair of those areas found defective or provide replacement goods. This undertaking is performed without any charge being assessed by Armstrong to the consumer. Currently, in the case of carpet and ceiling materials, and after a specified period in the instance of flooring materials, we do not provide compensation for the labor charges incidental to the removal of the defective goods or installation of the replacement goods. In regard to our carpet and ceiling materials, we follow general industry practice. In the case of our flooring materials, we currently provide a consumer warranty which we believe does more for the consumer than industry practice. Neither our carpet nor our ceiling materials currently carry a written consumer warranty.

(4) The consumer undertakes to perform the installation of a do-it-yourself product and save the costs incident to a professional installation. Product defect claims may arise from the consumer's failure to follow installation instructions, from non-recommended use, or from defective goods. If the manufacturer who fully warrants his product is required to professionally install replacement goods for the do-it-yourselfer, the consumer receives a better bargain than he initially paid for.

The underlying thread of the Act, as well as the legislative history, is to advise consumers, clearly and conspicuously, of written warranty terms, so that educated decisions can be made in the marketplace. The legislative intent is borne out by the statutory language in Section 102: "* * * to improve the adequacy of information available to consumers, prevent deception, and improve competition in the marketing of consumer products." House Report No. 93-1107 clearly indicates that "The purpose of the legislation is (1) to make warranties on consumer products more readily understood * * *." The legislators were attempting to avoid a situation where "the bold print giveth and the fine print taketh away." We do not read the Act as requiring the manufacturer to assume the costs of installation of replacement goods if he fully warrants only his product and makes it clear that the remedy is to provide replacement goods. The opposite reading would, we believe, result in an unintended substantive change in warranty law and practice for it would preclude a manufacturer from fully warranting its product with the remedy being product replacement and requires the manufacturer either to offer its product with a limited warranty or not provide any written warranty. Considering that installation and installation costs are not within the manufacturer's control and that such costs may approach or even exceed the product costs, it is likely that few manufacturers of installed products will, as a practical matter, be able to offer full warranties after July 3, 1975, at least to the degree theretofore.

Should the Commission not ultimately concur with our interpretation of the Act as expressed above, we believe that the Commission should consider establishing under Section 103(c) or perhaps Section 104(b)(3) a special category of warranty entitled "FULL (Statement of Duration) WARRANTY - INSTALLATION NOT INCLUDED." Such a category would permit exclusion by the manufacturer of the responsibility for removing the defective product and installing replacement material. Appropriately the consumer would then look to the local dealer—his seller and installer—for a warranty of installation attendant to a product defect. This is clearly the most efficient and least expensive way of handling the problem and properly places upon the installer not only the responsibility to carefully select from whom he purchases, but also avoids the too recurrent theme of the installer avoiding responsibilities by simply passing them along to a remote manufacturer.

The clear legislative purpose and intent under the Act's warranty provisions is to clearly and conspicuously advise the consumer of the terms of written warranties. If the consumer is so advised that purpose is fulfilled.

We would welcome the opportunity to further address ourselves to this matter should you or any of your associates so desire.

Very truly yours,

/S/ L. A. Pulkrabek

Compliance advisory opinion as to whether a proposed quantity discount, if implemented, would constitute compliance with the amended Clayton Act Subsection 2(a) Order (72 F.T.C. 412). (Docket No. 8599, released December 5, 1975)

Opinion Letter

Thomas E. Quay, Esquire
Secretary and Counsel
William H. Rorer, Inc.
Fort Washington, Pennsylvania 19034
Re: William H. Rorer, Inc., Docket No. 8599

Dear Mr. Quay:

This is in response to your request on behalf of William H. Rorer, Inc., for an advisory opinion concerning whether a proposed quantity discount, if implemented, would constitute compliance with the amended Clayton Act Subsection 2(a) Order in the above-captioned matter. According to your letter of March 13, 1975, and attachments thereto, Rorer proposes granting to all direct-buying retail customers a 3.5 percent discount from the list price of Maalox products with any purchase of $250 or more of Maalox products at net prices. Rorer bases the proposed discount on a showing of savings in its costs of delivery and sale.

According to your letter, Rorer currently employs a nationally uniform delivered pricing system in the sales of its products. The net price to direct-buying retail customers, according to the letter, is the suggested price from wholesaler to retailer less 15 percent. To maintain the direct account status, however, the retail customer must purchase in terms of net prices at least $125 of any Rorer products in each order and a total of $500 for an entire year. The letter adds that Rorer products are delivered to direct-buying retail customers by common carrier from warehouses in Fort Washington, Pennsylvania; Tucker, Georgia; Hammond, Indiana; and San Leandro, California.

The Commission understands that the proposed discount would amount to a 4.12 percent reduction in the net price of Maalox products to participating direct-buying retail customers. According to your letter, the discount would not be applicable to non-Maalox products. Finally, it is understood that the discount would be offered to all direct-buying retail customers.

To determine the savings in the cost of delivery, Rorer focuses on savings in the cost of shipping its products to customers located closest to its points of distribution. Sufficient savings to justify the discount to these customers would arise, according to Rorer, by shipping a typical order containing $250 worth of Maalox products instead of shipping two or more typical minimum $125 orders. Rorer reasons, relying on facts previously submitted, that if the discount is qualified to the near-by customers then it would be uniformly cost justified to all customers.

To determine the savings in the cost of sale, Rorer divides its total 1974 operating cost for processing orders by the total number of invoices written to find the average cost of processing an individual order. Rorer contends that by processing an order containing $250 worth of Maalox products rather than two more minimum $125 orders it would save the cost of processing at least one invoice.

The Commission after reviewing the materials submitted in support of the proposed discount hereby advises that, based on the cost justification submitted, the discount would not be uniformly cost justified and would therefore be violative of the above-captioned order. Several erroneous assumptions made in the cost study concerning the costs of delivery and sale require that the justification be rejected.

The cost justification is improperly based on a cost comparison which relies on the cost of handling a minimum $125 purchase without having established that this size order would be substantially representative of the class of all purchases not earning the discount. A cost justification must reflect the true cost of transacting business and the actual pattern of sales experienced.

The cost justification is in further error because it attempts to qualify the discount in part by savings in the cost of handling the order's undiscounted non-Maalox products. Since these non-Maalox products would not benefit from the proposed discount it is unacceptable to justify the discount with savings attributable to their cost of delivery or processing in the order. The only savings which can be properly considered in supporting a discount on Maalox products are those which would reflect due allowances for differences in the costs of shipping and processing orders for Maalox products in differing quantities.

Additionally, the cost justification erroneously assumes that the entire cost incurred in order processing can be the basis for establishing cost savings. Only that portion of the operating cost which varies with the size of orders processed is suitable for consideration in the cost justification. That portion of the cost which depends on the total volume of business transacted without regard to the size of orders on which that business is divided would not be relevant to a cost justification * * *.

By direction of the Commission.

Re: New Request for Advisory Opinion Pursuant to FTC Rule 3.61(d); Ref. Docket No. 8599

Dear Sir:

1. As general counsel, I hereby request, on behalf of William H. Rorer, Inc., an advisory opinion pursuant to FTC rule 3.61(d) as to whether the proposed quantity discount, if implemented, would be in compliance with the Commission's Order, as modified, August 21, 1967, 32 Federal Register 12844, Docket No. 8599. As modified, the Order's application was limited to competing retail customers.

2. We also understand that the Order, as modified, does not require us to seek this advisory opinion from the Commission prior to instituting a quantity discount compatible with the terms of the Order. Nevertheless, Rorer voluntarily elects to seek the Commission's opinion in advance.

3. Rorer proposes to offer only to its retail customers a quantity discount of three and one-half percent (3-1/2%) from the list price on each single order of $250 (net) or more of its leading antacid product, Maalox (suspension or tablets). There is adequate transportation cost justification for this discount as set forth in the attached schedules (see Index of Schedules). Rorer makes prepaid shipments from four locations: Fort Washington, Pennsylvania; Tucker, Georgia; Hammond, Indiana; and San Leandro, California.

4. Rorer's "list price" is our suggested price from wholesaler to retailer. (see General Price List, Schedule F.) Our price to wholesalers reflects a 20% discount from that "list price;" to retailers who buy on a direct basis, our price reflects a 15% discount. Our proposed 3-1/2% quantity discount to retailers only, on Maalox products only, would provide a direct retail discount of 18-1/2% from the list price. The non-Maalox portion of the order will continue to bear a 15% discount. Rorer additionally offers retailers a 2% discount for prompt payment.

5. Effective January 1, 1975, a retailer, in order to maintain his direct account status, must purchase $500 (net) worth of Rorer products annually. Each order must be for $125 (net) or more of our products.

6. Previous studies of transportation savings made and discussed with a representative of the Bureau of Competition of the FTC have revealed that there are three examples that show a minimum savings: from our Tucker, Georgia, branch warehouse to Atlanta, Georgia; from our San Leandro branch warehouse to Oakland, California; and from the San Leandro location to Los Angeles, California. Therefore, we have computed transportation savings on the basis of typical orders shipped from our Tucker and San Leandro branches to those locations.

7. Although transportation savings more than justify the proposed 3-1/2% quantity discount, we also assert a cost justification based upon administrative savings to be gained (Schedule E(a) and (b)). It is our contention that the proposed 3-1/2% discount is also justified entirely by this analysis alone.

8. Based upon experience during the last six months of 1974, we know that more than 50% of orders shipped to direct buying retailers contained $200 (net) or more worth of Maalox products. It is our firm conviction that under our new terms and prices in effect since January 1, 1975, the 50% figure will be valid for orders containing $250 (net) or more worth of Maalox products.

9. Enclosed in Schedule G are copies of four sets of published tariff schedules applicable to all four of our shipping points, although the examples cited refer only to our Tucker, Georgia and San Leandro, California branches. The tariff schedules are provided in order to facilitate the evaluation of our submission.

10. Schedules A through E, inclusive, contain calculations and data based on a "typical" order which is a competitive trade secret within the meaning of FTC Rule §4.10(a)(2). Therefore, Rorer expressly asserts a claim of confidentiality to Schedules A through E, inclusive. If the Commission renders a favorable advisory opinion, Rorer's implementation of the proposal would, of course, be in strict compliance with all the terms of the Order including prompt notification to the Commission and adequate and regular notice to all retail customers together with reasons and details of the discount.

Very truly yours,

/S/ Thomas E. Quay

Advertising and selling as "new," cars used for emission control tests (85 F.T.C. 1171). (File No. 753 7005, released January 7, 1976)

Opinion Letter

December 4, 1975

Mr. Richard H. Johnson
Acting Assistant Administrator for Enforcement
United States Environmental Protection Agency
Uashington, D.C. 20460

Re: Sale of Vehicles Used to Perform Emission Control Tests Required by the State of California

Dear Mr. Johnson:

This is in reply to your letter of May 12, 1975 requesting the Commission's opinion regarding the status "of those vehicles sold in the State of California which have been tested in accordance with the provisions of the California Air Resources Board (CARB) Assembly Line testing requirements." Your letter indicates that for the 1974 model year, CARB required automobile manufacturers to subject about 20,000 vehicles to an emission control test identical to the "standard Federal testing procedure." It is the Commission's understanding that this standard procedure is the same as that described in your prior letter of September 16, 1974. Your May 12th request further indicates that auto manufacturers also have the option under California law to accumulate any desired mileage on test vehicles prior to testing in order to stabilize emission performance. The question posed is whether vehicles used to accomplish the CARB tests may be advertised and sold as "new."

On March 7, 1975, the Commission responded to your prior request for advice dated September 16, 1974 by advising you that each manufacturer's emission testing could raise unique questions and that the Commission would therefore prefer to respond to individual requests from manufacturers on a case-by-case basis. Your letter of May 12th, including its references to CARB test vehicles, fails to include individualized testing data, and in any event is not from an individual manufacturer. The Commission requires an affected party to make its own advisory opinion request, 16 C.F.R. §1.1, and without the benefit of comprehensive submissions by the real parties in interest the Commission is unable to issue a definitive opinion in elaboration of the March 7th reply.

It has come to the Commission's attention, however, that the March 7th letter has been interpreted in some quarters to constitute a Commission determination that emission test vehicles cannot legally be sold as "new" under any circumstances. Such an interpretation is incorrect, and the Commission wishes to emphasize that its previous reply did not involve any determination that emission test vehicles may or must be sold as either "new" or "used".

By direction of the Commission. Commissioner Hanford dissented, believing that the issuance of an advisory opinion was appropriate under the circumstances.

Letter of Request

May 12, 1975

Dear Mr. Tobin:

On March 7, 1975, the Commission provided an opinion, in response to our request of September 16, 1974, on the right of automobile manufacturers to advertise and sell as "new" those test automobiles used to demonstrate compliance with air pollution control standards.

The opinion responded to the issue as to "whether manufacturers would have the right to advertise and sell any of these test vehicles as 'new' " by stating that the "Commission * * * cannot conclude, as a matter of law, that automobile manufacturers have the right to sell such test vehicles as 'new.' Each manufacturer's testing may raise unique questions. Therefore, the Commission would prefer to defer a more definitive opinion until it receives a request from an auto manufacturer."

In order for us to relate the general opinion to our pending rulemaking, we request your definitive opinion regarding the status of those vehicles sold in the State of California which have been tested in accordance with the provisions of the California Air Resources Board (CARB) Assembly Line testing requirements. In model year 1974, the CARB required that a statistical sample of approximately 20,000 production vehicles (2% of one million vehicles sold in California) be selected and tested by American and foreign manufacturers using the standard Federal testing procedure. The test itself results in the accumulation of approximately 15 miles per vehicle. The CARB procedures permit manufacturers, at their option, to accumulate any desired mileage on vehicles prior to testing to accommodate those particular manufacturers who claim that a new vehicle exhibits erratic emission performance during the first few miles of use until the engine and emission control system settle into more predictable modes. Manufacturers claim that new vehicles of some model lines require mileage accumulation prior to testing. Accordingly, based on CARB information, 20-40 miles are accumulated prior to testing which could result in a total accumulation of 55 miles or 70 miles in the event of a retest. The totals would be 58.2 and 76.4 for 1975 and later models because the FTP is extended for 3.2 miles. One foreign manufacturer accumulates 200 miles on a selected vehicle prior to testing for a total accumulation of 218.2 miles. We are requesting that you provide the Commission's opinion on the status as "new" or "used" of these test automobiles used to demonstrate compliance with air pollution control standards in California.

We would appreciate your response as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

/S/ Richard H. Johnson
